Go Ahead opened the envelope and read the letter. It seemed to afford him some cause for astonishment. He glanced at Green, then read the letter over again, word by word, from the beginning. It read as follows:

"Mr. G. A. Morton,
"Mortonville, Va.
"My Dear Sir:

"I never had the pleasure of meeting you, even in the old days, thirty years ago, while I lived not so very far from you in Virginia. There is no doubt, therefore, that my writing at this late day will astonish you. I can only hope that you will receive my letter with less reluctance than that with which I write it.

"Some fifteen years ago, while ranching in California, my next-door neighbor, Jim ——, and myself quarreled with the agents of the Southern Pacific railway and shot two of them. We shot in self-defense, but we couldn't prove it; and as the railway was all-powerful in those days we had to run.

"As you probably will remember, your cousin, Venable Morton, who had been farming in Missouri, left about that time for California by wagon, with his wife and three-year-old daughter. He came expecting to join me; and a letter from him, arriving on the very day of the shooting, said that he was about to set out across the Mohave desert.

"So Jim and I tried to meet him to arrange for him to look out for our ranches till it was safe for us to come back.

"We did meet him, but only in time to see him die. He'd lost his way in the desert. His wife was dead when we found him; and he didn't live long. Before he died he handed over his three-year-old daughter to me and begged me to send her to you. She was in pretty good shape; I guess the parents had gone without to save her.

"I promised to send her; but for a long time I couldn't. The railroad detectives kept too close on my heels. At last Jim left, swearing that he wouldn't lug a kid any farther. I kept her; I had gotten too fond of her by then to abandon her.

"That was fifteen years ago. Today—I blush to say it—I am head of a band of outlaws and the child is eighteen years old. She has been brought up in my household in the hiding place in the hills. Naturally her ideas are not those of the people to whom she rightly belongs; and her ways are not their ways. But she is good and sweet and true—and she is well educated and well trained in social customs. I love her very dearly, which explains why I kept her with me all these years.

"But now she is no longer a child. She is a woman—and I can no longer protect her.

"Jim, he who fled from California with me, has been in touch with me for some years. He now suddenly wants to marry Stella. But he is older even than I am—and Stella hates him. So I said No; and relations are strained. Jim is very powerful, both inside and outside my band; and he is conspiring to overthrow me and put another man in my place who will turn Stella over to him. They may strike any day.

"But I am trying to stave off a break till you can come or send for the girl. I cannot bring her myself. We are watched, and the moment we disappeared Jim would set the police on our track. Some one must come for her who is not under ban of the law.

"I have forced my confidence on you; and you must deal with it as you see fit. I have no rights—not even to ask you to hold this letter confidential. But I was once a Virginia gentleman myself; and I do ask you to see that Jack Green, who carries this letter, comes to no harm.

"Cordially yours,
"TOM 'FAIR.'"

"Beyond a doubt this letter was meant for my father," he said. "But he and my mother are both in New York just now. Besides, they are old and I don't want to trouble them. And it's not necessary; I can speak for them. They'll both be delighted to welcome Cousin Stella as their own daughter; and I'll go for her at once, either with you or alone, whichever you say. What do you suggest? You and Fair have plans, of course."

Green nodded. He took Go Ahead's consent as a matter of course; and it was, indeed, only what he had expected it to be. "Yes, we've got some things fixed," he concurred. "We'll go on together. You dress as a cow puncher, like me; you can get away with it all right, I reckon?"

"Yes."

"All right. You get off at Mustin station, buy a horse and start to ride to Loboville, the next station to the west. I'll go on to Loboville by train, go up to the Roost, and get Stella and join you somewhere on your ride. You can loaf along the way, letting on you're looking for work. If you do have to go into Loboville be kind of careful, for Loboville sure is dangerous. But we can talk all that over later."

"Right . . . Now I'll leave you if you don't mind and run up to the city and fix things. Caesar can come up with you on the next trolley car and bring you to the station. He knows where to find me."

Green grinned. "Who's Caesar?" he asked.

"Bet that nigger was stealing my cigars," Go Ahead observed. "However, he's worth it."

A likely looking chocolate-colored darky came out of the door and halted. "Yessuh?" he said, interrogatively.

Caesar's mouth dropped open. Incredulous delight shone in his eyes. "Does you mean it, sho' nuf, Mr. George, suh?" he quavered.

"Don't I generally mean what I say?" demanded Go Ahead frowningly.

"Yessuh! Yessuh! You sho' does, suh. But comin' so unexpected-like, when I was jus' a-honin' to get away, I couldn't mos' skercely believe it, suh."

"You come in on the next car with Mr. Green here, Caesar, and show him where to find me at the Union station. . . . So long, Green. See you later."

Go Ahead shot away and caught his car—with two minutes to spare. Half an hour later he was sitting beside the desk of his chief in the Department of Justice, telling his tale.

"That's the situation," he ended, finally. "I'm going, of course; and it rests with you whether I go as a D. J. man or just as a private citizen. I've got to keep faith with Fair; and if you think—"

"Think nothing. Of course you'll go as a D. J. man. Keep faith with Fair by all means. Nobody's going to object if he gets away altogether if his gang is broken up?" There was an interrogative note in the Chief's voice.

But Go Ahead shook his head. "I don't know Fair personally," he said. "But from his letter I'd say he'll stick and suffer with his men. Virginians usually do, you know!"

"Oh, bosh! You and your Virginians!" The Chief laughed. Then he changed the subject. "You know anything about the country down there?" he asked.

"Only what everybody does. I've never been there."

"Neither have I. But I know a lot about it all the same. The Jim that Fair speaks about must be Jim Barker, sheriff of Loboville. We've had a lot of charges against him, but we haven't been able to get proof of any of them. He's the boss in his county; and the decent people don't seem able to throw him out. Generally speaking, he's charged with being in cahoots with Fair's gang and with whisky and gun running across the Mexican border. If you can land on him, do so; there's no closed season on Barker—and if you got him I guess you would help Fair and that cousin of yours."

Go Ahead nodded. "It looks that way," he concurred.

"One thing more! The War department's got troops down there after Fair's gang. But they have orders to go slow till they get a chance to grab the whole shooting match. I'll see that the various commanders are notified that you're on the way there and are instructed to give you all the aid they can . . . Good luck."

New Joan of Arc Has Visions of the Virgin

Remarkable scenes are taking place on a farm at Pont Roche, France, where a girl of thirteen years, Marcelle Georges, becomes transfixed daily in prayer, and, she alleges, converses with the Virgin, whom she sees in a vision. The ground where the girl kneels, telling her rosary and awaiting the vision, has been roped off, due to the crowds which attend. Lighted candles are placed around. In the photograph Marcelle is seen kneeling and holding a candle.

Koehl Makes Daring Escape

Transatlantic Pilot in Thrilling Exploit While War Prisoner.

New York.—Capt. Hermann Koehl, pilot of the Bremen, in the role of leading spirit in a vain attempt at escape by a number of German officers from a prison camp in France is the subject of an article recently published by the Munchener Neueste Nachrichten. This story apparently was written by a fellow-prisoner. It runs as follows:

"At the time of the lively spring battles of 1918, when everything was running under high pressure on the western front, there was delivered one evening to the officers' prison camp at Montoire, in the heart of France, a Wurttemberg captain of engineers.

"At least that's what he looked like. He was escorted by a small detachment of Frenchmen, with fixed bayonets. There had to be a little comedy, too. Before the German officer could enter the barbed-wire inclosed courtyard, with its comfortless barracks and horse stables, he must go through the office of the interpreter. There each German officer was searched for articles that might aid in an attempt to escape and was catechized about his personal and service affairs. The armed guards sat along the wall. The interpreter, an elderly captain, inquired about the prisoner's height and the number of his children.

A Bombing Aviator Arrives.

"After this formality, the new arrival entered the prisoners' quarters. A number of eager prisoners were already lined up against the barbed-wire fence in expectation of meeting a possible regimental comrade or of getting the latest news from the German front. But this time somebody quite unusual arrived. One saw a short, strongly built man, with clearly cut features and with the order of Pour le Merite around his neck. It was soon learned that he was a bombing aviator named Koehl.

"He was shown into his box, a 4 by 6 meter room, with a field cot, a chair, a table and a small bureau of the most primitive sort. With many other German officers of all branches of the service, he had to live in the big stables of a former breeding farm

"At this time the prisoners of Barrack L 3 were busy with a plan to escape. A number of them who could not become reconciled to prison life and preferred to be in the German trenches or fighting in the air were engaged in digging a tunnel in order to gain their freedom by an underground route. After repeated attempts, they had become convinced of the impossibility of getting through the double lines of wire and past the pickets. Consequently, the road must be underground. It was estimated that one would have to tunnel from fifteen to twenty meters

"Koehl at once became the leader of the committee on flight. A short, wide plank was neatly removed from the floor under a bedstead and a bag of sand was fastened to the under side so that the Frenchmen, in tapping the floor, would not have their suspicions aroused by a hollow sound.

"Then the working hours were fixed. Some prisoners stood watch, others had to carry bags of sand and still others had to toil underground. Nude as Adam, with only bandages around the elbows to protect them from the coarse gravel, one lay on the ground and burrowed like a mole. At first two meters straight downward, then a direct tunnel toward the wall of the stockade.

Scratched Gravel.

"The Loire flowed close by the camp so that whenever the river rose a little, one was lying in water And so one scratched out the hard gravel with an iron leg of a bedstead or a can, loaded it onto a little sledge and dragged it backward to the foot of the shaft, where it was put into tiny sacks and hoisted up. Then it was distributed in all sorts of places—under the floor that lay a little higher, in the roof rafters that could only be reached through the ceiling, in watering cans out to the humus covering of the garden.

"After nine meters had been dug the rear part of the gallery fell in while a man was working at the head end. He was buried alive. There was a fever of activity and after wild digging his feet were reached. Soon he was dragged out unconscious. He came to himself and lay on the bed while others were already at work bracing up the passageway against further cave-ins. After an hour's rest the rear-victim was again doing his bit with the others.

"There surely were plenty of mining engineers and underground construction experts for the job. All the cross-pieces and back parts of the closets and table drawers were used, but the fronts were left untouched, so that the French would not get suspicious. In short, everything available was used. The only tools were table knives. And the work went slowly.

"Many a day the advance was not a quarter of a meter. The tool-makers constructed tiny mining lamps out of tin cans, for there were no candles to be had, and, as after a long period of tunneling it became difficult to breathe and even the lamps gradually went out, it became necessary to build an airpump out of water pails placed upside down. Its piston, which was pierced with air holes, was held firm while a worker moved its cylinder up and down. The air was carried to where the digger was at work through pipes stolen from the heaters.

"And Koehl worked with the rest, now as digger, now as dirt carrier, now as watchman.

"There was a roll call every day at a fixed time. At a signal from the trumpeter the watch turned out under arms, a guard was placed at every door and the officer of the guard read over the names of the captive officers, either before the rooms or in the yard.

"And one day the man working in the tunnel failed to hear the signal and did not come out in time. The plank was placed over the hole in the floor and the bed mat thrown over it. The digger stood beneath in all his nakedness. There were a few bits of gravel in the room, the hob-nailed boots of the Frenchman grated on them. The guard on duty had already passed, he turned on his heel, rapped the floor, shoved the bed mat aside and saw the concealed shaft. In a second it was open, and a French face grinned triumphantly at the German and wished him 'Bon soir.' The unlucky victim crawled out and stood there, dripping with yellow, muddy gravel before the master of the situation.

"Thirty days in confinement was the regular penalty for attempts to escape, with twice that long if there had been material damage. And what damage there had been! Closets, ceilings, floors, bedsteads, etc

"At one stroke the prison was filled. Everything was investigated. He who had already packed his traveling bag, he who had a home made civilian costume or cap under his pillow, he who had been saving bits of toasted bread for months for the journey to the front or to Switzerland, got thirty or sixty days.

"And Captain Koehl, too, often had that kind of leisure in which to ponder over new plans.

"'This must be done another way,' said Koehl to himself.

"One day there was an alarm! In a minute! Fall in! What's the matter? Nobody knows. Koehl's place is empty. Now everybody knows it. Koehl is gone. He, whom the French had guarded like the apple of their eye. A quiet but great joy filled the hearts of all. He was gone, the bombing aviator, who every evening had told about his deeds as one of the first military flyers, who had always cheered up the spirits of the downhearted and urged them on to new work.

"To put it briefly. He crawled through the wire entanglement, swam across the Loire, went to a near-by aviation field got into a machine ready to start and flew to the German front."

MUSIC IN SMALL VILLAGES IS AIM OF NEW CAMPAIGN

Playground and Recreation Association to Extend Movement Begun in Adirondacks.

New York.—A campaign to carry music to small towns will be promoted throughout the United States, it has been announced by the Playground and Recreation Association of America. The organization plans to extend nationally a movement begun in Adirondack villages by the Lake Placid club and aims to open greater musical opportunities to the 52,000,000 persons who live in towns of 2,500 population or less and who, in many cases, have had no musical education and are unable to read even the simplest music.

Its first objective will be to further the work among villages of New York state. Music "missioners" already have been placed in 64 towns, with the co-operation of the state education department, which pays half the salaries of these music teachers. The rest of the expenses has been met by the local boards of education.

Choruses, glee clubs, orchestras, choirs, music festivals, and operettas are among the community music activities which have been started. With the aid of the radio and phonograph, musical appreciation has been taught to the little red schoolhouse and the country around it.

Large towns and cities will be urged to reach out into the country with their musical resources, holding annual music festivals in which rural groups as well as others may compete.

The dearth of musical education and of opportunities to hear good music found in northern New York is true of small towns in many other states, according to the association.

424 Lanuages in the Americas, Say Experts

Paris.—People who are reputed to speak nearly every known language really are not entitled to their reputations, say statistically inclined linguistic authorities.

A recent compilation gives the tongues of the world as 2,796, decidedly more than most people would suppose. This is qualified, however, with the comment that figures differ among students of the subject because some classify certain dialects as separate languages while others do not.

The distribution of the chief tongues are given as 48 in Europe, 153 in Asia, 118 in Africa, 424 in the Americas and 117 in Oceania. These and the minor languages are all said to be living, spoken languages, although some have very limited use, as in the case of small tribes of savages.

How Does a Man Propose?

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

GREGORY TEPPER possessed two complexes curiously mingled—one inferiority and the other superiority. The inferiority complex, engendered when he was still in the tender years, was due to the fact that older sisters and brothers had persistently assured him that he was as homely as mud, as graceful as a cow and about as likely to be a successful ladies' man as a one-legged pirate with a hump on his back. And the superiority complex had been engendered at about the same period, by the repeated assurances on the part of the same older sisters and brothers that as a successful novelist he would probably make a fairly good blacksmith. He came out of the formative period firmly convinced that no girl would ever give him a second look, and just as firmly convinced that he was going to be one of the successful writers of the age.

And so far he had done much to prove the rightness of this second conviction. His first novel—written without the shred of a love motive, and with hardly a woman in its list of characters—had made a tremendous hit. But his publishers had then assured him that the love element would have to figure in his next story.

Gregory led a wandering sort of tramp's existence when he was gathering the material for his novels. For a week or two you might have found him working with unskilled hands around some iron foundry—later you might see him passing out programs at a country circus.

But when the time came for the actual writing Gregory went out to Gaston to live by himself in the run-down old farmhouse he had inherited from his grandfather.

He had progressed with gratifying results on his second novel. But when three-quarters through he was unpleasantly aware of the fact that there were still many gaps throughout the earlier chapters. Three-quarters through the book it was time for his hero to propose—but since there were gaps where there should have been preliminary love scenes and descriptions of the heroine, this proposal business offered almost unsurmountable difficulties. Besides Gregory hadn't any idea how a man proposed.

Gregory believed in getting all his material at first hand. The only way then to find out how a man proposes was—to propose.

Gregory pondered over the situation—and then decided to propose. Of course no woman would ever think of accepting a proposal from him, thought Gregory—but at least he could get first-hand information up to the point of the girl's response.

So Gregory decided to propose to Gladys Brooks because all along in thinking of his heroine he had had Gladys Brooks in mind. Besides he could really put his heart and soul into this business of proposing to Gladys Brooks. He could suffer with his hero in being turned down by Gladys. It would be a terrific ordeal but the kind of ordeal that Gregory felt a man ought to suffer for the sake of great achievement. Of course Gladys Brooks would despise him for imagining for a moment that she would think of marrying him. She would think him a fool. Well, perhaps a man ought to be willing to be a fool for his great work.

So Gregory walked up to the Brooks estate, where Gladys spent a month or so every summer. Gregory had met Gladys a few times in town the winter before—at dinner parties he had attended with certain chapters of his book in mind. And Gladys had asked him—perfunctorily of course, thought Gregory—to come and see her. That at least provided an excuse. And as Gregory walked up the driveway to the old mansion he willfully put himself in the mood of his hero—desperately, hopelessly in love with his heroine—Gladys Brooks. Incidentally Gregory had figured that if Gladys were home he could go through the preliminaries in half an hour, get down to the proposal and get back in time to write four or five hours more that night. Rejections didn't take long—

"I can't keep it to myself any longer," Gregory's hero was saying through Gregory's lips. "I'm distracted about you—Gladys. Gladys, dear—Gladys, can't you see—" Only once he had come very near to saying Phillis instead of Gladys because Phillis was his heroine's name.

Gregory felt his hands go cold—felt them tremble as he took Gladys' hand in his. Then some strange power swept over him. He held Gladys close in his arms, held her close and kissed her and would not let her go. More of cruel torture than of rapture in this love business, thought Gregory. Here indeed was the supreme sacrifice to his art. He kissed her eyes—and held her still to him in one long last embrace. But Gladys did not stir.

"Gregory, Gregory," was all she said. "Gregory, why have you made me wait so long?"

Then Gregory forgot his hero and his heroine and his great work—forgot that he was an awkward fellow whom no woman could ever love, forgot, too, that he was a great writer.

And it was not until he had actually reached his lonely farmhouse when the moon was high that night that he remembered the chapters he had to write.

Oxen on Railroad

On the railroad sidetracks of a cottonseed mill at Navasota, Texas, it has been found that teams of oxen supply the best and cheapest motive power available for moving about loaded railroad box cars. Long and expensive delays resulted from waiting for the locomotive to do the switching after it pulled its string of cars into town once or twice a day, but the oxen are always on hand when needed.

Large Texas longhorn steers are used. Six oxen pull more than 200,000 pounds on the rails. One prize yoke of two steers, weighing 2,200 pounds each, can handle a box car alone.

"When You return to Your "Honeymoon Home"

WHEN you begin married life in your "Honeymoon Home," let the Maytag add to your happiness and comfort, and prolong the life of that dainty, beautiful linen found among your wedding gifts.

The Maytag washes by water action alone. It is hand careful with delicate clothes, yet so thorough that no hand-rubbing is necessary, even on the stubborn edge dirt of collars and cuffs—so rapid that an entire washing is done in an hour or so.

The quick-cleaning, self-emptying cast-aluminum tub keeps the water hot for an entire washing, and it will not dent, chip, rust nor corrode. The adjustable legs make it just your height.

The new Maytag Roller Water Remover has a Safety Feed, automatic tension, self-reversing drainboard and instant safety release. The large, soft rolls remove both soap and water evenly from all parts of the garment without pressing hard-to-iron wrinkles into the clothes.

Farm Tenancy Makes Slow Gains

SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

THE increase in farm tenancy in the United States in the last twenty-five years has been comparatively slow, says the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. In 1925, 38.6 per cent of all farms were operated by tenants compared with 35.3 per cent in 1900, according to the census bureau. From 1880 to 1900, however, tenancy increased 25.6 per cent to 35.3 per cent of all farms.

In many cases, tenancy is merely the stepping stone between working for wages on the farm and farm ownership, according to investigations by the United States Department of Agriculture. Nearly half of the tenants, it was found, had previously worked for wages. Three-fourths of the farmers under twenty-five years of age were tenants, while three-fourths of those over sixty-five years were owners. Cases in which men slip backward are not wanting, as about one out of every nine tenants once owned his own farm.

Absentee landlordism is rare. More than 90 per cent of rented farms are owned by landlords living nearby and only 5 per cent by persons living out of the state in which the farm is located. Most landlords are ex-farmers, and four-fifths of them own only one farm. According to the 1925 farm census, 30 per cent of the tenants in the north central states were related to the landlord.

DUST CLOUDS ENDANGER FLYING MEN UNTIL CITY OFFICIALS SOLVE PROBLEM

Spectators Can See Takeoffs Without Peril and Authorities Breathe Easier—In Every Sense—Since Experts Come to Aid of Aviators at Boston.

WHILE Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, fresh from his triumphs in Central America and the West Indies, is now looking for new worlds to conquer aeronautically, city and aviation officials are planning new ways to make airports safer.

Flyers are interested in the dust problem not because they meet dust aloft, but because they must reckon with the problem when they are landing. Officials are interested because they are watchful over the safety of thousands of spectators filled with a new zeal for aviation because of Col. Lindbergh's prowess.

So seriously have the officials of the Boston Airport at South Boston realized that question that they have conducted special experiments with dust-laying apparatus and chemicals to determine which are most effective.

The problem has arisen only in recent years—one might say months—with the increase in "galleries" at the big aviation fields. Public interest has become so aroused to flying that it is no uncommon sight to see hundreds and even thousands of persons gathered on the more popular fields to see the takeoff in any one of the big races.

Men, women and children trample over the fields before the start of the fliers, tearing up the turf and earth so that it may become quite dusty. When the pilots are ready to take off and the crowds pushed back behind the ropes, the aviators may find the field covered with fine dust.

As the plane starts down the runway, the propeller whirring, great clouds of dust arise, getting into the eyes of airmen and spectators alike, and creating a dangerous situation.

To reduce that danger so far as may be humanly possible, officials of the South Boston Airport are using calcium chloride, a chemical that because of its affinity for moisture acts as a perfect dust layer, much in the same manner of a moist blanket over the field.

Since that action was taken some months ago the officials have breathed easier—in every sense of that expression—and have made it possible for spectators to observe takeoffs without peril to themselves or to the fliers.

"...but what will it cost me to buy that car on time?"

WHEN you buy a car for cash, you pay the factory price plus freight, war tax and delivery charges. When you buy on time, you pay an additional charge which includes fire and theft insurance. This additional amount is known as a "finance charge."

The finance charges on General Motors cars are low because the General Motors Acceptance Corporation was organized to assure sound credit practice and low rates to those of its customers who prefer to purchase on time. The Acceptance Corporation operates the GMAC Plan of payment. The Plan is simple, fair and economical. Its large volume of business reduces costs. It is conducted to give you satisfaction and to keep your goodwill.

When you buy a General Motors car on the GMAC Plan, you pay the cash delivered price—plus only the low GMAC financing charge—nothing more!

The Plan is available only through General Motors dealers. Another reason for buying your next car—whether new or used—from a General Motors dealer.

Buy your next car on the GMAC Plan

The General Motors cars are Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Oakland, Buick, LaSalle and Cadillac. Together they make up a line of 86 models, ranging in price-at-the-factory from $495 to $5500. They are the quality cars of the various car price classes.

Whatever make and model you choose—whether it be of the highest price, or the lowest—you will get a beautiful body (the closed bodies are by Fisher), 4-wheel brakes, a powerful engine, and a quality of design, materials and performance that only General Motors, by reason of its resources and its policy of continuous improvement, is in a position to give.

And the final touch in your satisfaction will come when you buy it on the GMAC Plan. The transaction will be in your interest. The rates will be low. And the dealer will not lose interest in you after the down payment is made.

COULD NOT GET OUT OF BED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Strengthened Her

Elkhart, Ind.—"I had a tired feeling and was unable to get out of bed without the help of my husband. We heard of the Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. I am still taking it and it sure is a help to me. I can do my work without resting before I am through. I know that if women will give the Vegetable Compound a trial they can overcome those tired and worn-out feelings. I cannot express the happiness I have received and how completely it has made over my home."—MRS. D. H. SIBERT, 1326 Laurel St., Elkhart, Indiana.

U. S. CLEANS UP FARMERS' HOMES

Fight Red Paint as Blot on Landscape.

Washington.—Through the ministrations of the home demonstration agents of the Department of Agriculture, farm women have put the ban on unsightly homes.

The lavish use of red paint, associated in the past with farms, is frowned upon by her field agents, says Miss Grace Frysinger, head of the home demonstration work in the Central states.

Federal employees are trying to point out to the farmers' wives that even the slightly lower price of red paint cannot make up for the landscape-blotting qualities it has when daubed informally upon all buildings on the property.

Classes are being conducted in all the states, with the co-operation of county agents, state universities, and their departments of agriculture, in methods of beautifying the farm home, both internally and externally.

"This present campaign, we hope," Miss Frysinger says, "will result in a unity of color in the buildings, and also the clearing up of the front yards.

"Women are being shown demonstration homes, where the yard is free from the plowshare; the clothesline and the garbage pail. The model homes have neat, clean front yards, shrubbery covering unsightly outbuildings, and plenty of trees for shade. The buildings are all painted one color or at least in colors that have some relation to one another. The fences are mended and upstanding, and chickens and live stock are kept behind pens or wire fences, and are not allowed to roam generally through all parts of the yard and house."

Crippled Boy Gains Eagle Scout Honors

Los Angeles, Calif.—Despite the fact that he has one artificial leg and walks with a crutch and that both his hands are crippled, with middle finger missing, Lester Plunket of Los Angeles has won the Eagle badge of the Boy Scouts of America. The record of his accomplishments is one of the most unusual and heroic in the history of the boy scout movement.

The scouts have provided achievement badges for handicapped boys who cannot meet the exacting requirements of the first-class scout. Young Plunkett, however, undertook to pass the tests set for robust boys. A first-class scout must earn 21 merit badges to become an Eagle scout, which means he must also have a working knowledge of 21 different vocational or scientific subjects. Eleven of the merit badges which he earns are required, while the other ten may be chosen from a list of 88 subjects for which standards have been prepared by experts.

Several of the requirements seemed impossible for him to meet, but he took them over and over again until he passed with a perfect score.

Lester hiked 21 miles at a stretch, although his test required but 14. He tried and failed 29 times in what is known as the scout's pace test, but he won on the thirtieth attempt. He has taken honors as a life saver and swimmer, although he can use but one hand in such an endeavor.

Curators Battle for Heart of Queen

Nantes, France.—Disputed possession of a queen's heart has started a feud between the scholarly curators of the museums of the city of Nante and the Loire Inferieur.

It is a heart of gold, containing supposedly, the vital organ of Anne of Brittany, queen of France, born in Nantes in 1477. She willed it to the city of her birth in medieval fashion.

The quarrel arises over which museum most truly represents Nantes, the capital city of the department of Loire Inferieur.

There are many examples of great and near great French men and women who are separated from their hearts in their last rest. Often, as in Anne's case, the heart was returned to the city of childhood. Sometimes, as in the case of St. Louis, king of France, the heart is buried in holy ground. The heart of Richard the Lion Hearted is buried at Rouen.

Lost Dog Comes Home After 500 Mile Trip

Minden, Neb.—Last summer Tony, Airdale dog belonging to Dixie Virginia Samples, eight, and Marjorie Ann Samples, four, of Minden, strayed from the family car while they were vacationing at Bricelyn, Minn., 500 miles from home.

The girls and their parents mourned the dog as dead or hopelessly lost until recently he trotted up to the door whining and barking joyously. It has taken the dog nine months, and and it was estimated he must have traveled thousands of miles getting home.

Tony's feet were sore and his claws worn off. He was gaunt and hungry.

Tony has been in the Samples family since he was six weeks old. Now he is six years old, and will remain in the family until he dies a natural death, all members agree.

RARE GLASS GLOBE IN CAPITAL MUSEUM

World's Largest Crystal Attracts Lawmakers

Washington.—Resting on its circular base, the world's most perfect crystal stands ready to reveal whatever secrets of the future may be desired. Appropriately enough, this rare globe of glass, nearly 14 inches in diameter and weighing 110 pounds, is in Washington's National museum.

To this perfect orb come thousands to gaze, and, if possible, obtain a message from the mystic future or a warning based on events of the past. Here, too, might be found the answer to political hopes and legislative ambitions.

It is known that the capital has several senators and representatives who regularly visit, on certain days of each week, the oracle of the crystal gazers.

The largest crystal ball in the world, guarded closely, came originally from China, where it was said to possess mystic powers and unusual accuracy in foretelling the future.

Two hundred years ago Emperor Chieng Lung received a massive block of crystal, mined in ancient Burma. It must have weighed a thousand pounds, and been at least four feet square.

Orders Big Crystal.

The emperor gave orders that the mass be used to make a crystal ball of the largest possible size. To do this the most skillful craftsman of the old empire was chosen. This took more than a year of effort. It was then taken to Japan for repolishing. This work consumed about six months under Japanese artisans, the most skillful known in this work. The crystal, then in all its luster and scintillating brilliance, was given to the emperor, and it was one of his most valued possessions.

It is said that, for special service, a mandarin was told that he might have any wish fulfilled and the reward chosen was the great crystal. For almost two centuries it remained in the possession of the mandarin's descendants, until financial troubles compelled its sale.

It is not hard to imagine the hands, both wrinkled and smooth, that have caressed this polished surface. What hands have drawn back, as eyes have seen mirrored the events of the future! All the mysticism and hypnotic power ascribed to crystals in all ages and all countries leaps to the imagination as one gazes on this perfect specimen.

Abode of Ancestors.

Long, long ago, in China, it is said, the crystal ball was found in a dragon's lair. The emperor of that early period, gazing into the ball, saw reflected the spirits of his bygone ancestors, praising and glorifying him for releasing them from control of the dreaded dragon.

Thus, it is believed in the Orient that the crystal ball is the abiding place of one's ancestors. It is believed to possess the power of foretelling evil, since any evil spirit entering the house will first attempt to hide in the ball. When trouble impends, the ball is placed at night outside the home. The cold morning dew clouds and dulls the luster. Carefully, then, and gently the surface is rubbed, and, if the dew vanishes and the ball is restored to perfect purity, the evil has been vanquished; if not—woe betide.

Crystal gazing has long appealed to humanity. Congressmen are not the only illustrious persons who find solace and comfort in its visions. Roger Bacon has told in his writings of the crystals possessed by the friars in which events happening at far distant places were mirrored.

Rival Nurses Strive to Please Till It Hurts!

Mexico City.—Fights between ambulance crews of the Red Cross of Mexico City and the "Green Cross," rival charitable organization, each striving to outdo the other in the number of accident cases handled, have resulted in further injuries to patients already hurt and being taken to hospitals.

The Red Cross chapter complained to police that Green Cross ambulance men have attacked Red Cross ambulances bound for a hospital with accident victims. It was alleged that in some cases the injured had been forcibly removed from a Red Cross ambulance by the staff of a Green Cross car.

Police plan to assign zones to each ambulance service to prevent further trouble.

19-Year-Old Oklahoman Is Champion Farmer

He has won $1,150 in cash prizes in the last seven years at agricultural exhibitions, and has received 460 ribbons. His exhibits included 37 farm crops, three breeds of chickens, pigs and sheep.

Competing against adults, Ed won third place for two successive years in a corn growing contest sponsored by the Oklahoma City Chamber of Commerce, and last year he crowned his efforts by taking the grand prize.

He now is attempting to graft paper-shell pecans on native pecans and English walnuts on black walnuts.

SOLVE MYSTERY OF FLYING FISH

Both Flapping and Soaring Methods Used.

New York.—That troublesome question, "How do flying fishes fly?" is still pestering scientists, although many attempts to solve the mystery have been made.

J. T. Nichols, curator of recent fishes at the American Museum of Natural History, and C. M. Breeder, Jr., research associate of the New York aquarium, find some truth in both sides of the argument as to whether these fishes sustain their flight by flapping of the wings, or pectoral fins, or whether they merely soar as gliders.

"The flight is largely a planing one, but at certain times and under certain conditions a definite wing motion may enter into and contribute to it. The enlarged pectoral fins or wings are on anatomical grounds and structurally—from an engineering point of view—ideal gliding planes, so arranged as to be easily held rigid at the proper angle.

"The wings of large flying fishes are sometimes seen to vibrate or flutter, a motion more reasonably referable to tension in setting them, or to the wind, than to a definite function in flight. In very small and young fishes, on the other hand, the wings vibrate to such an extent that they blur, like those of a flying insect.

"It seems that with an increase in age and size, a buzzing, beelike flight is replaced by a true soaring flight and that the former is very likely a function of absolute size as are so many larval specializations.

"Flying fishes fly more freely in a strong breeze and attain greater elevation, speed and distance than in calm weather. The conclusion is almost inevitable that they utilize the wind to some extent to lift and propel them, even though it is difficult to understand how this would be accomplished."

Bottle Drifts 7,300 Miles; Faster Than Sail Boat

Washington.—Six miles a day, or faster than old sailing vessels, is the record established by a bottle reported to the navy hydrographic office.

The bottle traveled 7,300 miles from the gulf of Tehauntepec on the western coast of Mexico to New Guinea. It was thrown overboard by Second Officer J. M. Johansen of the Norwegian steamer Hellen July 12, 1924, and was picked up December 13, 1927, on the north coast of New Guinea.

Caught by the northeast trades, the bottle drifted into the north equatorial current setting westward, its drift passing Clipperton island, between the Hawaiian islands and Palmyra island, through the islands of the Marshall group, thence southward of the Caroline islands across the equator to the Hermit islands, off the north coast of New Guinea.

Find Greased Shoe Stays Dry and Wears

Washington.—Farmers who grease their shoes to make them last longer are following a sound scientific principle and not a "fallacy of the hinterland," the Department of Agriculture insists.

Greasing shoes, experts say, not only prolongs their life, but helps to keep the feet dry. They recommend neat's-foot, cod and castor oils, tallow and wool grease or mixtures of these.

Shoes worn on the farm get particularly hard wear, since they are subjected to mud and water and at times to extreme dryness. All these, it is observed, ruin leather, whereas oil and grease preserve it.

1 Out of 5 Weddings Gets Airing in Court

New York.—A least one out of every five new marriages in the United States results so deplorably that the case comes to court according to reports handed to the meeting of the joint committee on Domestic Relations Courts of the National Probation association. The matter is so serious, the report of the United States children's bureau in Washington on the Domestic Relations court of the United States affirms, that the bureau has made exhaustive study of the problems underlying family disruption and divorce and is formulating methods of correction.

Back Seat Driving Is Not Divorce Ground

Des Moines, Iowa.—Back seat driving by a husband is insufficient evidence for the granting of a divorce, Judge J. E. Meyer in Polk County District court ruled in dismissing a divorce petition filed by Mrs. Blanche Lowenberg, wife of Judson Lowenberg, Iowa grand master of the Ancient Order of United Workers. Mrs. Lowenberg testified that her husband found continual fault with her driving.

Airplanes All Right, but Not the Major!

An illustration of their sense of humor was given in a note dropped by the Germans on an American airdrome during the World war, after a glaring error had been made by an American major in command of an air unit, relates Gen. William Mitchell, commander of the American air forces during the war, in a statement taken from his diary published in Liberty Magazine.

"A certain major," wrote the general, "who was then in command of one of the air squadrons, flew over into Germany with what ships he had available for duty. He lost his way in the fog and landed in Germany with every ship intact. Not one ship was burned or destroyed, and the Germans captured the whole outfit. The Germans sent back a humorous message which was dropped on one of our airdromes. It said: 'We thank you for the fine airplanes and equipment which you have sent us, but what shall we do with the major?'"

Boy Forger Art Genius

Through the forgery of treasury notes a boy art genius has been discovered by the police of Glasgow, Scotland, who are withholding his name. The lad was traced through the arrest of two other boys who were trying to pass notes worth $2.50, which the artist had made and sold to the two for two cents each. In police court the young forger drew a remarkably accurate replica of a pound note even to the watermark. The boys were placed under suspended sentence, and the artist will be helped in his legitimate art education.

Varicose Veins Reduced Or Money Back

Simple Home Treatment That Is Giving Amazing Results.

If you have varicose veins or bunches you can start today to bring them back to normal size, and if you are wise you will do so.

Just get an original bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil at any dispensing pharmacist and apply it night and morning to the enlarged veins. It is very powerful and penetrating.

After a few days' treatment the veins will begin to grow smaller and by regular use will soon reduce to normal.

People who want to reduce varicose veins, or get rid of eczema, ulcers, or piles in a few days should not hesitate to get a bottle at once. It is such a powerful, penetrating antiseptic oil that a small bottle lasts a long time. Any pharmacy can supply you.

House Shaped Like Ball

Houses built like balls will solve the traffic problem, for they will leave much room in the streets around them, declares an architect of Dresden, Germany. To demonstrate his theory he has constructed such a house, about 80 feet in diameter, and standing on a base 16 feet square, to exhibit at this year's Dresden fair.

Not Comforting

"How did your constituents respond when you threw your hat in the ring?" some one asked of the candidate.

ARTHUR E. NELSON.

Minnesota voters have confidence in Arthur E. Nelson, Republican Candidate for United States Senator. His spectacular regima as mayor of St. Paul and the energetic, fearless, and able manner in which he has conducted his primary campaign, have convinced thousands that Nelson is the man. His twenty years residence in western Minnesota, and his sixteen years in St. Paul, have equiped him with a keen knowledge of the problems of our state.

According to Gregory P. Gentling, Nelson campaign manager, a majority of the voters have made up their minds that Nelson is the only Republican candidate who can win in the Fall.

WATER REDUCES BACTERIA COUNT

MOISTURE decreases the number of bacteria in the air enormously. French scientists counting microbes in the air before and after a rainstorm in Paris have found wide variations in the totals.

In a cubic meter of air gathered up near the Place Clichy Messrs. A. Sartory and Marc Langlais found 3,800 germs on a wet day at 5 p. m. and 16,000 at the same time on a dry day.

Similarly in the Paris subway after the tracks had been sprinkled thoroughly only 410 bacteria were found to the cubic meter while two hours later, when the tracks were dry, the investigators discovered 68,000.

Taking advantage of such findings, officials of many communities are advocating more generous sprinkling and in many instances have applied calcium chloride to road surfaces to lay the dust. That chemical, which in itself has high germicidal value, absorbs moisture as well as killing germs.

Good Road Facts

Henceforth, civilization can be no better than its highways.

More than $1,000,000,000 was spent in improving highways of the United States last year.

Good roads are a fine thing, but it is well to remember that they lead away from the farm as well as to it.

All roads leading to the four gateways of Yellowstone National park are reported to be in excellent condition.

The national parks, seven in the United States and three in Canada, are now linked together by improved highways.

The Defense highway, shortening the distance between Washington and Annapolis, Md., by eight miles, will be completed this year.

Twenty times around the world! Such, at any rate, is the distance American motorists could travel on their 500,000 miles of surfaced roads.

Minnesota has 100,000 miles of public roads of which 7,000 are trunk highways treated by special patrol maintenance, on which there has been expended during the past five years $33,000,000 annually. This state is a large user of calcium chloride for dust laying and highway maintenance.

LESSON XXVI

WHITEWASH: The dairy barn, milk house and the inside or all farm buildings should be whitewashed every Spring. In some communities there are men who make a business of whitewashing farm buildings the same as some men make a businees of threshing or filling silos. They are rendering a good service to the community and should be patronized. Some creameries provide a barrel whitewash sprayer for the use of their patrons.

Whitewash is a disinfectant. The building should be thoroughly cleaned before applying; the cobwebs swept down, and the stalls, mangers and alleys well cleaned so the whitewash will have a chance to be most effective.

Whitewash purifies and brightens up and makes the building a more cheerful place in which to work.

The Ward of Robbers' Roost

By Crittenden Marriott.

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian and secret service man, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself.

CHAPTER II

Robbers' Roost was well concealed, as was fully proved by the fact that for many years none of the many officers of the law who had sought it had managed to find it. Even the complicity of the sheriff, strongly suspected (and timidly and secretly charged) could not otherwise have accounted altogether for its immunity.

Its name was not descriptive; the place was not a "roost" at all, in the general significance of the term; it was a cluster of huts in a narrow, sloping valley hemmed round by high cliffs in whose sides other dwellings had been half carved, half built by long vanished cliff-dwelling Indians.

Lowest of all the ridges that encircled the valley was that which ran across its lower end and through which the water from the springs had for many years finally escaped. Ages before, this water had not escaped at all, but had formed a lake in the closed valley—or bolsa, as such valleys are called in the Southwest. But in time the ever-pressing water had found a way, at first by mere seepage, later by a trickle, and finally by a stream beneath the ridge to the outer world, where, by the way, it was soon swallowed up in the sands or evaporated to the clouds.

When Fair and his early followers had chanced upon the place they had entered it on foot, through the narrow, tortuous passage cut by the subterranean stream. Later, they had enlarged this passage sufficiently to allow the passage of horses. Still later, they had built a short aqueduct along the side of the valley from the springs at a height that enabled them to "spill" the surplus water in a veil that completely masked the mouth of the exit to the passage.

Inside the valley, commanding the entrance, a machine gun had been placed under continuous charge of sentries. And, at the head of the valley, through one of the caves in the cliff, there was another exit, known only to Fair and two or three "trusties," through which, as a last resort in time of need, the bandits could escape.

Altogether, the place, besides being well concealed, was almost impregnable by anything short of a small army. Only treachery by one of its inmates seemed likely to put it in real peril; and until Fair and Jim Barker fell out there had been little danger of this.

But the split between Barker and Fair had changed all this. The older outlaws had known Stella (known to the whole band as "Bob") since she had been a wee child and were very fond of her.

All of these stood by Fair in his refusal to turn Stella over to Barker, even as a wife; and they were backed up by the small colony of women who had slowly accumulated in the valley, and who had been married to the men there by Padre Antonio, who made periodical visits to the place for the purpose. The padre felt that he could at least regularize and perhaps mitigate what he could not prevent.

But the younger and more recent additions to the gang differed from the earlier ones in regard to Stella as well as on other subjects. Absolutely boylike as Stella looked in her customary dress, her known sex prevented her from being regarded entirely as a boy by the newcomers. Moreover many of them had grown dissatisfied with Fair's leadership, which had in their opinion grown feeble and unenterprising. They wanted to substitute a younger man, one with more "pep," and they had almost unanimously decided on one Bill Wade, a husky young scoundrel, for the purpose.

So long, however, as Fair was sustained by Barker, who knew the feeling outside the Roost and who feared that any marked increase in the gang's activities would bring destruction on his whole system, the recalcitrants were helpless and could do little more than grumble. But when Fair and Barker split, Wade and his friends promptly used the fact as a means by which they might gain control.

Wade and his friends did not seek adherents among Fair's friends on the ground that Barker ought to have Stella if he wanted her. Far from it. Wade conferred with Barker secretly and got his support by promising to turn over Stella as soon as he was chief; then he and his friends sought recruits by saying that Fair was old and no longer capable of leading, and there was a lot of truth in this. Luckily for Stella, however, Jack Green, who had always worshiped the child with doglike devotion, overheard the bargaining between Barker and Wade and reported it to Fair; and Fair promptly sent him East to find the Mortons.

A week or ten days after Green had gone, Fair took Stella into his confidence. "Bob, dear," he began. "I've got something to say to you. What would you think if I told you that for years I had been doing you a great wrong and that now you and I must both pay the penalty?"

Stella looked up with a laugh. She thought that Fair was joking. "I'd think that you were dreaming, daddy, dear," she said. "You do me a wrong? Why! you couldn't."

"But I have done you one—a continuing one. Im not joking, dear."

Again the girl laughed, though a little uneasily. Fair's tones sounded ominous. Still she could not take them very seriously. "Confess, then, quick," she said; "and I'll give you absolution." Then, glimpsing the expression on Fair's face, her heart sank and she ran to him.

"Don't mind my nonsense, daddy, dear," she pleaded, with her arms about his neck. "I don't know what you're talking about, but I do know that you never did me any wrong, big or little—unless perhaps you didn't spank me enough when I was small. You saved my life when my real father died and you've been more than a father to me ever since, you darling."

"Yes," Fair admitted sadly. "I've taken care of you, because I loved you. I loved you too much to give you up to your own people—the people who would have cared for you as you ought to have been cared for. And now—"

But Stella could not let him finish. "Wh—what on earth do you mean, daddy?" she cried.

"I mean that when your father was dying I promised to send you back to his people in Virginia, and I meant to keep my word. I wasn't a bandit and a thief then, and—"

"A bandit and a thief!—"

"That's what I am, Bob. That's what we all are—miserable scoundrels who ought to be hanged twice over—"

"Daddy!"

"That's what we are, Bob." Drearily Fair repeated his assertion. "I know you think differently. Not the least part of the wrong I've done you has been to let you grow up thinking differently. But you've got to know the truth now. You think we are a sort of romantic soldiery, waging war against tyrannical police who have been hounded on by rich men, whom we are justified in robbing in return. It's all wrong, dear; all wrong. Some of us may have been started on the wrong path by some sort of oppression (I was myself); but most of us were wrong from the first; and none of us have any real excuse for the crimes we have committed, none of us, none of us."

Oak Acknowledged King

The extraordinary durability of oak made this wood serviceable to primitive man, and as civilization refined itself and found room for expressions of beauty, this same durability led carvers and wood craftsmen to trust their finest inspirations to oak. The Middle ages created oaken shrines, halls, churches and public edifices of matchless beauty, standing as monuments of good preservation today.

United States "Christian"

In the case of the Church of the Holy Trinity versus the United States, argued in the Supreme court, January 7, 1892, the decision was handed down by Justice Brewer, a part of which reads as follows: Justice Brewer stated that in his opinion the fact that "the form of oath, the custom of opening the national and state assemblies with prayer, the laws of Sabbath observance, with the closing of courts, legislatures and similar public assemblies on that day the number of churches, missionaries, philanthropists, these and many other matters which might be noticed, add a volume of unofficial declarations to the mass of organic utterances that this is a Christian nation."

Character Judgment

If there be any truer measure of a man than by what he does, it must be what he gives.—South.

MILL TOWN BANS OLD BLUE MONDAY

Employees' Wash Is Done in Laundries Free.

Greenwood, S. C.—The traditional "blue Monday," with odors of soap and steaming laundry pots, has been abolished in two textile mill villages by James C. Self, cotton manufacturer.

He believes that lifting women from drudgery is one of the needs of the changing problems of labor, and has installed plant laundries which deliver "wet wash" free of charge to all families employed in his two large cotton mills.

"The more labor we eliminate for the women in the homes," Self says, "the better able they become to fill their places in the manufacturing scheme, not only where they are employed in the mill but where they must look after the needs of large families so employed or attending the mill schools."

Self further believes in the adoption by textile manufacturers of the most modern machinery for health promotion. An automatic humidification system in all his plants maintains regularity of humidity and temperature in place of the changeable temperature, dust and disease laden air of the old days.

Neat wooden cottages, arranged along wide, well-kept avenues, have replaced the old shacks stretched along muddy alleys. The houses renting for $1 a room a month, have garden plots both for flowers and vegetables. A golf course on the hill property is open to mill workers. The company even supplies coal for home use at cost.

One standby of a mill town, however, is missing. There is no "mill store." The workers trade with town merchants or wherever they please.

Man Spends 28 Years on Trip Around World

New York.—Joseph Frank Mikulec, fifty years old, a native of Croatia, who started from that country 28 years ago on a trip around the world to collect autographs of various notables, is in New York. He has with him a volume containing more than 30,000 signatures and weighing 55 pounds.

The book contains the autographs of a number of European rulers, the signature of nine Presidents, as well as the names of many famous in art, literature, politics, science, religion and business. The volume is the third since he started to collect the autographs.

The autograph book is so large and heavy that Mikulec uses a specially constructed small carriage with which to wheel it around. The vehicle is left in the hallway of the building in which Mikulec enters for his signatures and the volume is then carried on his shoulder.

The signatures of President Coolidge and all the members of his cabinet are included in the book exhibited by Mikulec. He says that although he has traveled hundreds of thousands of miles, he will continue on his quest to obtain additional autographs to add to his collection.

Cattle Men in Texas Worried by Wild Horses

El Paso, Texas.—A fight has been instituted by cattle men of this section upon herds of wild range horses which are roaming the cattle districts in large numbers.

So plentiful have the wild horses become that in some places in New Mexico they are starving cattle by stripping the ranges of grass. Ranchers have been forced in many localities to fence their water holes against the onslaught of the horses.

Most of the present stock are "broom tails" from herds on which brands have lapsed. Most of them are offsprings of animals that originally belonged to community herds that ranged on old Spanish grants.

A herd of more than 1,000 was recently driven to El Paso from New Mexico by rangers on the Datil forest reserve as a community project to protect the range for cattle.

Mother Uses Own Baby in Tests for Bacteria

Berkeley, Calif.—A five-months baby boy has proved his mother's theory that bacteria are not necessary to life, it was learned at the University of California here.

Mrs. Helen McDonald Steinfeld, teaching fellow in the department of zoology, questioned Pasteur's doctrine that bacteria of harmless varieties were necessary to existence. For three years she has experimented with fruit flies.

Then, when her son was born, she continued her tests, using him as the center of her experiments. The baby was given only boiled food and was brought up in nearly antiseptic surroundings.

Mrs. Steinfeld's findings are now under scrutiny of other scientists, but the mother is confident her discoveries will bear critical study.

TAKE HUMAN LIFE IN INDIAN CEREMONIES

Writer Describes Secret Murders to "Save" Rajah.

New York.—The cold and calculated murder of a seven-year-old boy by members of the court of an Indian prince, who believed that the sacrifice would save their dying rajah, is described by Katherine Mayo, in an article written for the Cosmopolitan, as typical of the vicious practices which prevail in India in spite of British efforts to eradicate them.

Miss Mayo, whose lengthy investigation of Indian life resulted in the startling disclosures recently made in her book, "Mother India," declares that while fear of British interference has curbed the once common practice of burning wives and concubines alive on the funeral pyre of their dead master, the sacrifice of human lives in secret ceremonies, prompted by the Hindu sorcerers and fed by native superstition, is still one of the gravest social problems.

British Investigate.

The particular case she describes, says Miss Mayo, is vouched for in detail by the records of the British viceroy's agent who investigated.

With the rajah near death, his first wife, or rani, who was childless, was seized with jealousy and fear that the small son of the second rani would succeed to the throne with his mother, her rival, as regent, the writer explains.

Calling in the sorcerer, she plotted with him to convince the rajah that his life could be saved only by the sacrifice of a child, preferably his son by the second rani.

The sorcerer, fully aware of his impotence to cure, nevertheless convinced the rajah that his only hope for life lay in human sacrifice. The second rani, with only her love of the rajah at heart, prepared to give up her son.

"But, before the child could reach the sick man's bed, a swift grip dragged him aside and one of the palace women, pushing a boy before her, stood in the young heir's place, pleading that the boy, her son, be offered in sacrifice instead.

"So they carried the rajah into his apartments, and there that night, in a shut-in place, came the first rani and the sorcerer, with certain principal officers of the state. And the sorcerer, with nuts and lamps and incantations, made strong sorcering. After this they dealt with the son of the palace woman until life passed from him.

"Then they carried the small body wrapped in a cloth and dropped it secretly into the fish pond that lies in the inner palace. And much money was forthwith paid the sorcerer.

The Rajah Died.

"But the rajah, nevertheless, died in three days and was buried on a gorgeous funeral pyre, although fear of the English half ruined the ceremony by preventing the burning alive of so much as a single wife or concubine at his side.

"That night the palace woman whose child had saved the heir of the state was quietly smothered in her bed."

Yet nothing would have been heard of the double murder but for a quarrel which prompted some of the palace dignitaries who had not witnessed the ceremony to carry the facts secretly to the British viceroy's agent, says Miss Mayo. Checked by Indian stolidity, secretiveness and adherence to tradition, the agent, however, could do nothing more than determine that the first rani had been banished from the palace, in accordance with Hindu law, and the second rani had been installed as regent for her son.

Efforts to find the sorcerer, one of the class of holy men whose vicious sway over Indian life even the most rigid British measures have been unable to check, proved unavailing. With his rich reward for his incantations securely pocketed, he disappeared quickly, probably to prey later on the superstitions of another state, far removed from the tragedy.

Declare Natural Gas Gives More Heat Units

New Orleans.—Natural gas gives considerably more heat than the artificial variety, the Louisiana conservation department says in its official publication.

Comparing the natural gas of the Monroe field with that supplied in New Orleans by artificial means, it found that the former had a heating value of 1,000 British thermal units a cubic foot and the latter only 600.

The heating value of natural gas, it explained, depends upon the relative percentages of the various hydrocarbons which it contains. Usually the chief constituent is methane, which has a heating value of 1,000 British thermal units a cubic foot.

What's Wrong Here?

New York.—Lili Damati, modest French actress, bound for filmdom, is with us. She does not drink or smoke, her hair was never bobbed. She blushed when her picture was taken with Will Hays and she especially requested that no mention be made of any charms revealed by modes of the day.

What of It?

Berlin.—Just to prove it can be done two waiters are hiking from Berlin to Geneva, 1,000 miles, wearing boiled shirts, swallow tails and patent leathers.

FAMOUS MARKET TO BE TORN DOWN

Capital's Ancient Food Stalls Face Destruction.

Washington.—Center market, on Pennsylvania avenue, for 52 years a landmark of the nation's capital, may soon be torn down to make way for government buildings.

Presidents' wives have rubbed shoulders there with humbler shoppers and congressmen have spent many a Saturday morning discussing the beef situation with its butchers.

Now a bill is pending in congress for destruction of the building after January 1, 1929, to make room for a structure to house the Department of Justice.

Jacob West, seventy-seven-year-old butcher, whose neat little stand has occupied stall No. 145 since the building was opened, looks with dismay upon the possible demolition of the building.

When Jacob was sixteen years old he joined the gay throng of food mongers as an apprentice butcher in the meat business. That was before the market was entirely housed in the two-block building. Five years later he was on his own, a graduate in the butcher shop business.

"I remember Mrs. Grant when her husband was President," he says. "She used to do her own marketing. She was a nice lady, always pleasant, and she knew her business about buying meat. When there was going to be a big party at the White House she always would superintend the buying, although she brought servants to carry the stuff."

Secretary of Agriculture Jardine is a frequent visitor at the market, although only in an official capacity. His wife and two daughters are regular customers on Saturdays to superintend the marketing for the Jardine household.

Senators Smoot and Borah both are wise purchasers, market vendors say, who make thorough investigations of all foodstuffs before they purchase. Both of the cabinet's Davises also are good customers, who supervise the weekly buying for their establishments.

C. H. Walleigh, superintendent, recalls the weekly trips of Mrs. Roosevelt, with the President at her elbow making sly remarks about her buying ability. He says that President Garfield was a more serious buyer and that President Cleveland was another who took personal interest in the food destined for the White House table.

New Motor Steel Lasts 20 Times Life of Old

Paris.—Wear-resisting steel for automobile and airplane motors has been presented to the Academy of Sciences as a new achievement. Leon Guillet, chief of the Central school, a government institute of technology, revealed the process and showed the motors he used to support his case.

"Nitrated steel," he said, "opens new horizons in metallurgy."

Cylinders of this new steel, he explained, had one successful test in a recent race at Indianapolis between a French and an American car.

Long life of the new steel and less friction, he gave as the two notable qualities. In general the wear of the nitrated steel cylinders was one-twentieth that of nickel and chrome casting, he said, and the new steel eliminated the need for bronze or antifriction bushings.

Aviation motors of the new metal after 100 hours of flight showed no wear that could be measured, while there was distinct wear in the usual cylinders.

The consumption of oil is given as decidedly less and not subject to increase even after considerable use of the motor.

U. S. School Kids Send Gifts to Mexican Tots

Washington.—Encouraged by success of the doll messengers of friendship sent Japan last year, the committee on World Friendship Among Children of the Federal Council of Churches, New York city, which sponsored that project, now is directing a similar undertaking with the idea of cultivating good will between children of the United States and Mexico.

Instead of dolls, school bags will be sent to encourage efforts in Mexico to secure universal education. The gifts are expected to arrive in time for that nation's Independence day, September 16. The department of education of the Mexican government has agreed to distribute the bags among the 1,200,000 children in the 15,000 schools of that country.

'How Much Water Should Baby Get?
A Famous Authority's Rule
By Ruth Brittain

Baby specialists agree nowadays, that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eight-pound baby, for instance, needs twenty-four ounces of fluid. Later on the rule is two ounces of fluid per pound of body weight. The amount of fluid absorbed by a breast-fed baby is best determined by weighing him before and after feeding for the whole day; and it is easily calculated for the bottle-fed one. Then make up any deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying, upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria. For these and other ills of babies and children such as colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, sour stomach, loss of sleep, underweight, etc., leading physicians say there's nothing so effective. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper—and millions of mothers have depended on it in over thirty years of ever increasing use. It regulates baby's bowels, makes him sleep and eat right, enables him to get full nourishment from his food, so he increases in weight as he should. With each package you get a book on Motherhood worth its weight in gold.

Just a word of caution. Look for the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher on the package so you'll be sure to get the genuine. The forty-cent bottles contain thirty-five doses.

Slacker

George Bernard Shaw was taking pot shots at modern society. "Old age has only itself to blame if it has found that the young people do not treat it with respect. Actions that are natural for infants, forgivable in youth, become unpardonably silly in old age.

"A curate was admonishing a sweet young thing for lack of respect to her grandmother, when the girl impatiently interrupted him.

"'I know that grandma is old and feeble,' she admitted; 'but that is no reason why she shouldn't sweep up her own cigarette ashes.'"

INTO THE ARMS OF HER RESCUER

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

ALL the way home from the pasture Nancy's heart refused to quiet down as a normal heart should—after her terrible experience with the "black racer" snake. She had walked right up on the horrible thing—which had reared its head high into the air and proceeded to chase the screaming Nancy—straight into the very arms of her rescuer. And how could her heart become normal after that?

The young man had been plowing in the field alongside Aunt Sarah's pasture; Nancy had heard the staccato "sput-sput" of his tractor all morning—for she had been there in the pasture almost all the morning searching diligently for turkey nests, according to Aunt Sarah's rigid instructions—and wishing heartily that she had never seen Aunt Sarah and her crazy old turkey hens!

Nancy hadn't wanted to leave all her friends and come down to stay with Aunt Sarah while Uncle Oliver went to California, but her mother was not the kind of a woman to refuse her sister the loan of a daughter in a time of need, so Nancy had come. Her mother had said to her upon her departure, "No sacrifice goes unrewarded, Nancy, dear," but a very lonely and discontented Nancy she'd been—thoroughly unhappy—until now.

What would Aunt Sarah say when she heard that she had run squarely into a young man's arms—and such arms they were—strong as steel! And such eyes—all filled with suppressed laughter. But he hadn't laughed—not then! Later, of course, they both had. And, Nancy reflected, he was a farmer boy. She'd never known they looked like that—could talk like that! Why, he was head and shoulders nicer than any boy in her set at home—with his clean-cut features, his eager, appreciative eyes, his straight black hair—and form, why he walked like a prince! Even in his jumper and overalls and his broad hat—but wouldn't he be a stunner in his extra best! And he lived right over the hill there, in the white house with the rambler rose—

"Your Aunt Sarah knows the Flemings," he had told her, and he hoped he'd see her often. How on earth was Nancy's heart to ever become normal again?

"What under the sun, Nancy Crowell!" exclaimed Aunt Sarah when she reached the house. "Your dress is torn half off—your neck is scratched—and your cheeks red—what's happened?"

Nancy turned about, searching frantically for the tear. "Where, Aunt Sarah? Where's it torn?"

"There, across your back—on the shoulders."

And he hadn't told her, thinking, no doubt, that she would be embarrassed!

"No wonder," cried Nancy resentfully, "chased by a darned old snake through bushes and briers! If it hadn't been for that Fleming boy I'd have been bitten—"

"By a racer?" laughed Aunt Sarah. "Oh, they won't hurt you, what did Charley say?"

"Is that his name? Charley—Charley—Charley Fleming—"

"Well, for goodness' sake, don't get silly, Nancy! He's married—been married for nearly two years, to the prettiest girl in Turner county. I've been expecting to go over there any time—I told Patty I'd come if she needed me."

It would be unfair to Nancy to diagnose her heart after that—a double shock to it. But it was still far from normal even by the next night when an urgent knock soon after supper took Aunt Sarah to the front door. She returned to the kitchen, where Nancy was washing dishes, and reached for her storm shoes under a shelf in the pantry. It had been raining all afternoon.

"It's Charley," she said. "I've got to go over there. You won't be afraid here, will you?"

"Gee, I don't know! Nancy's eyes grew round, and unconsciously she shuddered.

To Nancy it looked the other way around. There was the dark, and the beating rain, and the terrible aloneness to fear! She locked all the doors securely after Aunt Sarah had gone out to Charley Fleming, waiting on the porch. Then she finished the dishes and brushed up the floor. After that there was nothing to do but read. Nancy couldn't make enough noise, even reading aloud, to forget the rain—and the wind was getting up, whipping against the house angrily.

She looked out the kitchen window, shading her eyes with her cupped hands. She felt suddenly chilly, and stuck another stick of wood into the range. Then she settled down with her feet in the oven and tried to read again. But there was no use! All at once she realized that she was homesick. She wanted her mother—wanted her desperately—and Nancy's face began suddenly to pucker, her eyes made ready to keep pace with the weeping clouds—when a startling knock sounded loudly upon the front door. She got up and went, falteringly, into the hall.

"Who's there?" she called cautiously, a frightened pounding in her throat.

"It's I—the snake charmer!" answered a voice which Nancy remembered well. Aunt Sarah had doubtless forgotten something and had sent him back for it. Nancy let him in. The rain was dripping from his hat and storm coat. "It's turning cold—did you know it?" he said, shivering. "That wind cuts. It'll be clear by morning."

"I've got a fire in the kitchen," offered Nancy. "I was chilly myself—and scared half to death!"

"Your Aunt Sarah said you would be. She came down to the barn where I was through the rain, and told me to come over here and stay with you."

Nancy stirred up the fire while he took off his coat and hung it behind the stove.

"I put my horse in the barn," he said as if to break the awkward silence.

Nancy brushed a crumb or two from the tablecloth and straightened a chair. The wind howled and came in spiteful dashes.

"This rain will be fine for the land," he remarked. "That wind's in the northwest. It'll be clear by morning."

"I believe," said Nancy, sitting down abruptly, "that I heard you say so before!"

He laughed and drew up a chair for himself, near the stove.

"Lots of difference in today and yesterday—it was hot as blazes yesterday. You wouldn't find snakes out today!"

"Please," said Nancy, shuddering, "don't talk about snakes!"

She was extremely uncomfortable. What on earth would they talk about? She thought men walked the floor or the yard and tore their hair at a time like this! Certainly she'd never heard of one going through a rainstorm to keep a young lady company—and stealing eager glances at her every so often, while his voice fairly trembled with happiness! What right had he to act like that—why was he not at home by his wife's side—what had Aunt Sarah meant by sending him to stay with her? She would much rather be alone—even if the old house should blow down on her!

"You must tell me all about yourself," he was saying. "How long are you going to be here?"

"I think," said Nancy, frigidly, "that I'll go home tomorrow!"

"Tomorrow? Why, gee whiz, and I've scarcely seen you! Say, please don't go tomorrow!" His voice was low and earnest; his eyes pleading.

"I'm going to bed!" she cried, shaking with anger. "And you'd better go home to your wife—where you belong!" Tears blinded her so that she stumbled on Aunt Sarah's braided rug—and would have fallen had not a pair of steel-strong arms caught her for the second time in the last thirty-six hours.

"To my what?" he demanded, holding her firmly by the arms.

"Say, Nancy Crowell," he said, determinedly, "I don't know who you've got me mixed up with—but I'm certainly not married! I'm just plain Phil Fleming and I can't see—"

"Phil Fleming!" Nancy turned back and stared. "I thought you were Charley Fleming—"

"Jumping froglegs! No wonder you told me to go home!"

"Aunt Sarah—when I told her about the snake chasing me into your—into you—she said it was Charley."

"She didn't think about me—because I've been away to an agricultural college for months. I recall now that she said tonight when she sent me over here, 'Phil, tell Nancy that I didn't know you were back.'"

Nancy put another stick of wood into the range while Phil brought her a cushioned chair from the living room. Then they spied Uncle Oliver's checker-board on the shelf and brought it down, pretending to play—but they had so much to talk about that it wasn't much of a game—nor did they talk about snakes, either!

Before they knew it the clock was striking twelve off somewhere in the house, and in came Charley, radiant, with a very tired Aunt Sarah—and Nancy and Phil had to say a most reluctant good-night.

Sicilian Baker Given Credit for First Cake

Thearion, a baker who lived in Sicily in the Fifth century, B. C., was the inventor of the cake, according to a tradition. It is certain that the Romans were extremely fond of pastry, and cakes or "galettes" appeared on the altars, at the tables of the wealthy and even in the scanty repasts of the poor.

When the Romans invaded England they brought with them the custom of breaking a cake or biscuit over the head of a bride. The fragments were then collected and given her to divide among her friends. The custom betokened fruitfulness, hospitality and prosperity, and was in vogue in the British Isles for many centuries after the Romans departed.

The Teutonic pagans also had their custom of offering Yule cakes of fine flour sweetened with honey to the god Thor. Such a cake became, in the process of time, the plum cake so popular in England at Christmas time, according to some students of ancient customs.—Detroit News.

Fawn's Foster Mother

Mrs. E. Cooper, who lives on a homestead bordering the Glacier National park game preserve, is visited every morning by a fawn that leaves its mother in the forest, to nurse the cow while Mrs. Cooper is milking. The mother deer patiently waits for the fawn at a safe distance and appears to be contented to allow this relay relief furnished by the cow. The cow offers no objection and Mrs. Cooper generously "spares the milk" because she likes to pet the fawn.

Motorman Was Dozing

A lone woman passenger entered an electric car scheduled to leave a junction point at Concord, N. H., shortly after another had pulled away. The other left but her car still stayed. All the other cars had left by the various lines. The motorman sat on the stool, but minutes passed and the car did not move. Finally she could stand it no longer and spoke sharply to the motorman. He jerked back as if an explosion had occurred. "Thank you, madam," he exclaimed, "I'd gone to sleep."

MOTORISTS ARGUE FOR ADDITIONAL SAFETY MEASURES ON HIGHWAYS

Convince Officials of Perils on Many Crowded Roads—Prevention of Dust an Important Matter to Be Considered.

DESPITE the increase in the use of white painted guard rails, whitewashed traffic indicators of one sort or another and more elaborate danger signals, automobile accidents are steadily growing more numerous, automobile associations point out in reviewing the summer's casualties.

The next great important step to reduce the number of accidents will be the elimination of dust, in the opinion of those associations.

Dust, in spite of the greater mileage of concrete roads, is causing many accidents, a condition due in part to the constantly growing highway congestion.

High winds and passing cars raise dust clouds that have been compared with the smoke screens of naval destroyers. Through that screen the average motorist must guess his way and trust to luck that no one is directly in his path, the automobilists assert.

In some sections of the country, where motorists have been able to convince officials of the perils in dust-covered highways, the authorities are applying chemicals to the road surface, particularly calcium chloride, a moisture-absorbing material that lays the dust. The prevention of dust is unquestionably a large factor in any safety first campaign.

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of One Hundred Fifty-nine Dollars and eighty-four cents ($159.84), being the balance due and unpaid of the semi-annual installment of amortized principal and interest which became due and payable on the 11th day of October, 1926, and to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to One Hundred Seventy-one Dollars and eighty-eight cents ($171.88), which became due and payable on the 11th day of April, 1927, the 11th day of October, 1927, and the 11th day of April, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage; and to pay the general taxes on said mortgaged premises for the year 1923, which taxes the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, in default of said mortgagors to pay the same, paid on the 16th day of May, 1925, to-wit: the sum of Seventy-five Dollars and two cents ($75.02), which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Five Thousand Two Hundred Twenty-four Dollars and eighty-one cents ($5,224.81), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 11th day of April, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and Six Hundred Seventy-five Dollars and forty-eight cents ($675.48) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $159.84 thereof from November 17th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $171.88 thereof from April 11th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $171.88 thereof from October 11th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $171.88 thereof from April 11th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Six Thousand Fifty-eight Dollars and forty-seven cents ($6,058.47), including the amount paid for taxes, as aforesaid, with interest thereon at seven per cent. from said date of payment;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

Lots One (1) and Two (2), and the South Half of the Northeast Quarter (S½ of NE¼) of Section Five (5), Township One Hundred Fifty-four (154), Range Forty-two (42); and Lots Seven (7) and Eight (8), less one acre for school site, in Section Thirty-two (32), Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155), Range Forty-two (42);

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 14th day of July, 1928, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, including said taxes paid as aforesaid, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Dated May 31st, 1928.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXVII

The Cream Separator: The cream separator was invented just 50 years ago. It was the forerunner of modern dairying and one of the early inventions to lighten the work in farm homes.

A separator in good running condition removes practically all the butterfat in milk. In poor running condition it may leave as much as one fourth of the butterfat in the skimmilk. Have the skimmilk tested from time to time to see that the separator is doing good work.

The separator should stand on a solid level foundation, should be kept clean, well oiled and in good repair.

Cream should test from 30 to 55 per cent. It keeps sweet longer and is more economical to handle in the creamery than lower testing cream. Cream test varies according to the position of the cream screw, the richness and temperature of the milk, the rate of milk flow through the bowl and the speed of the machine.

Few Votes Cast Tuesday

Wm. Paskewitz, A. Bjerk and H. T. Lasron were the judges at the primary election on Monday. Geo. Fricker and Rev. L. M. Redal were the clerks.

The voting was kind of light as there was not much opposition for the candidates at this time. The big race will be on at the election in the Fall.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Peterson and Mr. and Mrs. Ole Christianson motored to Moorhead Sunday for a few days visit with relatives. They all returned home on Tuesday except Mrs. Peterson who remained there to go to the teachers summer school.

Installed New Churn

The creamery here installed a big new churn last week. It is driven by an electric motor that is geared directly to the churn.

The creamery sold their other churn to the owner of the creamery at Highlanding.

A. Anfinson, A. Bjerk. K. O. Flakne and D. Nyberg made a trip to Camel Lake near Bemidji on Sunday. They brought back a nice catch of Northern Pike.

Olaf Ness made trip to Duluth on Monday and brought back a new Whippet coach that he traded for rently.

New Train Schedule

The Great Northern changed its train schedule again here this week. The northbound train arrives here at about eleven in the morning, and the southbound at about five in the afternoon.

The people on the routes that got the News on Monday under the schedule we had here the past few weeks, will now start getting the paper on Saturday.

Patrol Teams Taken Off

Nels Ness made a business trip to Crookston on Monday. He has now been tranferred from his section as road patrolman here, and has now taken over the stretch north towards Middle River, which was maintained by Arvid Peteron. Mr. Peterson was left without work through the new change.

The road from south will now be patroled by truck as far north as to the turn to Newfolden.

There is only three team patrols between here and Warroad now. The rest of the highway is motorized.

Swedes to Picnic

There will be a big Swedish Picnic at Squaw Point, in Thief River Falls, Sunday, June 24th.

A big program has been arranged to start at about noon.

R. J. Lund and family of Thief River visited here Wednesday.

A lot of rain has fallen here the past week. The farmers report that the hay crop is coming along good.

Train 250,000 in Summer Camps

United States to Spend $20,000,000 for Preparedness This Year.

Washington.—Uncle Sam will materially aid the great out-of-doors movement in America this summer by sending more than 250,000 men into barracks and life in tents, clad in army uniforms, to get fresh air and exercise, as part of his preparedness program. Into this mighty task he will pour many millions of dollars and a world of effort.

During a 15-day period more than 19,000 reserve officers of the army will be put through their paces. Ten of these officers will be put on duty here with the War department for a year, 110 with the air corps for a year, 144 from six weeks to three months with the service schools, and 336 with the citizens' military training camps as instructors.

In the reserve officers' training corps camps, lasting six weeks, 7,200 students from colleges and universities will be given a taste of real military life. From that source the army will drawn many of its officers of the future.

Will Train 33,000 Youths.

More than 33,000 of the youth of the nation will be afield for 30 days' training in the citizens' military training camps and more than 161,000 men of the country's National Guard.

Assisting in training all these various branches of the military establishment, which is now known as the army of the United States, will be 12,000 officers and 118,750 enlisted men of the regular army and 6,060 Philippine scouts. Nearly the entire regular army will be used in training the civilian components, but in addition the "regulars" themselves will have exercises and maneuvers.

The bill for the summer training activities of the government will be close to $20,000,000. For the National Guard $9,603,532 will be expended for pay and allowances. For the reserve officers $2,583,667 has been allotted by congress, with $673,552 for those to be in training for a period greater than fifteen days and with $463,614 allowed for mileage to take them to and from camps. For the C. M. T. C. $2,801,240 has been set aside for mileage and other expenses. For the R. O. T. C. $2,970,000 is allowed for total upkeep.

These training centers are located all over the country in each army corps area and will be in full blast from June 15 to September 1.

While the army is busily engaged putting the finishing touches on plans for the summer camps, the navy, too, is busy.

Navy to Train 9,500 Sailors.

Tentative plans of the navy call for training 1,325 officers and 9,500 enlisted men. This represents a jump in the number of enlisted men, for last year only 5,285 underwent training.

A large share of the naval reservists' training will be afloat, the department utilizing twenty-five destroyers, in addition to four gunboats on the Great Lakes, for the 15-day training periods.

The marine corps is also shaping up plans for summer training. Most of the training is done at Quantico, Va., and it is expected that about 600 men and 200 officers will receive a stiff infantry workout.

Poker Game of Chance, Is Ruling for All Italy

Rome.—Poker is a game of chance, Italy's court of cassation, the highest in the land, has ruled, and the Fascist newspapers, which have been conducting strong antigambling campaigns, rejoice editorially.

Little games of penny ante at home or club are not likely to be disturbed at the decision, since it stipulates that the "aim or lucre" must be established as the preliminary to any prosecution.

Also "due account must be taken of the age and social and economic condition of the player," in other words, professional poker and playing for high stakes by the working classes is distinctly discouraged.

Two men were arrested for playing poker in a cafe of Novaro. They were gambling, ruled the judge of the lower court. Mere recreation, maintained both defendants, who then appealed to the court of cassation.

Lindy "Angel Gabriel" to Mexican Indian Village

Mexico City.—Lindbergh is the Angel Gabriel to an Indian village in Chiapes, near the Guatemalan border, and probably always will be.

Travelers from the tropics have brought in the tale that at the time Lindbergh flew from Mexico to Guatemala this village became excited over the story that an image of the Virgin of Guadalupe had miraculously appeared upon the trunk of a great palm tree. Accounts of such appearances crop up often in various parts of Mexico.

Investigators could not find the image. The Indians insisted it had been there. "As proof that the image appeared," they said, "there was another miracle that day. The Angel Gabriel flew over our village to see the image himself. We saw the image and we saw the Angel Gabriel."

The Indians had never heard of Lindbergh and when told of him refused to believe. The rest of the world may accept, if it pleases, that Lindbergh flew that day from Mexico City to Guatemala City. The Indians hold to the Angel Gabriel theory.

One Out of 20 Girls Confesses to Corsets

Milwaukee.—Only one out of twenty of the 1,318 working girls admitted wearing a corset during a clothing survey made at the Milwaukee Vocational school. Half the girls, earning an annual average income of $404.02, wore silk underwear, accounting for only 12 cents in the clothing dollar, according to a report made to the American Society of Home Economics and Science Service. The girls averaged fifteen pairs of stockings and four pairs of shoes per year and used two and a half boxes of powder, one and a half boxes of rouge and one lipstick. The girls included ranged from the ages of fourteen to eighteen and lived at home.

War Grenades Still Take Toll of Lives

Paris.—Nearly ten years after the conclusion of the armistice old shells and grenades of the great war still are claiming a toll of lives and injuries.

Explosions of these war relics, found in former battlefields, cause casualties of some sort practically every week. Eight people recently were killed and seven were gravely wounded within three days in various parts of France when they tried to take home these deadly souvenirs of the war.

A catastrophe which might have cost many lives was averted near Douai by the timely discovery of an old German mine loaded with 200 kilograms of powder in front of the Libercourt station. The explosive had been buried two meters deep so as to blow up the station, tracks and neighboring buildings by electrical connections. Had a worker's pick struck the shell, as it almost did, war plans would have been realized a decade too late.

Although many of the victims are persons desirous of having sinister reminders of the world conflict, a great number are junk dealers who are trying to utilize valuable metal to be found in old war material. Still others are children who strike the explosives just to see if they will go off.

Moose Unafraid of Man on Lake Superior Isle

Winnipeg.—Isle Royale, in Lake Superior, off Port Arthur, Ont., is of interest not only to the naturalist and advocate of conservation of wild life in North America, but to students of ancient civilizations on the continent as well, Frank M. Warren, vice president of the Minneapolis chapter of the Izaak Walton league, said at a reunion of the Veteran Scouts' association in Fort William.

Isle Royale lies in northern Lake Superior, 16 miles off the Canadian mainland. It teems with wild animal and bird life, the speaker said, and also was the scene of copper mining of ancient Americans. Ruined shaft houses and shallow pits there are to be excavated this summer by scientists from American universities studying these ancient people.

Mr. Warren said that several thousand moose live on the island without fear of man. Naturalists have been able to go there and carry on studies of moose and other wild life as in no other part of the country.

GOTHAM POLICEMAN FINDS HE OWNS FAMOUS FIDDLE

Stradivarius Lay in Coal Bin for Thirty Years Until Daughter Decided to Learn to Play.

New York.—A Stradivarius violin which for 30 years lay in the dust in a grimy coal bin in Port Chester has just been discovered. The instrument is the property of John Dyer, who, though he lives in Port Chester, does duty as a patrolman in Rye. Recently Patrolman Dyer went into a Port Chester music shop with a brown paper parcel under his arm. He had an old fiddle, he said, and wanted the coal dust cleaned out of it, because his daughter desired to learn to play the violin.

The dealer picked up the instrument, blew some of the coal grime off, and squinted inside. Right then and there he offered the policeman $1,500 for his fiddle. Afterward Dyer said that if the offer had been $35 he would have accepted it gladly. The size of the offer interested him to such an extent that, though dealers from all Westchester bargained with him, he took the violin to New York.

Experts found that the instrument was a No. 5 Stradivarius, made in 1736. The policeman promptly had it insured for $50,000.

Back in Rye, Robert Kahn, a musician, played on the fiddle—by then it was quite free from coal dust—and offered Dyer $22,000 for it. Dyer received $75 from Kahn, who used the instrument a week in concerts in Philadelphia. When he returned it the policeman placed the fiddle in the vault of the Port Chester National bank.

Beyond the fact that his father gave him the instrument to play with Patrolman Dyer knows little about the violin. It is believed, however, that his grandfather possessed it. It reached the coal bin because Dyer doesn't care for musical instruments of any kind.

Sickly Rose Bushes Should Be Burned

Washington.—Burning of all infected plants, Department of Agriculture investigators have concluded, is the only way to eradicate graft canker after it attacks rose bushes which have been grafted.

The disease sometimes appears on or near the point where the stock and scion are joined, affecting either or both, and if it entirely circles the stem the bark cracks, the wood tissue becomes rotted and water soaked, and the plant quickly dies.

Some plants are more susceptible than others to this disease, which may be detected by the formation of the canker or callus and the wilting of the leaves. It is most likely to appear in forcing frames, and no means of control are known for plants once infected.

Labor nourishes noble souls.

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian and secret service man, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old.

Stella listened, wide-eyed, dumb with amazement. She was not ignorant of world events outside her valley; newspapers, magazines and novels had all been brought into it from time to time; and she had read them and absorbed them. But she had done so from the wrong angle. Since childhood she had listened to the tales told by the outlaws of police tyranny and treachery of which they were the innocent victims, and she had naturally sympathized with the tellers and had become firmly convinced that all outlaws were heroes and that all officers of the law were tools of a cruel and vicious code of laws framed to enable a few wicked men to crush those who were brave enough to stand up against them.

To Stella, Fair's words came as a terrible, an unbelievable shock—a shock that later, when she absorbed it, would shatter the very foundations of her life. She could not take it all in a moment. It seemed to her that Fair must be wrong somewhere, though she could not find words to combat what he said.

But at last she answered, feebly but all womanly. "Well, never mind, daddy," she said. "I'll never believe that you did anything wrong to anybody. And as for not sending me away, I suppose you couldn't because those hateful police wouldn't let you—and that's the only good thing I've ever heard of their doing." Desperately the girl was trying to take the blow lightly.

Fair nodded. He knew how severe the shock must have been to Stella and he gladly followed her lead. "Yes," he said, "that's my only excuse. I couldn't send you back at once, not with safety to you or to me. And after a year you had grown too dear to me. . . . But now the hour of punishment is at hand."

"What do you mean?" Stella did not understand.

"I mean that you are not a child any more. You have grown up. You have become a woman—and a very lovely one, if you were properly dressed. When you put on those woman's clothes that Barker brought you a month ago I realized it. That was why I made you take them off quick before anyone saw you. I was afraid. But I was too late. Barker had seen you and wanted to marry you—"

"Barker?" Stella blushed. But she laughed scornfully. "Wasn't he ridiculous? He's as old as you, dads? And, anyhow, I don't want to get married. I'm not a girl really. I'm a boy. I decided to be a boy years ago; and I've never changed."

"Not in your own mind, Bob. But in other people's—Barker's, for instance."

"Oh, darn Barker!"

"Darning him won't do any good, Bob. He's not given up the hope of getting you. And if it wasn't he, it would be some one else. You—you're not safe here any longer, Bob. I can't be sure that I can protect you—not even for a week ahead. You must go away." Fair's voice quavered.

"Then you'll go with me!" Stella's chin set mutinously.

"I can't go with you. The minute Barker knew that I had gone he'd set the police on my track, and I couldn't possibly escape. They'd catch and hang me in a week."

"Ha—hang you? Oh, daddy!"

"There's no chance for anything else." Fair pushed his advantage. "It's up to you, Bob. I can stay here and protect you as long as possible—till one of Barker's friends shoots me down. Or I can go with you and get caught. Or I can send you alone—"

"But—but—" Stella was weakening; "I can't go alone—"

"I don't mean really alone, of course. I've sent word to your people—"

"Daddy!"

"Yes. Don't breathe a word to a soul. I sent Jack Green East two weeks ago to find them and tell them to come for you. They may turn up any day. That's why—"

"But suppose they don't come? Suppose they don't want me?"

"They will want you. They're Virginians. And I know the Morton breed. I was a Virginia gentleman myself once. Oh, yes! They'll come."

"But—oh—"

"They'll love you and make you one of the family; and you'll live the life you were born to. Later you'll marry some good, honest Virginia boy—"

"I won't! I won't! I'm going to stay a boy myself."

"Yes, you will, some day. But we can leave that to time. You needn't marry anyone till you want to, you know. But once you're away from this nest of d—d thieves and murderers—"

"Daddy" Stella put her small, browned fingers on his lips.

Fair dropped back in his chair. "Oh, all right," he said. "Call them what you like. The point is that Green may be getting back nearly any day and that I wanted you to know and be prepared. And when your relative comes you'll have to go quick. Barker's spy system is good; and he's likely to find out what's up if your man has to wait around long. Now go to bed, child. It's late, and—"

But Stella shook her head. "I'm not sleepy, dad," she demurred. "I feel as if I'd never sleep again. I don't want to go to bed. I want to know—so many things. You must tell me about them, daddy. Please! Please! Pretty please!"

Far into the night Stella and Fair talked.

Far Into the Night Stella and Fair Talked.

CHAPTER III

After Fair's startling revelation the days once more took up their course, as days will and must, superficially peaceful and quiet on the surface, but, for Stella at least, wildly turbulent below it.

She did not want to leave the only home that she could remember, but—she did want to see the big, far-off world of which she had heard so much. She fingered her boy's clothes, wondering how she could ever bear to hamper herself in women's garments, but—she dreamed also of soft robes and gleaming colors, and of the bright lights of the ballroom. She could not bear to leave her foster father, but—the idea of playing with boys of her own age and perhaps finding among them one who might l—lo—. But at this point she always pulled herself up short with a red, red blush; the idea of a boy making love to her was too new as yet to be readily entertained.

Meanwhile Fair was worrying because Green had not come back. He could feel the insubordination in the band growing, and he knew that at any moment it might flare into open revolt. Once Stella was gone he would welcome—would incite—a showdown; but until she was gone he could only walk delicately.

If he could have kept the men busy he would have been less concerned, for busy men are far less likely to make trouble than are idle ones. But somehow all his plans for raids of any kind were not ready or had fizzled out completely; and he strongly suspected that Barker had been instrumental in bringing about this condition in the expectation of making the men discontented.

Georgia "Crackers"

Authorities differ as to the origin of the term "Crackers," as applied to natives of Georgia. According to Olmstead, the nickname was applied to these people on account of their peculiar dialect, almost incomprehensible and difficult to report or describe. Another theory is that the name was given because cracked corn formed their chief article of diet. In a publication dated 1835, it is stated that the "Crackers" received their name because they were accustomed to using a particular form of whip, which had a piece of buckskin at the end known as a "cracker."

Latest in Seaplanes

In three minutes a tiny new French airplane, said to be the smallest in the world, can be assembled piece by piece on the deck of a floating submarine and made ready for flight. It is reported to rise from the water in nine seconds and a few minutes later to attain a height of 200 feet. This kind of plane will be carried by every submarine in the French navy.

Puts An End to Bunion Pains
No Need to Suffer Another Day
There is one simple yet inexpensive way to reduce inflammation of swollen toe joints and help get them down to normal and that is to apply Moone's Emerald Oil night and morning.
Ask any first class druggist for an original two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) and refuse to accept anything in its place. It is such a highly concentrated preparation that two ounces lasts a long time and furthermore if one bottle of Emerald Oil does not give you complete satisfaction you can have your money refunded.
Special note: People who want to reduce swollen or varicose veins should get a bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil at once. Applied night and morning as directed they will quickly notice an improvement which will continue until the veins and bunches are reduced to normal.

SURVEY TRAFFIC LANES IN PACIFIC

Lines for Use by All Steamers Suggested.

Washington.—An American plan to lay off definite east and west traffic lanes in the vast Pacific will be presented at the international conference for the safety of life at sea in London next year.

Traffic regulation in the crowded Atlantic was organized at the last London conference in October, 1924. Since then, winter and summer, ships of all nations have followed across the north Atlantic the charted routes that were suggested then by the hydrographic office of the United States navy and adopted by 18 British, Dutch, French, German and American steamship lines.

There are seven transatlantic routes or "tracks," the three more southern, lettered A to C, being from American ports and the other four, D to G, from Canadian. Definite seasons are allotted for the use of each. A, for example, the extra southern track, is used from March to July; B, the southern track, from March to September, and C, the northern track, from September to February.

The familiar rule, "Keep to the right," is followed on all but one of the twenty-mile-wide Atlantic lanes, east-bound traffic using the southern ten miles of each and west-bound using the northern ten miles. On one Canadian route, from Halifax, the order is reversed.

Danger of collisions between east-bound and west-bound vessels has never been so great in the Pacific as in the Atlantic because of the smaller volume of traffic and the greater size of the ocean. Several years ago, however, the navy hydrographic office charted east and west routes from Seattle and Portland to Yokohama by way of Honolulu, and it is thought that the time has come to present them for international acceptance.

The routes from Portland and Seattle would follow approximately the line of the great circle to Yokohama, and vessels passing each other would keep to the right, as in the Atlantic. But in the Honolulu to Yokohama lanes this order would be reversed and vessels would keep to the left, as in the automobile traffic of London and Ontario. This is due to the fact that the west-bound route has been charted far to the south of the east-bound in order to take advantage of the Japan current. By heading toward the north after leaving Yokohama, east-bound vessels are helped by the north-flowing current, and by approaching from the south, west-bound ones are not hindered by it.

Great "Smelt Stallion" Immortalized in Stone

Nikolaiken, East Prussia.—By erecting at the Nikolaiken bridge a pillar crowned with the so-called "smelt stallion" or "king of the smelts," the city council has commemorated an ancient myth connected with the city's history. Nikolaiken is situated near the great Spirding lake, which is noted for its smelt fishery. According to the ancient saga, a fisherman of the city once succeeded in catching the "Stinthengst" (literally "smelt stallion") the king of the smelts. The wise city fathers refused to let it be killed, and instead fastened it to the city bridge by a chain. Thereupon all the smelts came to their king and became easy prey for the fishermen. It is this "king" who has now been immortalized in stone.

Beggar Tots Present Problem to Schools

Tokyo, Japan.—In Japan the law requires that beggars' children, as well as the more prosperous, must receive a certain amount of education. The Tokyo municipality has discovered that there are more than 100 mendicant youths in the capital who are "playing hookey" from school, and has done everything possible to induce these children to attend the primary grades, but with little success.

Most of the parents of these youngsters use their children for begging on the streets and are not anxious to have them in school. The beggar youths average about 10 cents a day, in addition to the food they are able to beg. Erection of a special school for these children is now under consideration.

Crops Grow in Day in Tropical Alaska

Seattle, Wash.—Folks, here's the place to put in your spring garden. Up in the "tropical" belt in the Laird district of Alaska, where British Columbia touches Yukon territory, Fred Perry declares crops grow in 24 hours.

A number of florists and truck gardeners are planning an excursion into the region to investigate reports. It is said certain kinds of vegetables, such as lettuce and radishes, reach prodigeous size in 24 to 30 hours owing to the earth being warm and filled with fertilizing qualities.

The extensive valley is surrounded by high hills in which hot springs continually emit steam and mist.

WILL DIG UP OLD FORT OF MEXICO

Scientist Plans to Excavate Monte Alban.

Mexico City.—A party of investigators, headed by Alfonso Caso, archeologist, and Miguel D. de Mendizabel, ethnologist, representing the Mexican Historical Review, will begin a study, before the end of the current year, of the ancient fortified mountain city known as Monte Alban near the city of Oaxaca.

Monte Alban is part of the relics of strange prehistoric builders who modified entire mountain skylines by carving terraces and erecting pyramids until they looked like scallops on a petticoat.

Practically nothing is known of the race that conceived the unique notion of leaving its mark notched on the upland horizon, and the archeological city was old and deserted when the Spanish came to subdue Oaxaca along with the rest of Mexico.

Looks Like Work of Moles.

Today, swathed in its age-old padding of earth and vegetation, the site of Monte Alban, seen from its highest point, suggests the work of giant moles which burrowed and upheaved on a geometrical plan. The city whose angles are now curves, whose square pyramids are grassy mounds, and whose sunken terrace gardens are dimples in the earth, looks down upon modern green and white and pink Oaxaca nestling in the sunny valley 1,000 feet below and five kilometers away.

The ridges are leveled off at different heights, and a series of mounds and terraces result that are as confusing in their number and extent as the layout of a large city. The mounds were flat-topped pyramids on which superstructures once stood, as stumps of walls sticking out of the covering of grass still show, and there are many remains of fortifying walls, forming battlements for terraces that overlooked the approaches to the mountain city.

There are series of sunken rectangular terraces surrounded by ancient structures raised on sloping sides that give the quadrangles the appearance of modern football fields with the grandstands all around. Piles of stone and weed-smothered earth left in the centers of these inclosures suggest that they were altars.

No systematic excavations have been made in Monte Alban, but the evidence of occasional haphazard ones is significant. A pyramid structure that has been probed by a series of tunnels in a search for hidden treasure reveals that it is built up of seven artificial levels of broken stone filled with earth and capped by pavements of lime concrete.

In the sides of several terraces or mounds there are ancient sepulchers that have been sacked, but the corbelled stone-lined vaults remain, showing their great similarity to Maya architecture farther south. Narrow entrances leading to the tombs are picture galleries lined with stone slabs carved with human figures that perhaps represented persons who were buried there in ancient times.

Dispute Over Ownership.

Some people in the region claim that Monte Alban was the fortified borderland between the land of the Zapotecs, who built the ancient city of Mitla, some seventy kilometers away, and the Mixtecs, to whom Monte Alban is ascribed, especially by modern Mixtecs living in the villages below. On the other hand, modern Zapotecs claim Monte Alban as theirs.

Mitla and Monte Alban, although very close together, are radically apart in style and perhaps in the time of their building. Mitla is one of the few archeological cities known in middle America that is not built on a series of pyramids as substructures, and there is only one true pyramid on the site. Mitla's most striking feature is the geometrical mosaics of stone that make up its wall panels and friezes, which show a Mexican or northern influence.

Monte Alban, on the other hand, is built entirely on pyramids and terraces, and shows in its corbelled funeral vaults and carved stones a strong Maya influence.

Dr. Manuel Gamio, leading Mexican scientist, believes it possible that Monte Alban may even have been a young Maya city during one of the early steps in the evolution of that race, or may at least be an important link in its history. There seems no doubt that the enormous amount of information there is ready to tap in the many well-known but unexplored archeological sites of Mexico will some day clear up many points in American prehistory.

Greeks Fight Locusts With Cannibal Kin

Washington.—Big predatory locusts, that prey on their fellow insects instead of on growing grain crops, are being tried out in Greece as one means of combating the pest of ordinary locusts now threatening the fields, according to word received here from Athens.

These modern descendants of one of the plagues of Egypt have been causing serious losses to Greek agriculture during the last few years and the ministry of agriculture is preparing to spend 16,000,000 drachmas (approximately $3,200,000) in a campaign against them.

BRET HARTE HERO FOUND IN SWEDEN

Original of Arizona Peter Is Old and Blind.

Stockholm.—The original of Arizona Peter, Swedish hero of one of Bret Harte's stories, has been discovered by a Swedish newspaper to be still alive. He is living in the village of Smedjebacken in his native province.

The old Wild West hero is, however, totally blind. His real name is Per Erik Aastroem, and he is now seventy years old.

Arizona Peter earned a reputation for enterprise and daring. Once when he found a Sioux chief half unconscious, bound and gagged, he got off his horse and saved the Indian. The sweetheart of Aastroem, however, was in Sweden, and, wishing to marry her, he got her a position at a neighboring farm, owned by a Scotch woman.

Shortly after her arrival she and her mistress were captured in their home by a plundering band and carried off. Accompanied by Grey Bear, Sioux chief, Aastroem dashed across the Mexican border, surprised the brigands and rescued the women.

He then rode away and halted on the slope of a narrow canyon through which the robbers had to pass, as Bret Harte tells the story. There the Swede and the Indian shot down 50 of their foes.

One day Aastroem struck a copper vein in the mountains, and soon a group of engineers and miners began to exploit the find. But his fiancee deserted him to marry one of the mining engineers.

In grief Aastroem returned to Sweden, where he found work as a stone cutter. Through an explosion he lost the sight of both his eyes. Since then he has been a brushmaker.

Potato-Tomato Union Good Graft for Farms

St. Louis.—A "good graft" (not of the political variety) which anyone may try and which will reward a little patience with a double crop is described in a recent bulletin of the Missouri Botanical garden. It consists of a tomato vine grafted on a potato stock, which yields tomato fruits above and potato tubers below. The graft is fairly easy to make, it is stated, requiring no more skill than is needed for a similar operation on an apple twig. Apparently the first one on record was made over a century ago by an amateur scientist named De Tchudi, who reported his experiments to the Horticultural institute at Fromont, in France.

Neither partner in this double plant body seems to have any influence on the other. The tomatoes are like those of sister plants grown on their own roots, and the potatoes differ in no way from those grown in the ordinary way from other eyes cut from the same parent tuber.

Juneau, Alaska.—It is impossible for Gov. George A. Parks of Alaska to visit every part of the big territory during one summer so he has adopted the ultra up-to-date method of seeing the country by airplane. June 1, accompanied by Malcolm Elliott, territorial commissioner, and R. J. Sommers, highway engineer, he left here on a flight that will overlook every important settlement and future highway site in the Northland. The three officials will come down at all of the 48 landing fields in Alaska for inspection and rest. The trip will include flights over reindeer herds and fur seal rookeries, mines, Mount McKinley, the Yukon, and Kuskokwin rivers, fisheries, and pulp mills.

Turks Protest Women in Tobacco Industry

Constantinople.—Women have become the cause of labor unrest for the first time in Turkish history in a stormy meeting of the men laborers in the tobacco factories here.

The men demanded that the thousands of Turkish women now working in the factories be dismissed and woman labor be henceforth prohibited because of their willingness to work at wages running from one-half to one-third the sum demanded by the men.

Peltzer's Home Town Has Bogey-Man Clock

In the center of its huge dial there is the terrifying face of a bearded man who every second rolls his eyes from right to left like a bogey man. In his opened mouth he holds a metal plate on which the day of the month is recorded.

The clock adorns the tower of the castle once inhabited by the dukes of Pomerania, and now devoted to municipal purposes. It bears the inscription 1736.

"Knickers" Traced to Drawings of Irving

The word knickerbockers has been traced to the Dutch in the Seventeenth century, but the first record of its use in English, relating to the loose-fitting knee-breeches, dates from 1859. The name is said to have been given to them on account of their likeness to the knee-breeches designed by George Cruickshank to illustrate Washington Irving's "History of New York." This is not, however, to suggest that as garments, knee-breeches were not worn until so late a period, for the breeches worn toward the end of the reign of Charles II gradually got tighter, until William III introduced plain tight knee-breeches that are still worn in England as a part of the court dress. The breeches of the reign of Charles I were loose to the knee, where they ended in a flounce or bow of ribbon, and they continued so during the Commonwealth, but these were called knee-breeches and not knickerbockers.—Literary Digest.

Modern Youth Lives "In Deeds, Not Hours"

"I believe that the incoming generation is going to effect some marvelous changes in this frenzied world of ours." The speaker was Charles M. Schwab.

"I base this prediction on the astonishing initiative and self-reliance of the younger set," he continued. "These qualities are often misapplied and are the butt of unlimited 'wise cracks.'

"I asked a friend of mine one day how his car was running. His reply was: 'You'll have to ask my son, as I haven't seen the car for a week. But don't call him up until noon, as he never rises before then.'

"Now, this father was rather bitter, but, on the other hand, I predict that his boy will be a success."

Mud and Impossibilities

A New York woman was recently called to New England to attend a funeral. In telling of driving through the hub-deep spring mud of the little backwood's community to the cemetery, she made a remark almost startling in its significance.

"It made me feel," she said, "as though I had gone back a generation or so, to the time when there were still impossibilities."

The last four words recall that scene in Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird" where the children are in the cemetery in the dark and at the stroke of 12, light floods the scene, revealing a field of lilies instead of tombstones.

"Where are the dead?" asks Mytyl.

"There are no dead," says Tyltyl.

There are no longer any possibilities!—"In the Stream of Business," by R. R. U. (Robert R. Updegraff) The Magazine of Business.

Ring in a Potato

Thirty years ago a young woman, when digging up a potato patch, lost her wedding ring. Recently one of her sons was turning over the soil when he dug up an old hardened potato with a curious wasp-waisted appearance. Examination showed that it was wearing a ring round its middle. It was the woman's long-lost wedding ring, as was proved by the date and initials engraved on it.

Nested in Overalls

W. C. Cross, bridge tender at Vancouver, B. C., hung his extra pair of overalls in a shed beside the bridge house. A few days later he went to get them to wear and found a wren's nest in one of the pockets. He is now waiting for three little wrens to grow out of his overalls.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Myrtle E. Groshon and Stanley W. Groshon (whose name also appears in said mortgage as Stanley W. Groshown), her husband, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 13th day of November, 1924, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota on the 4th day of December, 1924, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 108 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Ninety-three Dollars and seventy-five cents ($93.75), which became due and payable on the 13th day of November, 1927, and the 13th day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage; and to keep the buildings on said mortgaged premises insured as stipulated in and by the terms of said mortgage, in default of which the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, elected to and did on the 10th day of December, 1927, pay the sum of Twenty-nine Dollars and ninety cents ($29.90) to effect such insurance, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand Eight Hundred Eighty-six Dollars and thirty-seven cents ($2,886.37), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 13th day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and One Hundred Eighty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($187.50) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $93.75 thereof from November 13th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $93.75 thereof from May 13th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Three Thousand One Hundred Nine Dollars and seventy-six cents ($3,109.76), including the amount paid for insurance as aforesaid, with interest thereon at seven per cent. from said date of payment;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Thirty-six (36), in Township One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) North, of Range Forty-one (41), West, containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the Government survey thereof, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 30th day of June, 1928, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, including said insurance paid as aforesaid, and the taxes, if any, on said premises and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Supreme
For homes without electricity, the Maytag is available with the built-in gasoline motor.

EVERY day proves again that the Maytag is supreme, as one out of every three buyers chooses a Maytag. Maytag leadership is also indicated in the definite mark that it has left on present-day washer design. Mere outward appearance, however, should not influence you. The outstanding qualities which gave the Maytag world leadership are still incomparable Maytag features.

Think of the difference between the ordinary washday and the Maytag wash hour—hours saved, effort saved. The seamless, cast-aluminum, heat-retaining tub and the gyrafoam action wash the grimiest clothes clean without hand-rubbing.

The Soft-Roller Water Remover gently but thoroughly removes the soap and water evenly from all parts of the clothes without stretching or pulling them, sparing the buttons and leaving no hard-to-iron wrinkles in the clothes.

Only by washing with a Maytag can you appreciate all its advantages.

This is the time of the year when sweet cream sometimes turn sour in a very short time if it is not properly cared for and, kept in a place where it is so cold that it will not heat up on the way to town. Quite often you will find your cream grading 1st when you actually believed it to be an X when you left your home. A number of patrons forget to cool their mornings cream before coming to the creamery with it. This is bad at any time of the year but more so during the warm summer months. If you haven't time to wait until the morning cream is cooled down, then I would say leave it at home until the next delivery.

Just a word regarding our County Creameries' Picnic. It was gratifying to me to see all the patrons in attendance as well as the businessmen. As one of the committees I will say that next year we should profit from the first years experience. No one anticipated as large a crowd we had, yet I must admit that the parties in charge of coffee cooking showed inexperience as well as being uninterested, in fact they were out of place in such a business. No doubt this picnic will be an annual event, it is a fine thing for all of us, even tho not very many of us got to hear the speakers Sunday. Just to get out and visit with your neighbor and witness a good ball game and other sports is a little change from our old routine.

The attendance at this picnic was proof that the people are glad to come out and take part as long as the weather is favorable and roads are good. When you figure that more than 1800 cars were on the grounds no one will deny that the attendance was less than 8000 and possibly 10,000.

Next week is 4th of July. As that day falls on Wednesday we will receive cream on Monday and Friday only next week. The creamery will be closed on Wednesday and Thursday, July 4th and 5th.

Notice to Patrons

It Is Time!

I am persuaded that we are going into one of the most critical presidential campaigns in the history of our country. I fully believe that the result may be a great disaster to the best interests of the nation—economically as well as morally.

It now seems practically certain that one presidential candidate will be a wet candidate. I have been a life-long consistent Democrat. I have practically always voted the Demacratic ticket, but I feel so strongly upon the preservation of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act that I am frank to say that if the Democratic Party nominates a wet candidate I shall neither uphold him nor vote for him for President. I shall vote for the candidate who stands for Prohibition and for Prohibition enforcement.

I am persuaded that there are tens of thousands of Republicans who in a similar situation would follow the same principle.

It is time that we realized that the highest welfare of the nation is at stake; that we each recognize our personal responsibility; that we demand in unmistakable terms that the man who shall be elected to the foremost office of our nation shall be a dry candidate, a man with sincere and earnest purpose to uphold and enforce, as well as to observe personally, each and every law of the Republic to which before God he has pledged his fealty.

The County Fair

The biggest picnic ever held in the history of Marshall county was held last Sunday, when about seven thousand dairymen, creamery owners, buttermakers and their families held a picnic at the old mill site, at the junction of the once much travelled Pembina trail and the Middle River trail about 12 miles west of Newfolden.

A. A. McGuire, general manager of the Land O' Lakes creameries, Minneapolis also gave a very interesting address.

A couple of good ball games, horseshoe pitching and tug of war were the main features on the sports program.

Nearly every one who was able to go from this community took in the picnic and, upon returning home reported a good time.

New Train Here

The old steam train that has been run here on the Great Northern the past twenty-five years, was taken off this week and replaced by a new gas-electric train, which made its initial run on Tuesday. The train is made up of two cars. One carries the gas engine and electric dynamo and has separate apartments for express, mail and baggage. The other car is a neatly fixed up passenger-coach.

Large Attendance

Many people from this community are already making plans to attend one or more days of the 22nd annual Marhall County Fair to be held in Warren July 9, 10 and 11. The 1928 Fair program is now almost complete and according to the officials it will be one of the greatest expositions ever offered in the county.

Some of the fastest dirt track automobile drivers of the Northwest, including Minneapolis, St. Paul, Virginia, Fargo and Grand Forks, have made inquiries regarding the auto race card at the 1928 Fair, making fair officials feel confident that the races this year will outclass all previous races.

Exhibitors in all parts of the county are preparing their entries for show shape and will compete for the $1,700 to be offered in price money in the various departments. The chief interest this year will center in the boys and girls club departments where every club in the county will be represented.

We urge you to attend one or more days of the fair—you will help a local institution.

Alice Swan and Mary Peterson arrtved here on Sunday from Pontiac, Mich., where they have been employed.

St. John's Episcopal Church, Richmond, Va., Where Patrick Henry Made His Famous "Liberty or Death" Oration.

Where Great Patriot Won Immortality

Lineal descendants of members of the Virginia convention of 1775, regardless of where they were living, went to Richmond, Va., to interpret the roles of their ancestors at the celebration of the one hundred and fifty-second anniversary of the historic stormy meeting in St. John's church, which took place there March 22, 1927.

The stirring scenes of the convention when Patrick Henry took his stand for "liberty or death" were reproduced with utmost care, the descendants in costumes of the day answering to the roll calls and voting on the various motions.

The little building stands in the center of an acre of ground given to the vestry by the second William Byrd, great landowner, founder of Richmond and ancestor of Commander Richard Byrd of Polar fame, and it looks today much as it did in the days before the Revolution.

The honor of having designed and constructed this first house of God in the new town, destined to become one of the most hallowed shrines of the Western world, fell, so the records declare, to Richard Randolph, gentleman, and he completed the work in 1741.

In those early days the church was only 60 feet long and 20 feet wide, and the pulpit was in the east end, where a door has been cut since in what is now the east transept.

Church Is Enlarged.

This was done when the building was enlarged and the pulpit moved to the south end, for the young town on the banks of the James river proved to be more of a church-going community than the vestry had anticipated. Soon it was found to be far too small for the needs of Henrico parish, as the city of Richmond is called to this day in Episcopal parlance.

It was not an expensive structure, this tiny church, where some of the greatest patriots of the age gathered, the original building having cost £817. This amount was paid to Richard Randolph through the sale of 20,000 pounds of tobacco, to be levied on the parish yearly and sold, until the whole payment was complete. The first service in the enlarged building was on Christmas day, 1772.

Then came the epoch-making Boston massacre, which so stirred the colonies toward concerted action against George III.

One convention to consider the matter had been already held in Williamsburg, the colonial capital of Virginia, and now that another was to take place it was considered desirable to hold it in Richmond as being at a safe distance from interruption by Lord Dunmore, the hostile royal governor.

Because Virginia at that time extended from the Atlantic to the Mississippi river, delegates from distant frontiers came on horseback bringing their belongings in saddlebags and were well armed against marauding Indians. By this primitive method of travel they crossed mountains, forded rivers and finally reached the little church on the hill.

Bell's Historic Tolling.

After allowing a few days' grace for stragglers to arrive, the old bell—now in care of the Virginia Historical society—which had pealed for weddings, tolled for funerals and calmly called the reverent to service, rang out its challenging notes calling together the convention, and not even the wisest could know that it was announcing the birth of a nation.

Already Dabney Carr, eminent Virginian, had offered a series of resolutions for a system of intercolonial committees of correspondence which was to prove the first step toward the founding of the Union. At that time, however, there had been some opposition; but among the supporters of Carr were Patrick Henry and Richard Henry Lee, the latter soon to be one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

In addition to Henry, Lee and Carr, there were in that group of liberty-loving Americans George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, Richard Bland Lee and Edmund Pendleton, Benjamin Harrison and Carter Braxton, together with many others.

It will be recalled that one of the first acts of the convention was to offer a resolution declaring that "it was the most ardent wish of the colony and of the whole continent of North America to see a speedy return to those hallowed days when we lived a free and happy people."

Patrick Henry promptly opposed the resolution on the ground that it would lull the public mind into confidence just when its liberties were endangered. He offered a counter-resolution calling for the arming of the colonies and, in turn, was immediately opposed by many of the leaders.

Liberty or Death.

An eyewitness in describing the scene, according to Mary Newton Stanard, distinguished Virginian historian, said that:

"Henry arose with an unearthly fire burning in his eye. He commenced somewhat calmly, but the smothered excitement began more and more to play upon his features and thrill in the tones of his voice.

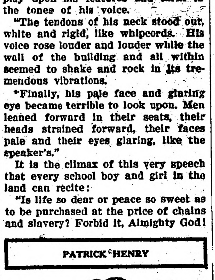
"The tendons of his neck stood out, white and rigid, like whipcords. His voice rose louder and louder while the wall of the building and all within seemed to shake and rock in its tremendous vibrations.

"Finally, his pale face and glaring eye became terrible to look upon. Men leaned forward in their seats, their heads strained forward, their faces pale and their eyes glaring, like the speaker's."

It is the climax of this very speech that every school boy and girl in the land can recite:

"Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!"

PATRICK HENRY



> I HAVE but one lamp by which my feet are guided; and that is the lamp of experience. I know no way of judging of the future but by the past.—Patrick Henry.

According to the same eyewitness:

"When Mr. Henry sat down every eye yet gazed entranced. Men looked beside themselves. . . . I felt sick with excitement."

But it is recorded that a Tory present received a very different impression, for he wrote to a friend, saying:

The resolution was adopted immediately and the name of Patrick Henry—the tongue of Virginia—was enrolled with the immortals, and the little church became a shrine in the hearts of a great people.

Early Observance of Fourth in Far West

What was probably the first Fourth of July celebration on the Pacific coast took place on Queen Charlotte islands, which the early American fur traders insisted on calling Washington islands.

Capt. Joseph Ingraham, in command of the little brigantine Hope of seventy tons from Boston, had his little vessel beached for repairs in a cove on the west coast of the Queen Charlotte group in 1790. He recounted in his journal that July 4, being the anniversary of Independence day, he caused a 70-pound hog to be roasted, and the officers and crew of the vessel ate this on shore. They then toasted the health of President Washington, and went back to the work of repairing the Hope, which had sprung a leak through the keel separating from the stern post.—Vancouver Province.

Revolutionary Army Pay

By a resolution, July 29, 1775, congress allowed privates $6.66⅔ a month. In September of the following year, yielding to force of circumstances, congress voted to give all men enlisting for the war a bounty. They were to receive land in proportion to the rank. Noncommissioned officers and privates were allotted 100 acres. After further debate, congress added to the latter a suit of clothes every year, or $20 in money, if the soldier furnished it himself.

HEART OF FLAMING GOLD

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

"LOVE heals all wounds," said Miss Mary softly.

The girl opposite her lifted her smooth, dark head swiftly. "It is love that wounds," she countered. "I was a happy girl until I looked in the face of love."

"Don't tell me you weren't happy then?"

"Happy," Jean's hands dropped into her lap, the roll of gay silks forgotten. "Yes, too happy. The radiance blinded me and I lived only from moment to moment, the world forgotten. Then," her brown eyes that always reminded Miss Mary of dewy brown pansies, shone with pain and her pink lips quivered, "came a day when I must choose between love and honor."

Cool rain spattered on the hot window panes and a robin outside called for more, apparently not satisfied with the silver drops that cooled the dry grasses and refreshed the thirsty flower petals. Miss Mary glanced at the absorbed face. "I need not ask you how you decided. Your eyes are a guarantee of honor and loyalty. Sometimes the narrow road of truth is difficult but, child, it is the only one for girls like you. It would ruin you to forsake an ideal."

"That isn't what grieves me," exclaimed Jean, resuming her needle resolutely, "it is because the story told me was builded upon a lie. I sent my lover away, refused to again see him and—" Jean's voice broke in spite of her pride—"it was all unnecessary. My chum wanted him herself and she told me a garbled tale that I believed and I felt I couldn't steal a man's heart away from my friend and I promised not to stand in her way. Too late I found that Rose had lied, that he had loved only me."

The invalid watched the downcast face in silence. "I do not wish to pry, my dear, but couldn't you let him know now? Don't let pride stand in the way. He is not to blame for the mistake you made and if he truly loves you he will forgive your lack of faith."

"It wasn't lack of faith. I knew he loved me, but Rose said he had loved her first and that if I'd cease seeing him she would get him back. Rose is very poor and—he is rich. It meant, so she said, everything to her and her mother."

"Love is never wasted. You will meet another man who will cherish you."

"No, I shall love no one else. It isn't pride that keeps me from telling him—it is because I have no idea where he has gone. He was in India the last I heard of him—his picture was in the paper with a lion he'd killed. I've written his club, but my letter was returned. He had left no address."

"A rich man would have houses," objected Miss Mary. "Men like that are obliged to leave addresses for business reasons."

"He has an estate in Long Island, but I don't know exactly where it is. I imagine that he had only a guest card to the club in the city and that's why he left no forwarding address."

Jean, visiting some wealthy friends in the country, had gone to Miss Mary's cottage to read to her, as did many of the neighbors, and she had asked what she could do to help her.

"If you would only cut my pieces for me and join the ends so I can start a new silk rug," Miss Mary had answered, "I can crochet nicely, but I can't manage the large pieces."

Jean's city friends would have been amused at seeing the petted person carefully cutting strips of silk fabrics and then sewing them in the strips required for crocheting. It had seemed a bit bewildering to Jean and she had privately marveled at the thrift of the very poor. To her those bits of silk seemed useless and she would gladly have made a money gift that would have saved the invalid from the necessity of making the rugs to sell, but she'd been warned not to make any mistake. Miss Mary was a gentlewoman and would have been poignantly hurt to any suggestion of charity. So Jean had pricked her white fingers and grown warm with fatigue as she sewed the flimsy bits of silk stockings and ends from discarded gowns.

"Say, Miss Mary, you haven't any rose color. Don't you like gay colors in your rugs?" she had demanded, touching with almost abhorent fingers the drabs and browns.

Miss Mary's eyes twinkled youthfully. "I adore them," she confessed, "and, especially, I love gold. I wish we had one of those metal hats to make the center."

"I have some pieces," cried the artful Jean, who had fished for this opening. "I've an old evening cloak of gold tissue that is lined with rose satin. It is in the ragbag, I'm afraid," she fibbed, "but you won't mind that."

"Mind it?" cried the other rapturously, "bring the pieces next time you come, will you?"

Jean refused a moonlight picnic to get that perfectly good coat cut up into strips, not liking to trust her maid with the work. She was determined that patient Miss Mary should have one rug to her liking.

"Strange that the cloak should have given out," commented the invalid when the rosy flood of satin was thrown on her reclining chair. "It is of marvelous quality and does not look worn."

"One cannot always tell by appearance," bubbled Jean, her eyes dancing gayly as she hunted for a spool of rose silk to join the ends of that silk—the garment had had a Jenny label sewn in it when Jean began her ripping. "I have any number of silk stockings that I'm going to bring down on my next trip. We'll have a ducky rug."

So the heart of that rug was soft, yet flaming gold. Jean had placed the huge ball in Miss Mary's hands as soon as it was rolled: "You begin to crochet and I'll have the rose ready in no time. It was nice long strips," she concluded smiling joyously at her little secret.

The rose satin was embroidered in threads of gold and the even rows that encircled the heart of gold made a brave showing.

"Jean, I can't sell it," breathed the invalid when it was finished. "I'd rather sell my tulip quilt that I've always refused to part with. Isn't this exquisite? It reminds me of radiant youth, these glowing colors that look as though they could never fade."

Jean had gone back to the city, and the little path to the cottage was snow-covered when Miss Mary had a caller.

"My sister sent me down to see if I could persuade you to sell one of your quaint quilts. I hear you have one of the rare hooked rugs—a ship rug," he remarked, after he had presented his card for introduction.

Miss Mary smiled genially. She loved to have her treasures appreciated. "You are standing on it. It is a four-masted schooner under full sail, done on sail cloth. It is, indeed, a rare specimen, but I'll sell it. I indulged myself by keeping a rug I made to sell, see," she indicated the exquisite rose and gold rug that made a patch of glory in the late sunset as it lay across her knees, "a young girl I love gave me the pieces and she tired herself out sewing up the strips for me. Youth doesn't often spend hours toiling like that for an old person who is not her kin."

Politely he wrenched his eyes from his glorious find and turned his attention to the silky rug. "It is indeed beautiful," he said at last, a look of sadness overspreading his fine face, "the colors remind me of a great loss I sustained once—faith in the one girl in the world."

There was a poignant note of bleakness in the rich voice that diverted the invalid's attention from the quaint pattern of her rug and she looked across at him intently: "I hope you won't think me inquisitive," she began slowly, selecting her words with infinite care, "but I'm going to ask you to bear with an old woman a moment. I listened to a story lately that impressed me because of the useless hurt to two young hearts. Will you tell me the name of the girl who abused your faith? A girl who once wore a cloak of rose and gold?"

He started. His fingers had been straying over the rosy braided silk. "A cloak," he repeated, "she wore a cloak of that material the last time I saw her. She told me she loved me and that very night she telephoned me saying she claimed a woman's privilege of changing her mind."

"There was a lie between you," breathed Miss Mary, "that is her—her name is Jean."

He nodded, his blue eyes probing hers—he'd suffered too long to accept what the gods were promising: "Out of all the world of girls, it isn't possible that you have known my Jean."

"Not only do I know and love her but," gayly she twinkled at him across that rug of love, "Jean is visiting again in the city. She was here at the Merrills only last week. You must hurry back for she's planning to go to Japan shortly."

When the explanations had been made and all cleared between the lovers, he said, "Jean, if you hadn't happened to give Miss Mary your old silk scraps we'd have never found each other again. Who'd think that a rag rug could play the part of Cupid?"

"It wasn't an ordinary rag rug," she demurred, remembering the extravagant whim that had impelled her to cut into bits the exquisite garment to please the old lady, "it was a love rug—rose and gold are the colors of love."

Botanists Know Only Four Species of Cedar

Dozens of kinds of trees are commonly called cedars but, to the botanist, there are only four justly entitled to the name.

To these four species has been given the Latin name Cedrus. The first the most famous of these true cedars is Cedrus Libani, the cedar of Lebanon. From it came the wood used by King Solomon for his temple. This tree, formerly common on the slope of Mount Lebanon, in Syria, is said to be now almost extinct.

The second of the true cedars is Cedrus Dedora, the deodar of the Himalaya mountains. Under its shade the action of many of Kipling's Indian stories takes place. The third is a rare tree in the island of Cyprus in the Mediterranean sea. The fourth is Cedrus Atlantica, growing in the Atlas mountains of North Africa, and commonly known as the Atlas cedar. All four closely resemble each other and are handsome trees, sometimes seen in cultivation in America, more often in Europe.

Don't Make a Toy Out of Baby —Babies Have Nerves

By RUTH BRITTAIN

Much of the nervousness in older children can be traced to the overstimulation during infancy, caused by regarding baby as a sort of animated toy for the amusement of parents, relatives and friends. Baby may be played with, but not for more than a quarter of an hour to an hour daily. Beyond that, being handled, tickled, caused to laugh or even scream, will sometimes result in vomiting, and invariably causes irritability, crying or sleeplessness.

Fretfulness, crying and sleeplessness from this cause can easily be avoided by treating baby with more consideration, but when you just can't see what is making baby restless or upset, better give him a few drops of pure, harmless Castoria. It's amazing to see how quickly it calms baby's nerves and soothes him to sleep; yet it contains no drugs or opiates. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper. Leading physicians prescribe it for colic, cholera, diarrhea, constipation, gas on stomach and bowels, feverishness, loss of sleep and all other "upsets" of babyhood. Over 25 million bottles used a year shows its overwhelming popularity.

With each bottle of Castoria, you get a book on Motherhood, worth its weight in gold. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package so you'll get genuine Castoria. There are many imitations.

The Ward of Robbers' Roost

By Crittenden Marriott

W.N.U. SERVICE ©W.G. Chapman

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian, and secret service man, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old. She does not want to leave Fair, for whom she has the affection of a daughter.

Then, abruptly, to Fair's delight, Barker sent him word of some Mexicans who wanted him to run a shipment of rifles and ammunition across the line into Mexico and take back in payment a shipment of whisky. The transaction would be enormously profitable to both parties; and Fair jumped at it, though ordinarily he would have considered it rather below his dignity—something like "taking candy from kids," and all that.

Easy as it was, however, it would get Wade away from camp—he decided at once to put Wade in charge of the expedition—for a day or two at least; and it would restore the morale of some of the men. It did not occur to him that it would especially interest Stella.

But it did. Stella had been finding the suspense of waiting for Green anything but pleasant; once she had decided to go East, she wanted to go right away. And now that the chance offered for one more night ride (undoubtedly the last that she could hope to see) she made up her mind to go, willy nilly.

The ethics of the expedition did not trouble her at all; in fact, it did not even occur to her that any question of ethics was involved. The only thing that troubled her was in regard to Fair. She knew that he would object to her going; and, though she was sure that she could persuade him to let her go, she shrank from the necessity. Why not just go and let him find out later? Really, there was no risk to her; nobody had ever hurt her; therefore nobody ever would. Her arguments were those of reckless youth the world over.

She could not guess that Wade had noticed how she was moping, and that he and Barker had between them hatched up a scheme for the purpose of getting her out of the Roost and safely away without Fair's knowledge.

To make assurance doubly sure, Wade applied a prod during the three or four days that passed while Wade and his men waited for the word from Barker that the rifles had reached Barker's place (known as the J/B ranch) and were ready to be started for the border. At Wade's orders sundry of his friends dropped remarks in Stella's hearing in regard to thrilling adventures that were likely to happen on the trip, knowing well that the promise of adventure was the bait at which she would most eagerly snap.

The results appeared when the word from Barker came, and Wade and his chosen ten met in the corral in the early dawn to saddle their horses for an immediate start; for at that moment Stella slipped to Wade's side.

"Bill," she pleaded, "can't you take me with you?"

Bill looked at her and sniffed. "We ain't takin' no ladies on this trip," he answered.

"Ladies!" Stella blazed in sudden fury. "Who are you calling ladies?"

"You! Leastways, that's what Fair thinks. I guess he wants you to stay at home and learn to sew."

"Sew! Me?"

"Sure. What else? That's what girls do."

"I'm not a girl. I'm a boy!" Stella's words were bold, but most unboyish tears lay very close behind her eyes.

"Not by a dang sight you ain't." Pants are all right to swell around in; but they don't make a girl into a boy. This trip's likely to be excitin'; and when it comes right down to trouble a boy's worth three girls."

The tears welled into Stella's eyes, but she winked them back. "Not three girls like me," she protested.

Bill snatched at the psychological moment. "Well, maybe worth only two girls like you," he chuckled. "Shucks, Bob, I'd like to take you. But I can't risk it. Fair'd kill me if anything happened to you. He would so."

"Nothing's going to happen to me. Please, Bill."

"No, I can't— Oh, shucks! D'you know that little Charley Harris is sick?"

"No." Stella did not see the connection; but her tones were breathless.

"Well, he is. He's too sick to go with us today. I was just goin' to pick somebody for his place. But I ain't told Fair about it. An', of course, it'll still be pretty dark when we report as we go out."

"Oh! Take me along in Charley's place."

"Nix. Not on your life. I ain't disobeyin' orders none. . . . 'Course, if somebody came along in Charley's place without my knowin' it I couldn't well be expected to send him back after we got fifty miles away."

"Oh, good for you, Bill! Thank you."

"Thanks nothin'. You ain't got anything to thank me for. An' I ain't got any more time to waste. You run along an' let me be." Bill turned away.

So did Stella. But when the raiding party halted at Fair's door in the dim of light of the dawn to report their departure and receive any last minute instructions; and a little later when they rode away, out beneath the waterfall, there were ten of them instead of nine, in addition to the leader. Charley's place had been filled.

Fair did not miss Stella until hours after she had gone. That is to say, he missed her but thought nothing of it. Stella seldom appeared at breakfast; usually she was up and out long before the rest of the camp opened its collective eyes. Even when she did not return at midday, dinner he was not alarmed, supposing that she was chatting with the women or playing with the children somewhere in the valley. And in the late afternoon Green turned up with the big news; and he and Fair had to talk things out at length.

"You were right in thinkin' the Morton you wrote to would be pretty old," began Green, after preliminaries had been ended. "He was away from home, up in New York; but he's got a son that sure is a hellyon. He's got a flossy name—George Ashmead Morton, but every one calls him Go Ahead, an'—"

"Go Ahead? You mean—"

"I reckon I mean just what you're thinkin'. He's sure got a big reputation for bringin' home the bacon when he goes after it."

"But—did anyone tell you he was a D. J. man?"

"That's what they did. But I took a chance on his playin' square; everybody in his parts says he always has."

Fair drew a long breath. "I guess you didn't make any mistake, Jack," he decided. "Anyway, the cards are dealt; and I'm willing to play them. Which of my letters did you give him?"

"Gave him your number one an' told him mighty nigh everything he wanted to know."

"Did he open up too; tell you he was a dick, and all that?"

"Sure! We had plenty of heart-to-heart talks comin' across the country. He knew who you meant by 'Jim' in your letter; and he knew that he was in with us. 'We ain't got the goods on him yet,' he says; 'but we will some day.' And he told me right out that he and his people were doin' their best to break us up. But, of course, that wasn't no news. 'We're enemies,' says he; 'an' we've got to stay so till you fellows are smashed for good and all. We're in it to win; an' any of you that's got good hard sense had better take my advice an' beat it while the beatin's good.'"

Oxen on Railroad

On the railroad sidetracks of a cottonseed mill at Navasota, Texas, it has been found that teams of oxen supply the best and cheapest motive power available for moving about loaded railroad box cars. Long and expensive delays resulted from waiting for the locomotive to do the switching after it pulled its string of cars into town once or twice a day, but the oxen are always on hand when needed.

Large Texas longhorn steers are used. Six oxen pull more than 200,000 pounds on the rails. One prize yoke of two steers, weighing 2,200 pounds each, can handle a box car alone.

Odd Substance Proves Puzzle to Scientists

Nehalem wax is the name given a somewhat mysterious product found on the beach near the mouth of the Nehalem river, in Oregon, says the Portland Oregonian. It was observed by the early explorers of that coast. Later considerable deposits were found in the sand of the beach. In 1840 several tons of this queer waxlike substance were shipped to Hawaii, and since then many tons of it have been sent to northwestern markets.

Opinion is divided concerning the nature of the substance or its origin. Some hold that it is beeswax, and others contend that it is a mineral substance called ozocerite. It is usually found in large rectangular blocks. It has a honeylike aroma when freshly cut. Examination made in the laboratory of a western university shows that the substance closely approaches beeswax in composition and does not accord with the properties of ozocerite.

"Well, what do you know about that," said the clerk to the telephone girl after the three had been assigned to rooms. "Let's see now which one is missing—" Another guest appeared at the desk. "Say, have you a reservation for Mr. and Mrs. John E. Wales, of Norfolk, Va?" asked the newcomer.

Soap Suds

Little Mary had spent all her brief life in Indianapolis and knew little about the country. One day when visiting her grandfather's farm she saw a freshly milked pail of milk with a great deal of foam on top of it. "Is that milk?" she asked.

"Yes, nice fresh milk," replied her grandfather. "You'll have some of it for supper."

"Well, I won't drink any," she answered, "cause it has soap suds all over the top."—Indianapolis News.

And as for Soft Corns a few applications each night at bed time and they just seem to shrivel right up and scale off.

No matter how discouraged you have been with pads, shields, or other applications, if you have not tried Emerald Oil then you have something to learn.

It's a wonderful formula—this combination of essential oils with camphor and other antiseptics so marvelous that thousands of bottles are sold annually for reducing varicose or swollen veins.

Wave Theory Backed

The wave theory for explaining all the forces of nature has triumphed completely over previous conflicting theories, says Capt. T. J. J. See, professor of mathematics in the United States navy and government astronomer at Mare Island, according to the Associated Press. Not only are such actions as magnetism, gravitation and electro-dynamics explainable as "waves in the ether," but even surface tension, cohesion, adhesion, capillarity, chemical affinity and explosive forces are shown, he asserts, to be waves, and "thus the internal mechanism of atoms, electrons and etherons lead to the wave theory as one of the final triumphs of science in 1927."

YOUR SNEEZE MAY NOT BE FROM COLD

Draft May Have Nothing to Do With the Matter—Million Particles.

WHEN you sneeze it is not always a sign you are taking cold. That is the opinion of physicians working on public health problems in the last few years.

Most men and women when they feel that tickling in the nose or throat immediately look for the nearest door or window, convinced that they are sitting in a draft.

However, the draft, if there is one, may have nothing to do with the matter at all, physicians say. The unhappy one merely has inhaled a few million or so dust particles.

That may be true particularly of our cities where enough dust floats in the atmosphere in one year to build a cone-shaped mountain 1,500 feet high, with a five-mile diameter.

Some statistician has figured it out that if all the dust that hovers above American cities were gathered in one place, say Manhattan Island, that dust would be piled up on the streets of Manhattan to the depth of 21 feet.

But [illegible] is likely to sneeze while walking along a country road, though not quite as likely as in the city. Here the dust that is raised usually comes from dirt or gravel roads. There is, however, less likelihood of this today than ever before as highway officials now have at their command many methods for "binding" the top cover, particularly the use of such chemicals as calcium chloride, considered by engineers the best of dust layers.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Myrtle E. Groshon and Stanley W. Groshon (whose name also appears in said mortgage as Stanley W. Groshown), her husband, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 13th day of November, 1924, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota on the 4th day of December, 1924, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 108 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Ninety-three Dollars and seventy-five cents ($93.75), which became due and payable on the 13th day of November, 1927, and the 13th day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage; and to keep the buildings on said mortgaged premises insured as stipulated in and by the terms of said mortgage, in default of which the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, elected to and did on the 10th day of December, 1927, pay the sum of Twenty-nine Dollars and ninety cents ($29.90) to effect such insurance, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand Eight Hundred Eighty-six Dollars and thirty-seven cents ($2,886.37), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 13th day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and One Hundred Eighty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($187.50) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $93.75 thereof from November 13th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $93.75 thereof from May 13th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Three Thousand One Hundred Nine Dollars and seventy-six cents ($3,109.76), including the amount paid for insurance as aforesaid, with interest thereon at seven per cent. from said date of payment;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Thirty-six (36), in Township One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) North, of Range Forty-one (41), West, containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the Government survey thereof,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 30th day of June, 1928, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, including said insurance paid as aforesaid, and the taxes, if any, on said premises and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

4-H Club To Meet

The Holt Boys and Girls 4-H will meet on Friday, July 6th at 8 p. m., in the schoolhouse here.

About Our Trip To The Northwest School

On Monday the 25th of June three cars carrying ten members of the local boys and girls club went to the Northwest School at Crookston. We left Holt at about eleven o'clock. We stoped in Thief River a few minutes. We were ready for dinner by the time we got to Red Lake Falls.

We had a very good time as we had a picnic dinner along and everything that we needed for a good time. A number of good pictures were also taken on the trip. We arrived at Crookston at 3:30 and had half an hour to look over the campus. At four everybody registered, the boys were assigned Senior Hall and the girls Robert Hall. By the time our supper was ready we all felt fifty per cent better and, we partook of a very delicious meal after which we had ice cream and a marsmallow roast.

After supper we passed back to the campus where a number of games were played by some of the clubs of Marshall and Clearwater counties. After this we were all called to assembly in the Kiehle building were a number of songs were sung by the 4-H clubs, and several good talks were given by the leaders of the various clubs. A good play was also given. A musical selection was given by a Holt 4-H club member. The evening program also included a good movie show and lasted until about eleven p. m., when we all went to our rooms and retired

At six thirty Tuesday morning the signal was given to get up. Everyone of the club members were down for the morning exercis and for breakfast. General assembly after breakfast with classes in the morning in the different things we were interested in. After the assembly Mr. Collet met with the Holt boys and girls 4-H club and we had a picnic dinner. Different kinds of games were played between the two counties, the main game in the afternoon was kitten ball. At 4 p. m. we left the school and went to the park in Crookston where we spent an hour. On the the way back we had several blow-outs and so we stopped in at the park in Red Lake Falls and had our supper, and arrived in Thief River Falls at 7 o'clock with another blowout on the street. After fixing the tire up we all came back home and, we feel that it was a jolly time.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXVIII

Milk As Food: A pitcher of cold skimmilk on the table at meal time adds greatly to the value of the meal for those who have learned to appreciate milk as fook. Note how well the calves, colts and little pigs do on skimmilk. It is a splendid food and just as good for humans as for stock.

The common objection to skimmilk often arises from it being brought warm to the house in the morning and left around in the kitchen or pantry during the day where it absorbs the odors of other foods. Set the skimmilk in the cream cooling tank as soon as it is separated and serve it cold and soon everyone will be asking for skimmilk.

BANKERS PROVIDE STUDENT LOANS

American Bankers Association Completes Plan to Award 167 College Economic Scholarships Throughout Nation.

AWARDS TO START THIS FALL

Students in Agricultural Economics to Be Helped in Farm States—Will Also Facilitate Entry Into Business Life.

One hundred and sixty-seven collegiate loan scholarships will be provided by the American Bankers Association, 98 of which are now being proffered to 71 selected colleges and universities in 34 states, it has been announced by John H. Puelicher, Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Association's Foundation for Education in Economics. The foundation fund of $500,000 was started in 1925 to commemorate the Association's fiftieth unniversary and its aim is to stimulate and aid worthy men or women students to pursue courses in banking and economics in collegiate institutions throughout the country.

The scholarship awards will be available for the scholastic year beginning this fall and will provide recipients with unit loans of $250, to be repaid on easy terms following their entry into earning business life. In several farm states, it is provided, scholarships shall be specifically awarded in agricultural economics.

A special feature of the plan in addition to its educational advantages is that scholars, upon discharge of all their financial obligations connected with their loans, will be given certificates of honorary membership in the foundation signed by the members of the board of trustees, which will be available as evidence of financial reliability for their use in starting their business careers.

Colleges Awarded Scholarships

Proffers of one or more scholarships have been made to the following institutions:

Alabama, University of Alabama, Birmingham-Southern College; Arizona, University of Arizona; Arkansas, University of Arkansas; California, University of California, University of Southern California, Stanford University; Connecticut, Wesleyan University, Yale University; Delaware, University of Delaware; District of Columbia, George Washington University, Georgetown University; Florida, University of Florida, University of Miami; Hawaiian Islands, University of Hawaii; Idaho, University of Idaho; Illinois, University of Illinois, University of Chicago, Knox College, Northwestern University; Kansas, University of Kansas, Kansas State Agricultural College, Washburn College; Louisiana, Louisiana State University, Tulane University; Maryland, Johns Hopkins University, University of Maryland; Michigan, University of Detroit, University of Michigan, Michigan Agricultural College; Minnesota, Carlton College, University of Minnesota, Hamline University; Mississippi, University of Mississippi; Montana, State University of Montana; Nebraska, University of Nebraska, Doane College; Nevada, State University of Nevada; New Jersey, Princeton University, Rutgers University; New Mexico, New Mexico College of Agricultural and Mechanical Arts; North Carolina, University of North Carolina, North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering; Oregon, University of Oregon, Oregon State Agricultural College; Pennsylvania, University of Pennsylvania, Dickinson College, Lafayette College, Gettysburg College, Franklin and Marshal College, Allegheny College, University of Pittsburgh, Lehigh University, Swarthmore College, Pennsylvania State College; Rhode Island, Brown University; South Dakota, University of South Dakota; Tennessee, University of Tennessee, University of Chattanooga, Vanderbilt University; Utah, University of Utah; Vermont, University of Vermont; Virginia, University of Virginia, Washington and Lee University, University of Richmond, William and Mary College; Washington, University of Washington, State College of Washington; West Virginia, West Virginia University; Wisconsin, University of Wisconsin, Lawrence College, Beloit College.

Plan of Operation

The general plan allots scholarships to higher institutions of learning in states where the banks have completed the subscription quotas assigned them in the foundation fund.

Institutions are selected on the basis of type of school, educational standards, geographical distribution and desire to co-operate in the plan. A scholarship committee is to be created in each selected institution, to consist of members of the faculty and a prominent banker. All scholarship applications must be made formally through the college committees and not direct to the foundation. Three home-town references are required of each applicant, at least one of whom must be a banker. Only students of junior or higher grade in banking and economic courses are eligible and those who have also attended American Institute of Banking courses will be given preference.

Easy Terms

Scholarship payments will be given only to those whose means of education are dependent in whole or part upon their own efforts and will continue only during satisfactory scholastic standing or conduct. The loans are at five per cent beginning the first day of the second January after the date the scholar leaves school, with no interest on repayment made prior to that time. Loans may be paid off in monthly installments of $10 or more. After three installments have been promptly met payments may be placed on a quarterly basis until the loan is wiped out which must occur within three years. In cases of delinquencies, consideration will be given to special circumstances, such as ill health or unavoidable unemployment.

Harvey Dahl, Agnes Olson and Agnes Nohre spent Sunday at the Red Lake Narrows.

Duel to the Death Between Two Ducks

The story of a duel between two ducks on a woodland lake near Watertown, N. Y., was told by a resident of Watertown, N. Y.

The duel was carried out in two encounters on successive days. On the first day, one duck was wounded and sank, but came to the surface later and recovered. The next day the battle was resumed and again the defeated duck sank beneath the surface. The victor dived beneath the surface, brought the defeated duck to the top and held its head above water.

Other ducks, apparently in the hope the duck would revive, aided in keeping the wounded bird above the surface. The life-saving methods proved unavailing, and the dead bird finally was abandoned.

Tender, Aching Swollen Feet

In Just Five Minutes Those Sore, Tender, Aching Feet Get Amazing Relief.

You probably feel like a lot of other people that about all you can do is dust some powder in your shoes or give your feet a special foot bath and let it go at that, but don't be foolish. Make up your mind today that you are going to give your feet a real chance to get well.

The very first application will give you relief and a few short treatments will thoroughly convince you that by sticking faithfully to it for a short while your foot troubles will be a thing of the past.

Don't expect a single bottle to do it all at once but one bottle we know will show you beyond all question that you have at last discovered the way to solid foot comfort.

Remember that Moone's Emerald Oil is a clean, powerful, penetrating Antiseptic Oil that does not stain or leave a greasy residue and that it must give complete satisfaction or your money cheerfully refunded.

DESIGN SUITS TO CATCH SUN RAYS

Washington.—Active little bodies now may absorb beneficial sunshine while at play. Specially designed sun suits that leave plenty of skin exposed are recommended for children by the United States bureau of home economics.

The suits, the result of reasearch by the division of textiles and clothing, under the direction of Miss Ruth O'Brien, are designed on the regulation romper plan.

They are made to provide varying degrees of exposure and to be used in sequence as the child's skin becomes accustomed to the sun and wind. Miss O'Brien advises mothers to use the sleeveless, low-necked suit first, then the one with the armholes cut down to the waist and the back cut out. The last stage is the suit with loose trousers of wide-meshed material and shirt made of two narrow strips of gauzy net, whose threads will not interfere with the sun's rays.

"All common textile fibers stop most of the ultra-violet rays," says Miss O'Brien. "So it is best to choose loosely woven fabrics for the sun suits, so that the rays can reach the body through the large spaces between the yarns.

"One of the most satisfactory suits that we have designed is made of cable net for the top and brown cotton suiting for the trousers, which are very short and very loose around the waist."

Farmer, Aged 81, Says He Has Walked 180,000 Miles

Mr. Beneke has clicked off 180,000 miles by foot in the past 17 years and still makes his daily walk.

"I had a fair-sized mileage ticked off when I was only eleven years old," the pioneer explained. "I walked nearly all the way from a point 25 miles south of Chicago to Glencoe in the summer of 1858. I was a member of a prairie schooner party, but there was no room in the wagons for the men and boys.

"For several years after that I walked frequently from the claim here to St. Paul and back, carrying provisions. During all that time I worked in the fields, and in those days, of course, there were no seats to ride on when working in the field. In fact, there was no farm machines. Later I made from 15 to 20 miles a day plowing and harrowing, and during the rest of the year I reckon that I walked at least five miles a day."

Most of his walking was done with wooden shoes, Beneke said. "We used to wear wooden shoes to St. Paul even in winter and exchange them for leather ones when we neared the town," he declared.

"One time I lost one of my leather shoes while crossing the river from St. Anthony to St. Paul. I didn't like to wear wooden shoes on the streets and tried to buy a pair of buffalo shoes, but couldn't find any to fit me in the St. Paul stores."

New Radium Explosive More Deadly Than TNT

Pasadena, Calif.—A new explosive of which radium is an important ingredient, was reported by military professors of the California Institute of Technology to have shown itself to be 30 per cent more powerful than TNT and 15 per cent more effective than commercial dynamite, in official tests conducted at the college.

Tests of the explosive, which was invented by Capt. H. R. Zimmer, of Los Angeles, former army officer, were conducted by Lieut. Col. L. M. Adams, professor of military science at the institute. An ounce of each of the three explosives was placed in three separate lead jars, and their comparative power determined by measuring the expansions created by the explosions.

Captain Zimmer refused to allow the institute scientists to analyze the explosive, declaring that he believed the War department might wish to maintain secrecy of his formula.

65 Fish for Every Angler, Bureau's Aim

Washington.—In co-operation with the 60 private fish nurseries in this country, the bureau of fisheries plans to distribute this year a total of 650,000,000 fish and eggs, or an average of 65 fish for each of the estimated 10,000,000 persons who fare forth with rod and reel each summer.

From the bureau's 38 main hatcheries and 35 substations, young fish from five to six inches long will be deposited in lowly brooks, rushing streams and majestic rivers from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Through the fish nurseries co-operating with the bureau, a total of 250,000,000 fry will be planted in protected waters.

"More fish in proportion to the water and a shorter time between bites," are the bureau's twin objectives.

WOMAN IS CHARGED WITH ALIEN RUNNING

Girl and Father Are Accused at Detroit.

Detroit.—Accused of being responsible for the smuggling of at least 400 aliens from Canada to Detroit during the last 18 months, Casper Hollecker, fifty-two years old, and his daughter, Mrs. Rose Phillippi, thirty-one years old, were arraigned here recently on charges of conspiracy to violate the immigration laws and being accessories in aiding the smuggling of aliens.

John L. Zurbrick, district director of immigration, estimated the two were responsible for bringing in 400 aliens here as members of an international ring whose ramifications are believed to extend to Europe.

Both admit, Mr. Zurbrick said, that they have smuggled in a number of aliens but gave no exact number. Hollecker, Mr. Zurbrick said, told him that between 50 and 100 aliens whom he aided to enter the country illegally now are residing in New York.

Many From His Home.

Suspicions of the authorities here were aroused when it was found that in the few months aliens caught illegally entering the country here all seemed to come from Englesbrum, a section of Rumania which formerly was part of Austria. Hollecker was born in the district.

A month ago the authorities were informed that 78 aliens from Englesbrum were aboard a steamer bound for Canada. On April 3, 12 and 19, the immigration border patrol apprehended a number of the aliens here, and all showed they were interested in a man named Hollecker.

The women said they paid $75 to be smuggled over the river, while the men said they paid $55 each. One woman said she paid $280. Mrs. Phillippi, Mr. Zurbrick said, claims $75 of that fee was paid the man who brought the woman over the river.

On April 19, Nicholas Titch and his wife, Anna, of Englesbrum, were arrested in a taxicab at the foot of 42 Riverfront with Arthur Damon, a smuggler released recently after serving a sentence in the Leavenworth penitentiary for smuggling aliens, and Edward Quinn and his wife Ruth, who live at the Riverfront address.

Gave Password.

Titch told the authorities that when he came to Windsor he went to a certain hotel and gave a certain password, whereupon he was told to await an agent of the smuggling ring. The hotel, the authorities say they are informed, got $5 a head for this service.

Hollecker was notified of the aliens' arrival and his daughter came to Windsor and collected $150 from the Titches and told them they would be delivered to her home, Mr. Zurbrick said. The Titches got in a cab at the hotel with Damon.

Hollecker, Mr. Zurbrick said, claims he got $10 to $20 a head for his part in the smuggling. He said, according to the officials, that he shipped the aliens to the East after receiving them at his home.

Moscow's Two Millions Overflow Red Capital

Moscow.—Moscow appears to be suffering serious scarcity of dwelling houses, according to an elaborate review of the situation made by the newspaper Isvestia. This is due to the fact that during the World war and the revolution the city lost about 20 per cent of such buildings, while the population considerably increased, and is still increasing. In 1920 the city was estimated to have 1,500,000 inhabitants while now it is said to have 2,142,000—a phenomenal increase.

The existing houses provide an area of only 5.7 square meters for each person, or only about half as much as is required by the commissar of hygiene. To correct these congested conditions it would be necessary at once to provide at least 3,000,000 square meters of lodging space.

Meantime the newspapers are printing many communications upon the subject, giving all sorts of suggestions for relief. Some urge that sleeping rooms be fitted with upper and lower beds, like sleeping cars. Others demand that every room shall have at least one window, a rule which does not now prevail; and yet others would limit the number of occupants to four in a room.

Earthen Jars in Arizona Said to Be 2,000 Years Old

Nogales, Ariz.—Ancient earthen jars, containing the bones of a prehistoric race, recently excavated by men working on the city streets, were declared to be more than 2,000 years old by Byron Cummings, dean of the University of Arizona, who made an inspection of the relics.

Many of the jars are inscribed with curious designs and crude drawings of snakes, centipedes and birds. Dean Cummings attributed the articles found to the Pihouse people, a long-headed race, predecessors of the later race known as the Pueblo people, who built Casa Grande.

Excepting the cliff dwellers relics which were discovered near Flagstaff, these jars were said to be the oldest relics yet unearthed in Arizona.

SAYS LEPROSY MAY NOT BE CONTAGIOUS

Scientist Hopes to Substantiate Theory.

San Francisco.—Possibility that leprosy is not contagious and that victims of the dread scourge need not be isolated in colonies of the so-called "living dead" was disclosed here by Dr. E. L. Walker, professor of tropical medicines in the University of California medical school.

The theory, supported for the first time by definite evidence, was advanced by the University of California scientist upon his return from a 14-months' stay in Honolulu. His investigations and experiments were conducted in a laboratory at Kalihi hospital, a receiving station for lepers destined for incarceration at Molokai leper colony.

Doctor Walker, who said his findings are only tentative, explained that authorities long have suspected that the actinomyces bacteria might be involved in leprosy, but that no laboratory evidence hitherto had been obtained to support the suspicion. This particular bacteria, classified as a plant fungus, is said to be a soil-growing organism, like that causing lockjaw. It appears reasonable to suppose then, according to Doctor Walker, that leprosy is an infection from the soil.

The theory is materially strengthened, according to the scientist's findings, by the known fact that leprosy is most prevalent in countries where the natives run barefoot. Investigation in these places, with the soil origin of infection in mind, the adoption of shoes and the careful disinfection of wounds, provided seemingly positive evidence of the truth of the new theory.

The stumbling block in the way of obtaining experimental proof that actinomyces is the actual cause of leprosy, Doctor Walker said, lies in the fact that animals other than man are immune to the disease. In other words, it is impossible to try these bacteria any other way than on a human, and that is considered too dangerous. However, in his experiments in Hawaii Doctor Walker found them always present in leprous tissue.

Hope of substantiation of the theory that leprosy is not contagious and that governments need not condemn the unfortunate victims to "living death" in a lepers' colony, Doctor Walker declared, lies in the East Belgian Congo, the ivory coast of Africa and other known districts where the percentages of leprosy are high and where necessary experiments and observation may be made.

Scientists Digging Into Gardens of Hesperides

Algiers.—Encroachments of science must doubtless agitate the spirits of the Hesperides, those beautiful maidens who in Greek mythology guarded the golden apples which Gaea, the Earth, produced as a marriage gift for Hera, wife and sister of Zeus.

In Morocco, near the legendary gardens of the Hesperides, archeologists are making fresh excavations of the ruins of ancient Luxus. This city was founded more than 2,000 years ago by the legions of the Caesars on the hillside close to the modern town of Larache.

There is profound interest among scientists in what valuable remnants of the old Roman civilization may be brought to light. A group of prominent French and other archeologists just completed an inspection of the parts already uncovered.

Mark Wild Bill's Grave for Admiring Tourists

Deadwood, S. D.—The last resting places of "Wild Bill" Hickok and "Calamity Jane," most noted of the early-day characters of the Black hills, are to be improved by Black hills residents. During recent years the graves of "Wild Bill" and "Calamity Jane" have been somewhat neglected. Massive stone monuments will be put at each grave and upon the monuments bronze tablets bearing relief portraits of the two famous characters will be placed. From 800,000 to 1,000,000 tourists are expected to visit the Black hills this year. Eight out of ten of them probably will make the hard climb up a steep highway to Mount Moriah cemetery, so they may view the graves of "Wild Bill" and "Calamity Jane."

Sailing Ship Passes From Pacific Ports

Seattle, Wash.—Although old salts along the water front saw the handwriting on the wall many years ago, the absolute disappearance of the sailing ship from trade routes out of Seattle and Tacoma so early in the Twentieth century was never dreamed of by these master sailors. Great fleets of windjammers in all rigs once made shipping history on the Pacific coast, but are no more.

Since the first of the year records of the marine department of the chamber of commerce show that but one sailing craft, the barkentine Centennial, passed in through the straits. Arriving in March the ship was retired from active duty, reducing the present Pacific fleet of sailing boats to less than a dozen.

Gives Congress Idea of How Much to Spend

A budget system was adopted in the United States in 1921 and the bureau of budget was created. The bill authorizing the establishment of the budget makes the President the head of the budget system, creates the bureau of budget, requires that the President submit the budget to congress at the beginning of the regular session each year, and requires that congress be told at that time exactly what the revenues and expenditures for the year are to be, and what is the state of the public debt. This report must contain recommendations for increasing or decreasing the revenue as need may require, must give details of expenditure for the year past, and must give much other necessary information regarding the national finances. Co-ordinating departments have been created which function under the direction of the bureau of the budget. These departments effect saving and prevent duplication throughout the government service.

New Industrial Device

A new truck that picks its load off the ground and carries it underneath the chasis is saving time and labor in French industrial plants. The chasis and motor stand seven feet high, on four legs that carry the wheels. There is a clearance of five feet under the framework and four flat right-angled plates, on ratchets, stick inward from the four legs. The truck is run over the load which is set a few inches off the ground. The four plates, like hands, reach under the weight to be carried. They are elevated by the motor power and the truck thus carries its load. Various devices, such as platforms, are used so that the four iron hands can pick up the load.

Corpse Had Winning Ticket

Just as the undertaker's assistants were preparing to close a coffin in which lay the body of a man at Barcelona, Spain, his widow observed sticking out of his pocket a fractional lottery ticket. To her surprise on examining it she found that it had drawn the third prize in a big lottery, entitling the holder to a very large sum. The man had not worn the suit for some time previous but, according to the custom of the country, was dressed in his best clothes for burial.

Fat Baby Worshiped

Weighing as much as a man, a baby in Jolo, in the Philippine Islands, is being worshiped by the natives, who believe that so large a human being must be a Messiah in infant form. Although only seven months old, it weighs 150 pounds, eats ten pounds of rice at a meal and has to be carried to the table by two men, according to reports. Many natives are offering the "Messiah" gifts to secure its favor.

No Woofing Cows

Little Samuel Goldstein, age three, 4359 North Illinois street, recently was taken to the circus by his father. On his return, his Uncle Abe tried to get him to tell what he saw, but all that Samuel would say was "animals."

Uncle Abe then called out his latent histrionic talents and gave what he believed to be a realistic interpretation of an angry lion.

"And did you hear an animal that went: 'Woof! Woof! Woof!'"

"There weren't any cows there," said Samuel.—Indianapolis News.

The Ward of Robbers' Roost

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian, and secret service man, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old. She does not want to leave Fair, for whom she has the affection of a daughter. Jim Barker, sheriff and aspirant for Stella's hand, directs Fair to run a shipment of arms into Mexico.

Fair frowned. "I don't like that," he said hesitantly.

"Does sound like a bid, don't it? But I reckon it was just a warnin'. 'We're enemies,' he goes on. 'You an' I and Fair are just meetin' now under a flag of truce for a particular purpose. Once we've put that over, we'll dig up the hatchet again. Meanwhile I don't want to take any unfair advantage. You tell Fair that I'm wholly in his hands, an' that I'll meet all his conditions about Cousin Stella and all that. And tell him to be careful not to let me find out anything that he don't want me to know, for I'll have to use it after the armistice is over. An' I told him that would be all right."

"'Bout as we fixed for it to be. He got off at Mustin last night, in cow puncher rig, intendin' to get a horse an' ride toward Loboville, kinder loafin' along an' askin' for work but takin' care not to get none. Loboville and on to here, after plantin' Go Ahead's nigger there."

"His nigger?"

"That's right. I guess I ain't mentioned him. He's a smart darky, all right. He's fixed up as a Mexican. He's goin' to project round Loboville and find where he can get horses mucho pronto if Go Ahead needs 'em, and all that. Bridget knows about him. I told Go Ahead to stop at Bridget's place if I didn't meet him with Bob before he got to Loboville."

"Good." Fair got up. "You've done fine, Jack," he said. "Fine!"

Green stirred awkwardly. "I'd do a lot more for Bob's sake," he muttered.

"Bob's sake!" Fair stared at the boy. "You, too, Jack?" he said, sadly.

Green nodded. "Yes! Me, too," he answered.

Impulsively Fair held out his hand. "We're going to miss her, Jack," he said. "But—it's for her good."

Green took the hand. "Yes," he said. "It's for her good. I reckon it's the only way to get her safe from Barker."

But Fair could not find her, of course; and for some time he was unable to discover where she had gone. Her horse was in the stable (she had ridden Charley Harris' horse); and the sentries at the exit swore that she had not gone out that way.

Deeply alarmed at last, Fair spread the alarm; and in time learned that Charley, whom he had supposed gone with the whisky runners, was sick in camp. And the discovery that some one riding Charley's horse had gone with Wade seemed to explain what had happened.

This discovery comforted Fair considerably, for he knew that more than half the men in Wade's party were very friendly to the girl, and he was entirely sure that they would not let her come to any harm. The thought of Barker, of course, occurred to him; but he speedily dismissed it, feeling sure that the sheriff would not risk a showdown under such circumstances. Stella, he decided, was safe, unless something went wrong at the border crossing; and this was improbable.

Only one thing troubled him, and that was lest Stella's absence would interfere with her meeting Go Ahead and leaving for the East. But, after a little thought, he began to hope that her escapade might be for the best.

Filled with this idea, he hurried back to Green. "Jack," he called. "Where'll Go Ahead be early tomorrow morning? Might get to the J/B ranch about eight o'clock, mightn't he?"

"I reckon so."

Fair drew a long breath. "That's our chance," he said. "Stella slipped away this morning with Wade's party that went to run guns and whisky across the line. They're south of the J/B ranch now; but they ought to be back there for breakfast tomorrow morning. If you can get in touch with Stella and Go Ahead in time you may be able to fix things so that she can join him right away. It's only a chance at best; and even if you do find them both you'll probably have a devil of a time in getting Stella away from Wade. You'll have to watch your chance and grab it if it comes."

"I will."

"I knew you would, Jack. I'd go myself if I knew Go Ahead, and if I dared to leave the valley till Stella was safe. . . . She won't want to go without seeing me; but you tell her I say she must, for another chance that's as good as this may be a long time coming."

CHAPTER IV

From daylight till mid-afternoon Wade and his followers rode steadily southward. Then they crossed the railroad at a "flag stop" which was marked only by a small shed, scarcely bigger than a sentry box, set in the midst of apparent desolation. Closer scrutiny, however, disclosed, a mile or two southward, the buildings of the J/B ranch, owned by Jim Barker, sheriff of Lobo county, who had chosen that brand for his cattle or, more accurately, for the cattle on his ranch. Whispers about the extraordinary increases and sudden decreases of the J/B cattle were plentiful in the region; but they remained whispers and very cautious ones at that. Barker was not a safe man to offend.

At this ranch Wade and his men halted to eat and rest. The guns were there, packed just as they had come, a few boxes at a time (marked "hardware") during the last week or ten days. The wagons that were to take them were ready; and so were the fresh horses that the bandits were to ride, leaving their own to rest overnight and be ready for any dash away that might be necessary. Wade and his followers had nothing to do until nightfall made it safe to ride to the border, some twenty miles to the south.

Stella had long before been "discovered," but her presence had caused no special comment. It was not the first raid by many in which she had taken part; and no one except Wade seemed to know that Fair had objected to her going on this or similar ventures.

The delay at the ranch lasted several hours, part of which Stella spent in wandering about the place, looking at the horses and chatting with the Mexican riders who cared for them, especially with Diego, the foreman. Stella did not like Mexicans. Like most "gringos" she thoroughly distrusted them; but on that particular afternoon she was restless and had to talk to somebody. Diego looked like a pirate and was quite as bad as he looked; but the same might truthfully be said about most of the bandits; and he was at least a human being and had a tongue. Stella did not realize how soon and how strenuously she and Diego were to come to an open clash.

Night came at last; and the bandits started, escorting the wagons with the rifles and moving with extra care because of the few—very few—army patrols that were strung along the border.

However, nothing went wrong. The whole plan worked out so smoothly that Stella felt rather disappointed. Unseen, the whole party crossed the river and delivered the guns to the Mexicans who were awaiting them. In return they received two wagonloads of "baled hay," each bale of which contained four dozen bottles of Mexican whisky. And then, without ceremony they turned back, recrossed the river, and trotted off to the J/B ranch, where a hot breakfast awaited them.

The outlaws ate swiftly and ravenously and soon finished. One by one they left the table to make ready for their return to the Roost. Several times Stella started to go, but each time Wade managed to delay her by some pretext until only he and she were left. As the last man went out of the room Wade called to him to tell Diego to saddle his and Bob's horses and bring them around.

Peculiar Rainbow

The name "fogbow" is applied to a faint whitish or rosy-tinted bow, somewhat resembling a rainbow, seen in fog.

Training French Sailors

Salt water is three hours from Paris by train, and longer still by boat, but there is a school there that promises to teach all about deck or engine room duties. Correspondence courses are open to lads in the provinces, far up in the mountains away from the smell of the sea. The marine school in Paris has begun to placard the country with the French equivalent of the American slogan, "Join the navy and see the world." The professors, in grading papers, may look from the school's windows upon the peaceful Seine, whose Parisian bosom supports nothing more important than tugs, barges and excursion boats.

Revives Girl After Her Heart Stops

Lansing, Mich.—Marion Norton, five, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William O. Norton, was scientifically "raised from the dead" here when two doctors restored life in the child through injection of adrenalin into the heart tissues after life had been pronounced extinct for about five minutes.

The Norton girl was about to undergo a tonsil operation in the office of Dr. W. O. Behen when she succumbed to shock. All tests for life had failed when Doctor Behen and Dr. D. A. Galbraith, who was administering the anesthetic, decided to use the powerful stimulant.

Shortly after the injection the heart recommenced beating. Marion was at her home later in the day, apparently little the worse for her experience, although still nervous.

SHERIFF TOTES BIBLE ON DUTY

Wisconsin Official Preaches During Spare Time.

Superior, Wis.—No revolver or blackjack, ready to be used against a lawbreaker, projects from the hip pocket of H. A. Turnbull, the "preaching sheriff" of Douglas county, Wis. The Turnbull hip pocket, instead, bulges with a Bible.

Elected two years ago on an independent ticket, with reform support, Sheriff Turnbull has succeeded in building up a program different from that which held sway for years in the county. He has imbued his force with religious spirit. Not only has he their support in his law enforcement program, but also he frequently has them discussing different phases of religion and interpreting the Bible.

It is not unusual for Sheriff Turnbull to appear in some small town in the county on week days, discover and destroy a still, and, on the following Sunday, preach to the townspeople from the pulpit. Yet Turnbull says he is not a crusader and sees no great harm in a man "taking a drink occasionally."

Bible study and preaching have not interfered with law enforcement in the sheriff's office. His forces are daily on some mission throughout the large county. The sheriff persists in leaving his weapons at home when he goes out for lawbreakers.

Olaf, Oakland Cat, Is Lindbergh of Felines

Olaf became the Lindbergh of the cat kingdom when he soared through the air on the back of a duck from the old quarry pond from Dracena park, Piedmont, to the head of Artuna street, a distance of several blocks.

The story, hard as it is to give credence, is vouched for by several witnesses.

Olaf, according to the story, walked to the water's edge. A duck was swimming invitingly near. Hesitating not a moment, Olaf leaped on the back of the duck, evidently deciding to use the "seaplane" as a means of transportation for his record flight.

The flutter of wings, the "quack, quack" of the frightened duck, and the "meow-ow" of Olaf attracted the gaze of passersby, who, much to their astonishment, saw the duck and cat soar away.

So loudly did Olaf screech that the course of the flight was followed by upturned faces.

Olaf held on until the duck finally came to earth, and then he scampered away, apparently none the worst for his experience.

Black Whale Battles With Huge Fox Shark

Winnipeg.—A thrilling battle between a black whale and a fox shark was witnessed recently near Fender Harbor, B. C., by Horace Williamson, a rancher. The result of the contest could not be ascertained, as the combatants battled their way out of sight, while both appeared to be prepared for a long fight.

Williamson noticed white water ahead while navigating his gas boat toward Garrow Point. Knowing that there were no rocks in that vicinity, the spectacle aroused his curiosity and he steered for it. As he got nearer he saw the back of a whale arise from the surface until about four and a half feet were exposed. Just as he started to resume his journey he noticed the square jaws of a fox shark break water near the whale. Then the fight began.

The shark, apparently six feet broad at the shoulders and forty feet long, had arched out of the water over the back of the whale, slashing at the massive creature with its tail. Seven times it repeated the attack within 300 feet of the spot where Williamson sat in his small boat.

Air Passengers Saved

Edgware, Eng.—After crashing into a number of trees, against which its wings were torn off, an airplane piloted by Lieut. Antonio Locatelli, Italian flyer, alighted safely with two passengers near here.

LAUNDRESS BENEFITED

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Nashville, Tenn.—"I cannot say too much in favor of the medicine. I was in a run-down condition. I worked in a laundry but my health got so bad that I had to give up work. I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and began taking it and every time I feel run-down I get another bottle. It is an excellent tonic and I am willing to tell others about it. People take me to be much younger than I am."—Mrs. Harry Bornstein, 406 Second Ave. South, Nashville, Tennessee.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Mary Gasper and John Gasper, her husband, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 5th day of November, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 8th day of November, 1926, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 226 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Eighty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($87.50), which became due and payable on the 5th day of May, 1927, the 5th day of November, 1927, and the 5th day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand Seven Hundred Fifty-six Dollars and eighty-nine cents ($2,756.89), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 5th day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and Two Hundred Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($262.50) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $87.50 thereof from November 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Three Thousand Fifty-five Dollars and seventy-six cents ($3,055.76);

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The West Half of the Northeast Quarter (W½ of NE¼) and the Southeast Quarter of the Northwest Quarter (SE¼ of NW¼) and Government Lot Two (2) of Section Nineteen (19), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 18th day of August, 1928, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Crop and Soils Day

From present indications, the grain will be headed out and in ideal condition for the annual Crops and Soils day at the Northwest Experiment Station, Crookston, Monday, July 16. Many new varieties of crops will be seen in the plots along with a large field increase of Marquillo, the new rust-resistant wheat soon to be distributed. Other interesting trials in progress are 150 plots of sow thistle treated with chemicals and various methods of cultivation; the use of sodium chlorate on quack grass, general cultural methods and fertilizers for potatoes and sugar beets; sulphur for rust control on wheat, and crop rotation.

Speakers for the day include Dr. Andrew Boss, who will summarize the results of two years farm accounting records on 25 polk County farms; Dr. F. J. Alway discussing "Soils and Fertilizers"; Prof. E. G. Booth explaining Canadian methods of pure seed production and distribution, and Director F. W. Peck on "The Crop Market Outlook".

A business meeting of the Red River Valley Crops and Soils association will be called at 11 o'clock. The speaking program will begin promptly at 1 o'clock and the inspection of plots at 3:15 p. m.

A special invitation is extended to farmers, farm clubs and community organizations to visit the Station on Crops and Soils Day. An attractive program has also been arranged for the women. Bring your picnic lunches, and make this a pleasant and profitable day for every member of the family. Coffee, cream and sugar will be provided.

Northwestern Minnesota's GREATEST FAIR

Day and Night Show

Pennington County Fair

Pennington County's twenty-seventh annual fair will be held at Thief River Falls Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, August 1, 2 and 3, and according to advance reports this exposition will maintain its usual high standard this year. The program indicates that the entertainment arranged for this year is entirely different from anything that has been presented in Northwestern Minnesota in recent years.

One of the big features is Culbertson's Roman Circus, which includes such thrillers as choriot racing, Roman races, horse push balls and a score of other breath taking acts, but while is a complete show in itself, it is only a small part of the entire program which will be presented both in the afternoon and evening.

Other big attractions are horse races, both sulky and running events, airplane stunt flying and of course band concerts and good fireworks.

LESSON XXIX

Prevent Flies: Flies can be greatly lessened by removing their breeding places and their food supply Manure piles are regular incubators for flies and especially manure from horse barns. Manure should be hauled direct from the barns to the field to save fertility as well as to avoid flies. Flies reproduce in from 10 to 12 days and manure is their most common breeding place. It should be hauled to the field at least once a week in summer if not daily.

Sanitary conditions throout is the best prevention. In cities, where sanitation is strictly observed thru all garbage being removed, there are very few flies.

4-H Club To Meet

The Holt Boys and Girls 4-H club met in the local schoolhouse on Friday, July 6th, and a very good sized crowd attended the meeting. A splendid program was given.

Eunice Paskewitz was appointed to act as chairman of the program committee.

Mr. Collet gave a very interesting talk about the county fair at Warren.

The next meeting will be our last meeting for this year. We hope that next year every boy and girl will join the 4-H club.

Our next meeting will be held on August 10. You are all welcome to our meetings and, we hope to have a large attendance for our next meeting which will be our last in 1928.

We are planning on giving a real program. Come!

First "L" Line

The first successful elevated railway line in the world was opened to traffic in New York 48 years ago. This was the Sixth avenue line, part of which, the extension to Fifty-eighth street, was recently torn down. Later in the same year the Third avenue line was opened. An attempt had been made ten years previously to construct an elevated railway.

To Speak at Warren Soon

More than half the vast Canadian wheat crop is sold by the Canadian farmer on the terminal markets thru his farm-owned and controlled Wheat Pool, made up of the Provincial Pools of Manitoba, Sasketchewan, Alberta and Ontario. The story of how these Pools arose reads like a romance.

It is a story of how, in the face of post-war deflation and wide spread distress the farmers, bankers and business men of the Canadian Northwest created the greatest farmers' co-operative selling agency in the world.

Business men and farmers of the Red River Valley are to have an opportunity to hear this story from the lips of F. W. Ransom, Secretary of the Manitoba Grain Pool, in the near future.

Mr. Ransom is to be in the Valley, at Warren in the afternoon, and at Ada on the evening of July 26th. He comes at the special request of the wheat growers of the Valley. He will explain the Wheat Pool method of marketing, and tell how it has helped the farmers and business men of Canada.

This opporunity to hear one of Canada's great cooperative leaders will not soon come again. It is a rare chance to learn what our sister nation to the north has done and is doing to bring equality to agriculture and to restore prosperity to the local business man. Remember, Warren-Ada, July 26th.

H. O. Hanson and family, Mrs. Chas. Hagglund and children and Leo Horien and family spent the fourth at Maple Lake.

Rev. and Mrs. L. M. Redal and family returned home last Saturday after spending a two weeks vacation in N. D.

O. E. Sovde and family and Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Johnson spen Wednesday and Thursday of last week at Bemidji.

SEEKS ANNULMENT OF OLD DIVORCE

Woman Acts 44 Years After Decree Was Granted.

Lincoln, Neb.—The annulment of a divorce 18 years after her husband's death and 44 years after the decree was granted is sought by Mrs. Nancy E. Dermit of South Sioux City, Neb.

Mrs. Dermit, who is seventy-two years old, was not aware until after the death of her husband, a Civil war veteran, that she had been divorced from him. In 1884, the couple had trouble and separated and Mrs. Dermit began suit for divorce. Before the decree was granted, however, there was a reconciliation, and they began living together again, two more children being born.

Mrs. Dermit did not notify her attorney to cease efforts to obtain the divorce, she says, and he went ahead and got it. It is now held that the divorce was illegal without her appearance or testimony, but attorneys cannot find any way to prove that she and her witnesses were not present.

The judge who granted the divorce and the clerk of the court are now dead. Mrs. Dermit cannot go into court to have the divorce annulled, as her husband would have to be named defendant in that case. A suit cannot be brought directly against the district court.

When Dermit died in 1910, Mrs. Dermit applied to the pension department and it was then that the divorce was revealed. The couple lived in Iowa for years and that state recognizes a common law marriage, which their union was after the divorce. The pension department does not recognize common law marriages.

Several bills have been introduced in congress to permit her name to be placed on the roll of widows entitled to a pension, but none of them has passed.

An appeal from the pension board's decision to the United States Supreme court is being considered.

If Mrs. Dermit succeeds, she will be entitled to $4,500 back pension and $30 a month.

Montana Tree Disease Destroys Scotch Firs

A deadly tree disease, known as rhabdocline, introduced into Britain a few years ago with a consignment of Douglas firs from Montana, is sweeping across Scotland and the south of England. Experts are baffled, and consider that, wafted by the wind, this disease will eventually wipe out the majority of this type of fir throughout the British Isles.

The disease first attacks the leaves. Fungus spore gathers, usually on the under surface of the leaf. The leaves die, and within three or four years the tree is entirely denuded of leaves and dies also.

There are three members of the Douglas fir family, the Oregon, the blue, which is popular in the south of England for its beauty, and the intermediate. A curious feature of this epidemic is that so far it has hardly touched the Oregon, while its virulence among the other two species grows fiercer.

European Air Courses to Be Marked at Night

Le Bourget, France.—Night flyers soon will have good signal lights by which to steer their course on four air highways.

The way from Paris to London, Brussels, Marseilles and Perpignan will be marked with orange-colored neon electric lights which will flash continually the Morse code for the letters that will identify them.

There is but little flying in the dark as yet, but in every way French aviation is trying to prepare for the imminent development of night travel. One branch of this work is the training of pilots to steer by instruments alone. The men are taught by handling planes, in which they are enclosed in a dark cabinet, while another pilot who can see the ground prevents accidents by correcting errors through double control.

Tries Silence

Hoboken, N. J.—William Rautenkranz' defense for not speaking to his wife for a year is that she has been nagging him 25 years and silence is his only method of protecting himself.

Twins Jailed

Milwaukee, Wis.— Charged with passing worthless checks, Leon and Lloyd Longely, twins, of this city, have been sentenced to one year in prison.

Ash Carts Blazon Glories of Potsdam

Potsdam, Germany.—Citizens of the former kaiser's old residence rubbed their eyes in astonishment the other day when a number of brand new municipal vehicles appeared on the streets with "Residential City of Potsdam" painted on them.

Everybody is asking whether it is by accident or design that old memories of imperial splendor should be revived, and why the new municipal ash carts should be selected to blazon them forth.

FRIENDS AID FORTUNE WINNER BEAT SHARKS

Form Lucky Man Into Limited Liability Company.

London.—Tales of those who lose at gambling are seldom heard unless they take to crime or commit suicide as a result of their losses. Big winners at gambling flash across the newspaper horizon for a day or two and are soon forgotten, but the newspaper reader often wonders what the big winners do with their easily-gained fortunes. Do they blow them in quickly in riotous living, or do they save and usefully invest the money?

Now that the season is at hand when every true born Briton has a ticket in some sweepstake the London Daily Mail has looked up some of the men and women who struck it luckily in recent years. The investigation has revealed that so far as can be found, the past winners have not become wild spendthrifts by their good luck, but have thoughtfully used their money where it would do the most good.

Keeps Off Sharks.

William Kilpatrick, the Capetown dental mechanic, formerly of Leeds, who won $300,000 in the Calcutta sweep last year, has just returned to Milnthorpe, Westmoreland, where his mother and sweetheart live. He is to be married in July. He visited Milnthorpe soon after his success, but returned to Capetown in the autumn.

Immediately it was known that he was the winner last year friends in Capetown formed him into a limited liability company, so that his good nature could not be worked upon by sharks or anybody else. He settled on his mother and sisters at Milnthorpe a sum sufficient to bring them in a comfortable income. He also bought them a house and a motor car.

He established and endowed a soup kitchen to Capetown, where he intends to make his home.

James Strang of Pollok street, Glasgow, who won $36,000 with a $25 treble at last year's Derby, told a reporter that he had invested the money very profitably. He has continued in his occupation as a traveler for a firm of wholesale drapers in Glasgow.

Part Owner of Ticket.

Mrs. Ford, part owner of a ticket which won a little over $150,000 in the Derby sweepstake organized at Otley in 1923, still lives in her modest home in Pembroke street, Skipton, Yorkshire. Mrs. Ford had a quarter-share of a $2.50 ticket, half a share was owned by her mother, Mrs. Hodgson, who has since died, and the other quarter was in the name of a Mrs. Griffin, who was engaged as a cook in a Skipton coffee house. Mrs. Hodgson distributed most of her $75,000 among seven relatives.

Castor Oil Bean Drives Insects From Its Vicinity

Austin, Texas.—All kinds of insects have such a dislike for castor oil bean plants that they will not come near them, and this fact has caused experiments to be made of planting the beans in cotton fields as a means of keeping the boll weevil and other pests away.

It is stated that by planting a row of castor oil beans to every four or five rows of cotton, protection against insect invasion may be obtained. The castor oil beans themselves are a profitable crop, although it is admitted that should they be grown with cotton upon all the farms of the South there probably would result an overproduction of the beans.

Clumps of castor oil bean plants are grown around the homes of many families to ward off flies and mosquitoes, and it is regarded as strange that the idea that this plan might be adopted for keeping insect pests out of cotton fields was so long delayed in being put into practice.

Escapes With Five Kisses, Jailed for Taking Sixth

New York.—If Michael Gallagher had not been homesick for the Greenpoint section of Brooklyn, it might never have happened, he explained in police court. He was homesick and so he visited the section.

It was as wonderful as ever—and so were the Greenpoint girls. He kissed five he passed on the street. All seemed to get the idea that he meant well and to believe a watched kiss never boils, anyway, so they shooed him on his way forgivingly.

Then he met Miss Mae Hiryak, a stenographer who screamed and fought, and three Greenpoint young men who happened to be passing leaped upon Gallagher.

"Your honor," Gallagher said the next morning. "I believe Greenpoint has the prettiest girls in the world. I just couldn't help it."

"But Greenpoint can't stand for this. Five dollars and three days in jail," replied the court.

"Dead" Man Talks

Tokyo.—Although he was pronounced dead of cancer, Kihashiro Okura, ninety-one, of this city, refused to accept the doctor's verdict and later sat up and talked with friends who came to view the "remains."

Bar Sad Hymns

Doncaster, England.—Sir Henry Hadow, vice chancellor of Sheffield university, is active in an effort to eliminate from hymn books all hymns which would have the people believe the world is a place of misery.

"FLEA MARKET" OF PARIS IS DOOMED

Famous Institution Receives Its Death Blow.

Paris.—The French capital's world famous "flea market," venerable hunting ground for collectors of antiques, curios, Paisley shawls, possible Rembrandts, and low-priced and unclassifiable objects of every possible description, has finally received its death blow after seven centuries of business. Disapproved by the city officials and ignominiously shifted about from one to another of the city's outposts, the ancient mart succeeded in fighting every move to end its days until the passage of the new Sunday closing law, which automatically deprives it of its principal source of income.

For years American visitors and other foreigners have visited the Marche-aux-Puces every Sabbath to prowl among the curious displays of rusty nails, stovepipes, oily rags, and assorted junk for overlooked treasures until the wily merchants have become clever enough to conceal imitation antiques among worthless trinkets in the hope that ambitious amateurs would "discover" them and pay several times their value. In this manner the fair gradually lost its prestige until it reached a precarious state. With the weekly arrest of dozens of its merchants and the Sunday closing edict its doom is now sealed and its merchants are seeking other means of making a living.

Her Portrait Too Fat, Offers It for Sale

The portrait was that of Mrs. Florence Brooks-Aten, who engaged George De Forest Brush to paint it. His retainer was $10,000 plus $500 for a special frame.

When the work was done, Mrs. Brooks-Aten said the artist had given her too much weight. On her refusal to accept it he painted another portrait that equally displeased her. Then he sued for $7,000 and won a judgment for $4,000. The gallery understands she thus parted with $14,500 for a picture she would not keep and she ordered the sale to get back what she could.

Beauty Handicap to Women Seeking Work

London.—If a Ziegfeld Follies girl and a "blue stocking" both went after the same job, the Follies girl's good looks would lose it for her.

That was the general opinion voiced at a recent conference on new careers for women, held by the National Union of Women Voters. The meeting was debating whether good looks are a drawback to a girl taking up certain professions.

"We put forward a woman for a drawing office appointment," said Miss Haslett, organizer of the Women's Engineering society and Women's Electrical association, "and her qualifications were excellent, but the director said quite frankly that she was too good looking for the job, and would probably upset the men in their work."

Another director, expressing the technical qualifications required of a girl, added, "and she must not jump if the foreman says 'Damn!'"

Woman Sleuth Traps Pair With $5,000 Loot

Pittsburgh.—Betty Moran, alias "Deafie," alleged shoplifter with a record in many cities, and one of her pals were victims of strategy by city detectives. Detective Robert Best and William Cryster arrested Betty and her partner, Dorothy Hurd, and recovered goods valued at over $5,000.

When the Hurd woman displayed her merchandise to a woman detective who had been "planted" in the place both women were placed under arrest. They were released on bail of $5,000 each after hearings in Morals court.

"Jack" Moran, who drove the car and was also arrested, was exonerated by the Moran woman at the hearing and was discharged.

Mummies Now Safe

Cairo.—Royal mummies are safe from idle curiosity now. They are to be kept in a special room of a museum accessible only to notables and scientists.

Three Horns to a Car Is Rule in Venezuela

Caracas.—Venezuela's laws require every automobile to have two horns, but the really well equipped cars carry three, making the country a good market for such accessories. The law demands a hand horn for city driving and an electrically-operated signal for use on country roads. Drivers in mountainous territory add a third, operated by a button placed conveniently near the left knee, to permit quick or constant operation on steep grades and sharp curves.

Is THIRTY the Love Deadline?

Dr. George A. Dorsey is a great scientist, and a great student of human nature. For years he has studied human beings, not only in the civilized drawing rooms of the world, but in savage jungles, strange tropical lands, impenetrable Arctic countries. His recent book, "Why We Behave Like Human Beings," shows a startling insight into every process of the extraordinary mechanism we call man. Doctor Dorsey is married.

By GEORGE A. DORSEY,
Ph. D., LL. D.

"No man over thirty can fall in love." Isn't that just like a philosophaster! But perhaps Doctor Durant never said it. Or perhaps he was merely trying to establish an alibi. I don't know the facts in his case, but I can see how a man married at thirty-one and cooled off at thirty-two, might counter his wife's "You don't love me any more!" with: "I try, but I just can't; I never did love you, I only thought I did. No man over thirty can fall in love."

Why is there no fool like an old fool? Because he was a fool to fall at all, but the older he is the harder he falls.

Five years ago I met an old friend on the fast St. Louis-New York train. I had known him all my life, but never had I seen him so radiant in countenance or so resplendent in new clothes and shiny shoes. My random "You must be on your way to your wedding" made his old pink cheeks (he was only sixty-five) crimson, and, caught in the act as it were, he could only stammer: "How did you know?"

I didn't know, but all that I know of human nature and of the significance of being born human led me to believe that this nice old widower hadn't blossomed out for nothing. I could think of nothing but love that could drive him out of his rut and rusty routine into fine raiment and an excess fare train to New York.

A few weeks later I met the bride. She could not have been more than sixty, but she was as radiant as had been her lover on his way to claim her. Today, after five years, they are as much in love with each other as ever, and—note this point—his devotion is such as would tickle the vanity of the most exacting girl of eighteen married to a youth of twenty.

I said "note." It is bad enough to say that no man over thirty can fall in love, but to add that he cannot become devoted to a woman is to salt the wound to human capacity.

More is known about what man can do than about what he can't. In fact, to put an arbitrary limit on man's capacity is to disclose the limits of one's understanding of human nature. An ordinary man of thirty can grow no taller; the pituitary gland normally sets limits on increase in stature after twenty-five. The exceptional man can grow taller after he is thirty: his pituitary has not yet limited his growth. Normally, and speaking biologically, men can fall in love till they are fifty or sixty, a few till they are sixty or seventy, but some reach sex senility before they turn thirty. There is no arbitrary or fixed limit to the functioning of the love impulse—certainly no arbitrary limit at thirty years of age.

The depth of a man's love for a woman could well be believed to be greater at forty than at thirty, or at fifty than at twenty. The usual flare-ups of youth have been well styled "puppy love"—playful, fleeting, hesitating, ephemeral, and too often deaf, dumb and blind. Even savages recognize the fact, and some do not consider a man fit for enduring love and whole-hearted devotion until he is thirty years of age. They think, and not without reason, that love cannot ripen until the man has matured.

Cannot fall in love? Speak for yourself, Doctor Durant. Some can, I know. How do I know? I am reminded of the man who called up a lawyer to explain his trouble with the officers of the law. "But they can't put you in jail for that," replied the lawyer. "Maybe they can't; but I'm in!"

I'm in—for life, committed at the age of fifty-five. And as for "true devotion," perhaps I'm not the one to speak; but if forced to answer, would ask first: Just what do you mean by "devotion," Doctor Durant—if you really said it? Conjugal fidelity? Or such constancy for the welfare and happiness of a loved one as amounts to a zeal only to be surpassed, if at all, by devotion to a helpless child? If the former, age has nothing to do with it; if the latter, I don't know how old a man would have to be not to be able to become truly devoted to a woman.

Why don't I know? By the same token that prompted the old colored woman who, when asked how old a woman had to be before she could no longer fall in love, replied: "I dunno, honey; you'll have to ask somebody older 'n I is."

Fire Fanned by Rocks

Coal mine fires that rage underground long after all attempts to suffocate them have failed, are kept alive by "breathing rocks," in the opinion of Prof. W. Spencer Hutchinson, metallurgist of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. By "inhaling" air when the barometric pressure is high, he says in Popular Science Monthly, these porous rocks fan the under ground fires.

Has Heart Marked, Then Shoots Self

Ionia, Mich.—After persuading an Ionia doctor to mark its exact location, Miss Anna Mooney, fifty-five years old, of Hubbardston, fired a bullet from a .38-caliber revolver into her heart here recently. Death was instantaneous.

Miss Mooney, who had been a visitor at the home of Mrs. Emma Luscher six weeks, called on Dr. Raymond R. Whitten, then told him she always had a curiosity to know where her heart was, and asked him to mark the spot on her side. He did so with a piece of colored chalk.

The woman lived for years on a farm near Hubbardston. She had been in ill health for some time. She leaves a brother, John, and a sister, Mary, of Crystal.

SLASHER GIVEN SWIFT JUSTICE

Gets 180 Days for Cutting Women's Dresses.

New York.—Given an example of swift justice in the local courts, Severiano Rodriguez, butcher, fifty-two years of age, whose mania for slashing dresses of women in congested places has baffled police for three months, was sentenced to 180 days in the city jail by Muncipal Judge Wilson on two counts of malicious destruction of property.

Within 30 minutes from the time Deputy City Prosecutor Lindsey issued seven complaints against Rodriguez at behest of Policeman Luquet and Mrs. Myrtle Roberts, 428 West Second street, who led to his capture during the city hall parade, the defendant was being led to a jail cell.

He later was booked on 13 additional charges of malicious mischief by Detective Lieutenant Chitwood.

Rodriguez pleaded not guilty to six of the charges, but admitted the accusation of Mrs. Roberts. Because of the seriousness of the offense, more than 40 persons are believed to have fallen victims of Rodriguez' peculiar mania, Deputy City Prosecutor Margid requested the maximum sentence.

After imposing the maximum sentence for a misdemeanor Judge Wilson fixed bail at $6,000 and a date for trial of the other counts.

Mrs. Roberts stated she was witnessing the dedication parade when she felt a knife rip through her silk dress valued at $75. She followed the defendant for several blocks and summoned Officer Pruitt.

Others whose dresses were torn in front of the new city hall were Marie Brashear, Mrs. Theodora Webster, Mrs. Frances Vanevery, and Mrs. Marie Johnson, while Miss Millie Miller's clothing was torn on a crowded street car.

Goes to Jail for Horse, but Changes His Mind

New York.—History records the story of a fellow who, before the days of automobiles, offered his kingdom for a horse, but it remained for the present age to provide the man willing to go to jail for a horse—for half an hour.

The man is George F. Bryce, Brooklyn junk man, and the horse was Bill. George got old Bill two years ago, not in exchange for a kingdom, nor even Brooklyn, but for $12.50, and he declared in court that he had become very much attached to Bill.

It all developed this way. Bill was pulling George's junk wagon, but decided after a time to make no further progress; in fact, Bill lay right down in the street. A passing school teacher, seeing sores on the horse's back and legs, telephoned the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It sent Special Officer Thomas Midwinter to the scene of the lying down.

When he prepared to shoot Bill to end his suffering, George objected so much that he was arrested and Bill went on living.

In court Magistrate Folwell, after hearing both sides of this animal story, gave George the option of spending $50 on a fine or 20 days in jail. George chose the 20 days, but after completing half an hour of his sentence he was ready to grant permission to shoot old Bill.

But he still protested his love for his one-time $12.50 horse.

Robber Admits Killing Two-Gun Detective

Oklahoma City.—Clyde Short, confined in the Minnesota state penitentiary on a forty-year sentence for robbery, has confessed that he and a companion murdered Luther Bishop, Oklahoma detective, at his home here in December, 1926.

A letter telling of the confession was received by J. Berry King, assistant attorney general, from J. J. Sullivan, warden of the prison at Stillwater, Minn.

Bishop, a two-gun man and one of the most fearless officers in the state, was shot to death in bed at his home. Evidence was developed that he was killed with his own pistols. His widow was charged with having slain him out of jealousy but was freed by a jury. Her attorneys contended Bishop was killed by bank robbers or other criminals whom he had been trailing.

Failed in Attempt to Reach Pole by Balloon

The first attempt at arctic exploration by air, made in 1897, ended disastrously. The Swedish balloonist, S. A. Andree, and two companies, set out for the North pole in a large free balloon. The start was made from Danes island, in the north of Spitzbergen, on July 11, 1897. Five tons of supplies were carried. In an hour the balloon was out of sight. That night, seven and a half hours later, a message buoy, found later, was dropped. This was the last trace of the expedition, although years afterward various unconfirmed rumors of finding the balloon have come out of the Arctic regions of Siberia and Canada.

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian, and secret service man, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old. She does not want to leave Fair, for whom she has the affection of a daughter. Jim Barker, sheriff and aspirant for Stella's hand, directs Fair to run a shipment of arms into Mexico and bring back whisky. Unknown to Fair, Stella, dressed as a boy, accompanies the gang.

But Stella, suddenly uneasy, refused to be longer held. Up she jumped and ran out of the door and away to the stables.

As she ran in, Diego, on his knees beside her horse, straightened up, caught her eye, and flinched. Then, with quick recovery, he nodded violently. "Horse heap lame," he gasped.

"Lame!" Stella's face darkened. "He wasn't lame last night. How'd he get lame?"

"Quien sabe, senorita?" Diego stuttered and stammered in his confusion. "But pacienza, senorita, it is nothing. Soon will this so wonderful horse be well. It cannot be otherwise."

Stella had dropped on her knees and was examining the horse's foot. She could find nothing wrong, but when she tried to lead the animal out he limped badly.

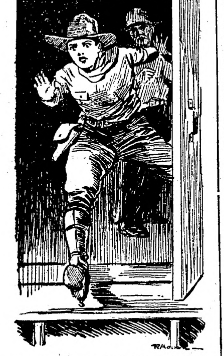
Diego hesitated; and Wade, who had followed Stella, grabbed him by the throat and flung him down. "Don't you hear what you're told?" he raged. "Go get another horse, pronto!"

But Diego threw up his hands in protest. "But, senor," he said, "there is no other. My men have gone on all the others to the station or to the corral. Have patience, senor, and they will return in the hour; but of a surety they are not here now."



Up She Jumped and Ran Out of the Door.

Stella listened with frowning brows. Though one of the least suspicious people in the world, she was not a fool; and she felt sure that there was something behind all this. But what?

As she hesitated Wade turned to her with a laugh. "I guess we're stung, all right," he said. "We've just got to wait. If the fools had told me in time I'd have made one of the men give you his horse and wait. As it is—well, I guess Fair will give me the devil, anyway."

Stella did not rise to the occasion. She did not assure Wade that she would back him up when he told her father that she had taken Charley's place and that he had not known it until hours later. Instead she looked him in the eyes.

"Have the rest of our men gone?" she asked.

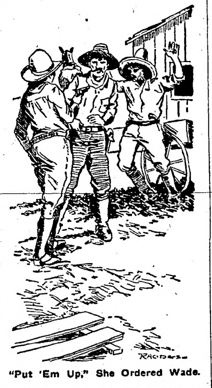
Wade shrugged his shoulders. "I don't know for sure," he answered; "but I guess they have. We don't wait for each other goin' home. You know that yourself."

Stella did know it. Nevertheless—"Will Barker be here this morning?" she asked, flatly.

In spite of himself Wade flushed hotly. But he answered quickly, if evasively. "How'n thunder do I know?" he demanded. "Barker does what he pleases. I ain't his keeper."

Stella could read the falsehood in his eyes. Too late she realized that she had been trapped.

"I'll take your horse and go on," she suggested. "You can come later. I'll square you with dad before you get to the Roost."



"Put 'Em Up," She Ordered Wade.

But Wade shook his head. After all, he decided, why should he longer keep up the deception? The trap had been sprung and the victim was in the toils.

"Nothin' doin'," he replied, roughly. "You come on this trip on your own say-so. Now you've got to take the consequences."

Instantly Stella's hand dropped to her belt and her ever-ready pistol flashed up, covering both Diego and Wade.

Wade had put up his hands as ordered; but now he took them down. "Aw, what's the use foolin'," he said. "We've got you; an' it's about time you knew it. You ain't as smart as I thought you was, or you'd 'a' caught on sooner. Sure, Barker's comin'; an' he's bringing in the padre with him to make you Mrs. Jim Barker. As for that gun of yours, the cartridges in it ain't loaded. One of the boys changed 'em while you was eatin' breakfast. Just hand it over, pronto."

Stella paled; but she did not lower her pistol. Wade might be speaking the truth about the cartridges and he might not. Most certainly she did not intend to take his word for it. She had plenty of cartridges in her belt, but of course she could not make instant use of them. Nevertheless—

"I'm going to find out first if you're lying," she remarked coolly. "If you are you'd better speak up quick; for if you don't you're going to die. One! Two! Three!" With the "three" she pressed the trigger.

The lock clicked. No explosion followed. Wade had told the truth as to that one cartridge, at any rate. Swiftly the girl snapped the revolver again and again.

Still no report sounded; and the grin on Wade's face told her as clearly as the gun itself that he had spoken the truth.

Coolly she lowered it. "You did tell the truth once," she admitted. "By some mistake, I reckon. Here's the gun. Take it." She tossed the weapon at Wade's feet.

Then, as he stooped to pick it up, she darted past him and hurried to the house.

Wade made no attempt to stop her. He guessed that she hoped to find another pistol; but he knew that none was there to be found. So he followed her slowly, chuckling to himself, and giving her ample time to search the house. It was very simple and very simply furnished; and it would not take long to search.

It did not. Stella soon found this out. Then, for she was a sensible girl, she went into the big living room and sat down to consider what to do.

To Clinch the Bargain

A Kansas City man employed in an expert capacity received an offer from a rival firm recently, and went to talk the matter over. The prospective employer named a certain sum to start the salary discussion, but the expert did not like the looks of the new job, and so he said, "I'm sorry, but I have a contract with my company which has two years to run."

"Contract be blowed!" said the rival boss, who is also a lawyer. "I can break any contract ever written. Now, you come with us, and I'll give you $100 a month more than you're getting now."

"Well, I guess I'd better not."

"Listen. I'll give you $150 more."

"No, I—"

"And a contract!"—Kansas City Star.

LAURA'S CARAWAY COOKIES

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

MRS. SHAWL paused as she was going down the steps to ask the question which had brought her to Laura Welden's and which she had been deferring from reasons of diplomacy until this very moment.

"I suppose you will not try to keep house?"

Laura Welden smiled into the eyes of her old acquaintance. She would have smiled into the face of death itself, such was her courage.

"Why, I don't know why you think I shouldn't keep my house, Alice," she returned.

"You could get a good price for it, that's all. I know whom you could sell it to. Mrs. Appleby—"

"Well, just the same I am not going to sell. I don't have to. Mr. Welden left me very comfortable."

Mrs. Shawl stared. She had heard something quite different.

"I'm glad if he did," she said. "Well, good-by, Laura. Come and see me."

Laura made an appropriate answer and then turned her back on the rustling, gray, abundant figure. She went into her house and closed the door. As she did so a mirror caught her full reflection. She gazed into her own eyes reproachfully.

"If I ever told a lie in my life it was when I said Israel left me very comfortable. He started out to, but his sickness took a lot of money. All I have got in this whole world is my house, my furniture and the land about it and just about $1,000 in money. I can't live on that very long, anyway."

The enormity of her denial combated a sturdy pride in keeping the condition of affairs to herself. She was sixty-two years old and not particularly strong, that is, her body was too light for the vigorous engine that propelled it. And she knew human nature. People like to be shocked even though it be a mishap to a friend. If she sold her house and moved out into rooms everybody would sympathize first and add afterwards:

"Well, Laura Welden has always held her head high. She can't expect to keep it there forever."

Now realizing these and many other things, Laura Welden sat down to try conclusions with a destiny so obvious that at first there seemed no sense in wrestling with it. She concluded presently that she would not sell her house. Her beloved house! She looked about it with yearning eyes. She had been twenty-eight when Israel Welden gave her his love and protection and the first home she had ever known. Perhaps home meant more to her than to most women. She had always thought so.

She ran over ways and means. Boarders? Roomers? Then her house would cease to be a home in the truest sense. She had no children, no near real relatives to aid her. She had nothing but her two hands and her head.

Suddenly thought and apprehension overpowered her and she sprang to her feet seeking relief in action. Going to her immaculate kitchen she whipped up her fire, got out mixing bowl and molding board. Within ten minutes her spirits were rising in the pleasant occupation of making cookies. She cut them neatly in oak and clover leaf designs and sprinkled them with caraway seeds. As they came hot from the oven she sifted sugar over them. They smelled and looked most tempting.

Filling a plate with the cookies she went across to Miss Field's. Miss Field lay in her porch hammock, still frail after a long illness.

"I've brought you a plateful of my cookies, Miss Field," Laura said. "I thought maybe they would tempt your appetite." She whisked off the napkin and presented her offering.

"Why, Mrs. Welden! These are wonderful," she exclaimed. "I never tasted anything so delicious or saw anything so attractive. Do you know," she laughed, "if I possessed an accomplishment of this kind I would make my fortune?"

"What do you mean?" breathed Laura.

"Why, I'd bake these cakes and pack them in pretty boxes and sell them to city people for fifty cents a dozen. I—" Miss Feld's imagination bounded—"I would call them the Laura Seed Cookies, and I'd advertise them so highly that soon all the world would be knocking at my door."

"Now you are joking," said Laura. "But all the same you have given me an idea." Her lips trembled. "And if you only knew how I've needed an idea."

She went back home and set to work again, this time actuated by something more than neighborly kindness. Her color flew, her fingers trembled, but her heart was high with hope. It seemed a great absurdity, this trusting to a mere caraway cooky to lead one to success. And yet it was a door. She meant to open it wide.

All the rest of that day she worked feverishly. She burned up a panful in her zeal. But, never mind, her thoughts kept pace with her emotions. Inspiration came, too. Upon each cooky she stamped a dainty "L." It was a beginning.

That evening, until a late hour, she worked packing cookies into little boxes which she had made herself out of buff cardboard, and lined with paraffin paper and tied with black cord. The cover of each box held a dainty inscription in black, "Laura Seed Cakes."

Next morning the paper held a startling advertisement for all the world to see. Next morning printed circulars were left at all the places where there were city boarders, at the shops downtown, at many private residences. The circular stated simply that Mrs. Welden was prepared to furnish Laura Seed Cakes at short notice.

Customers began to arrive. Before night the supply was exhausted. Money jingled in the blue pitcher. She was flushed, palpitating, happy. It was all she could do to snatch time to make more cakes. Then with a burst of triumph she realized that she would have to hire help.

The first week assured her that she had found a way to earning. A month established her reputation. By the end of summer she had built up a trade that extended as far as a neighboring city, where her cakes were eagerly sought as an accompaniment for afternoon tea.

Her success continued without being phenomenal. It was one of those things which, being started, moves with comfortable celerity. Her kitchen range the instrument of achievement. She had hours of work, pleasant work with a competent helper. She began to order her boxes instead of making them, she added other designs—star and diamond and rosette, but the clover and oak leaf always remained most popular.

She kept her home, her self-respect, the admiration of her neighbors. Busy, happy, prosperous, she set a new standard in her own town for the woman who dares.

As for Miss Field, she became so interested in her friend's business that she was actually helped to complete recovery, a thing the doctors had despaired of. In time she was able to manage all the advertising part of the enterprise herself.

Old Custom Smashed by Egyptian Woman

In all the many dynasties which have rolled over Egypt only one woman of the Nile has ever stood unveiled in the presence of a pharaoh and lived to tell the tale.

The one woman who has had this experience had it the other day when King Fuad of Egypt was the guest of the President of the French republic. Madame Hackel, wife of an Egyptian newspaper editor, dared to do this thing. She was dressed by a Paris dressmaker; and though it might have been the strangeness of being well dressed that nerved her to this act of daring, there was something also in being connected with the liberty of the press.

Thus, little noticed by grave historians, great changes come to pass. Madame Hackel may come to be remembered as one of the liberators of the women of the East from the bonds of custom that have bound them for centuries. Queen Vashti refused to come unveiled into the presence of King Ahasuerus and his court; Madame Hackel has asserted the right of women to enter the presence of the king unveiled and look the monarch in the face.

Lunch "Dead-Line"

Charles T. Gwynne, vice president of the New York State Chamber of Commerce, tells of starting his business career as an office boy for Edison. One of his tasks consisted of providing sandwiches for Mr. Edison's lunch. But as the famous inventor often became so absorbed in his work as to forget his luncheon, Gwynne, about the middle of the afternoon, with a normal youth's appetite, couldn't resist devouring the sandwiches himself. Each day he ate them a little earlier, and all went well until about noon Mr. Edison brought a friend to have lunch with him and found nothing but empty plates. Gwynne expected to be "fired," but Mr. Edison after some severe looks, simply remarked: "Well, after this, make the lunch 'dead-line' one o'clock."—Boston Globe.

Largest Bank in the World

The National City bank stands sixth among the largest banks in the English-speaking world. It is exceeded only by the "Big Five" of London, according to the Boston News Bureau, a financial newspaper. Heading the list given in the Boston News Bureau is the Midland bank with total deposits of $1,821,896,600, followed by Lloyds bank with $1,738,240,300, Barclay's bank with $1,549,364,500, Westminster bank with $1,372,475,700 and National Provincial bank with $1,331,460,800. National City's deposits as of December 31 were $1,275,042,000. In point of capital structure the National City bank is the largest bank in the world. On completion of present plans the bank's capital of $90,000,000 will compare with $79,200,000 paid-in capital of Barclay's bank.

Hare Evidently Had Good Ear for Music

The late Rev. R. Eastcote of Exeter, England, once told the story of five choristers who, one Sunday evening, were walking along the banks of the Mersey in Cheshire. After a time they sat down on the grass and began to sing an anthem. A hare passing with great swiftness toward the place where they were sitting stopped at about twenty yards distance from them.

She appeared to be highly delighted with the music, and as soon as the singers ceased returned slowly to the wood. When she had nearly reached the end of the field the choristers began to sing again.

The hare stopped, turned round, and came swiftly to the same place and remained listening in seeming rapture and delight until the singing ceased, when it returned to the woods.

World Trip in Submarine

A Dutch scholar has just completed a submarine trip around the world. At some places he was able to detect with comparative ease one of the phenomena known to scientists for some time, the difference in weight of the same objects at various points on the globe. This was done with instruments so delicate that they could not function accurately on board an above-water vessel, due to the motion. The difference in weight is believed to be caused by variations in the density of strata composing the crust of the earth.

Patriotic Chinese Girls

Students of the Jing Nyih girls' school at Shanghai have set a new precedent in Chinese war relief work. They have organized to help the soldiers at the front and to send them gifts, including socks and cigarettes. At a recent theatrical entertainment hundreds of girls pledged themselves to procure funds and gifts for the "Nationalist boys at the front."

Long Auto Tow

Dr. Eugene W. Fisk of Santa Fe, N. M., claims the long-distance record for being towed. Doctor Fisk found, when he was ready to return from a trip to a far-distant farmhouse, that the generator of his car was burned out. A two-ton truck came to his rescue and towed him 77 miles from La Ventana to Albuquerque, over the most hazardous of mountain roads. The trip took five hours. The tow rope broke once and the truck went on some miles before the driver discovered he had lost his trailer.

Kings Collect Coins

That kings are collectors of rare coins has been revealed in connection with work done by the king of Italy in publishing a series of books on the coins of Italy. His personal collection of 100,000 specimens is the largest in the world. King George of England also has a large collection, and other rulers are said to have taken a keen interest in the subject.

Here's Speedy Relief for Tender, Aching, Swollen Feet

Your feet may be so swollen and inflamed that you think you can't go another step. Your shoes may feel as if they are cutting right into the flesh. You feel sick all over with the pain and torture, you'd give anything to get relief.

Two or three applications of Moone's Emerald Oil and in fifteen minutes the pain and soreness disappears. A few more applications at regular intervals and the swelling reduces.

And as for Soft Corns and Callouses a few applications each night at bed time and they just seem to shrivel right up and scale off.

No matter how discouraged you have been with powders, foot baths or other applications, if you have not tried Emerald Oil then you have something to learn.

It's a wonderful formula—this combination of essential oils with camphor and other antiseptics so marvelous that thousands of bottles are sold annually for reducing varicose or swollen veins.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Mary Gasper and John Gasper, her husband, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 5th day of November, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 8th day of November, 1926, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 228 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Eighty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($87.50), which became due and payable on the 5th day of May, 1927, the 5th day of November, 1927, and the 5th day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand Seven Hundred Fifty-six Dollars and eighty-nine cents ($2,756.89), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 5th day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and Two Hundred Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($262.50) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $87.50 thereof from November 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Three Thousand Fifty-five Dollars and seventy-six cents ($3,055.76);

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The West Half of the Northeast Quarter (W½ of NE¼) and the Southeast Quarter of the Northwest Quarter (SE¼ of NW¼) and Government Lot Two (2) of Section Nineteen (19), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 18th day of August, 1928, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON BUILDING AN INCOME

As Aunt Emmy came out of the savings bank she met young George Oliver.

"Well, well," he said, "it's funny to see you coming out of a savings bank, Aunt Emmy. I thought only poor folks like me had money in savings banks—people like you just clip coupons!"

"Have you a savings bank account?" countered Aunt Emmy.

"Well, er—I suppose I haven't," he admitted. "You see, it's hard to save money when you're first married. Somehow there never seems to be enough money to go 'round—let alone to put in a savings bank."

"You never will have if you don't get started," interrupted Aunt Emmy. "You should make your weekly savings deposit, no matter how small, the first claim on your salary after paying your bills. I make my weekly deposit in this bank faithfully—I put away a certain sum regularly."

"You can!" Nat commented.

"It is more a habit than you would suppose," Aunt Emmy continued. "Any one can do it who is willing to let other things wait. I began putting a little money in a savings bank years ago when it was no joke to save a few pennies. I remember what a wonderful thrill I got the first time I saw my interest entered in my bank book. There was money that my money had earned all by itself. After that it was a sort of game with me to put a certain sum in the bank, even if I had to do without things I would have enjoyed having. Now I realize what it means to keep your money busy earning all the time so I continue to put a little in the savings bank regularly and, after it accumulates, I draw some out and invest in safe securities that pay a higher rate of interest than savings. All the time, you see, the money is working for me.

"Of course, when the sum is small, it earns little, but if you start young, as you and Molly are, it is almost like magic the way it mounts up after a few years—then when your savings get grown up into a real investment they earn a real income."

"I never thought of it in that light," said George.

"Try it—and see for yourself how it works," urged Aunt Emmy. "Have you ever thought how nice it would be to have a few dollars ready for use in case of an emergency? Accidents and illnesses do happen. Or suppose you had an opportunity to buy something you knew you could sell at a profit and you had to let the opportunity slip for the lack of a few hundred dollars. You and Molly would never miss five dollars a week—and if you keep at it, it will work wonders!"

"You're right, it would!" exclaimed George. "I'll talk to Molly tonight, Aunt Emmy, and see if we can't revise our expenditures."

"There would be a whole lot less family trouble and worry over money matters if every young couple did the same thing early in life," Aunt Emmy said. "'Start young,' is the magic slogan."

BANKERS PROMOTE FARM CONTESTS

Standard methods of farm administration have been made the basis of a contest by bankers of Pickens County, Alabama, as a method of bringing a farm and home program to their patrons, says the bulletin of the Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association. A safe and profitable farm community is the goal in this work.

Standard Farm Scorecard

Congressmen To Speak At Lake Resort Picnic Sunday

Two congressmen, C.G. Selvig of Crookston and Harold Knutson of St. Cloud will be guests of the Red Lake Resort association at its annual picnic at the Narrows July 22. Both men accepted invitations to speak early this week.

A complete program of sports, speeches, and music has been prepared by the program committee. The pilot car will leave the city promptly at 7 a. m., according to the schedule. Steenerson's Garage will accompany the tour with a service car, as they did last year, to take care of any emergencies that may arise.

Basket picnic dinner will be brot by the guests. Coffee and sugar has been donated by the Thief River Grocery and cream by the Thief River Creamery, and will be served free on the grounds. There will be all-day suckers for the kiddies donated by Gamble-Robinson Co., and fresh fish groceries and confections will be on sale at the community store. Free ice will be available on the grounds.

The following program is announced for the afternoon.:

12-1—band concert.
1-1:45—Speech by Congressman Selvig.
1:45-2:15—Community singing led by V. C. Noper.
2:15-3—Speech by Congressman Knutson.
3-5:30—Water sports.

Listed among the sports numbers are a kittenball game, with a $10 prize for the winning team; a motor boat race across the narrows and return $5 for class A and $3 for class B; a row boat tug of war for a purse of $2; row boat races for $3 in prizes; and a log rolling contest for a $5 purse

Red Lake, Polk, Clearwater, Marshall, Roseau and Beltrami counties have been invited by the Summer Resort association and the Thief River Falls Commercial Club to join in the tour. Last year, in spite of bad weather, 2000 people attended. This year the road has been improved, and a crowd of 3,000 is expected by the committee in charge of arrangements.

Red Lake is rapidly becoming the summer playground of northwestern Minnesota and Eastern North Dakota and with the opening of the new road across the reservation, it will be easily accessable to tourists from all parts of the country. With a lake shore of 360 miles, it is the largest body of fresh water entirely within the United States.

Pennington County Fair

One of the most interesting features of the Pennington County fair for many of the people of this community will be the fact that children will be admitted free when accompanied by parents or guardians. This is the result of action taken by the fair board at a recent meeting, it being felt that many both parents and children have been kept from the fair in past years because of the high cost of admission for a large family. The age limit on the free admission under this ruling is fourteen years.

LESSON XXIX

CURING HAY: The feeding value of hay is often lessened by over-curing. The chief feed value of clover and alfalfa is in the leaves and when they are over-dry they break off and are lost. Hay becomes less digestible from too much exposure to the sun.

When the weather is favorable, hay cut one day and put in the loft the next is best for dairy cows. When the crop is light and the weather dry and hot, hay can be put in the same day it is cut.

Hay will dry out to a considerable extent in the loft when it is mowed evenly and loosely. There should be windows or doors in the ends of the loft to permit a circulation of air.

Good hay, and especially good alfalfa or clover, reduces the amount of grain required both for dairy cows and for horses. The feed value of alfalfa hay is nearly that of wheat bran, but only when it has been cured in a way that retains its nutrition.

DEATH FROM HEART DISEASE ON GAIN

Emotional Strain of Modern Life Blamed.

London.—The mental and emotional strain of modern life is mainly responsible for the 400 per cent increase in deaths from heart disease in Great Britain and other countries, in the opinion of Dr. J. Strickland Goodall, London cardiologist and physician.

"While the death rate from cancer has increased rather less than 25 per cent, that from heart disease has increased nearly 400 per cent," Doctor Goodall informed members of the Institute of Hygiene.

"The form in which we take our pleasure," he asserted, "is a direct inversion of nature's demands for adequate rest."

The habits of visiting night clubs, drinking cocktails and smoking excessively were listed by Doctor Goodall among the destructive pleasures. He further maintained that "the emotional character of modern plays, novels and films, with their appeals to the baser passions, inevitably tends to overstrain, with results which are reflected in the enormously increased number of deaths from heart disease."

These deaths are occurring at an earlier age than formerly, Doctor Goodall reported. Whereas a few years ago the common age of sudden death was between fifty and sixty years, an analysis of recent deaths had disclosed that "the age is becoming much less."

The physician recalled that 12 persons died suddenly in the United States while listening to the running account of the Tunney-Dempsey fight in Chicago, and that seven of these succumbed when Tunney was floored in the seventh round. He attributed all to emotional strain.

A critical investigation of thousands of cases of sudden death shows, said Doctor Goodall, that most of them are due to arterio-sclerosis, or hardening of the arteries, a disease often caused by hard physical work, mental strain and emotion.

Makes 14th South Sea Trip to Study Snails

New York.—Snails offer "a sure proof of evolution," says Henry E. Crampton, professor of zoology in Barnard college, who has sailed from Vancouver, B. C., on his fourteenth expedition to the South Sea islands to study land snails living on bushes in the high mountain valleys of the oriental and American tropics.

"I care nothing and know nothing about snails," the professor said. "My interest is in the history which they have written down, for those who can read it, of the processes by which evolution comes about in wild nature.

"How the snails differ from valley to valley, from island to island, and from group to group, is part of the story. Principles of their distribution are to be derived from their layout. When the distribution is analyzed, we obtain sure proof of evolution."

Where Gold and Silver Are Trodden in Dirt

Algiers, Morocco.—Gold and silver "dust" that has been accumulating for centuries is to be taken from Moroccan jewelers' "souks" and sold. The "souks" are the market places: Jewelers, like all other tradesmen, work there in the open or in squalid little shops, son succeeding father in the business, always on the same spot.

The "sweepings" so valuable in American and European jewelry workrooms, never have been gathered and smelted here. The first effort to do this will be tried by a newly formed French company, whose experts believe there are fortunes in gold and silver filings trodden into the dirt floors of the native shops.

Mexico Palace Addition Cost Lives of 80 Workmen

Mexico City.—When the magnificent fourth floor addition to the National palace is completed, its cost will have to be reckoned not only in pesos, but in human life. To date eighty workmen have been killed in falls and other accidents resulting from building operations on the upper extension of the administrative edifice of Mexico's federal government.

Not New Species

Canton, China.—An American biologist sent a native to get specimens of the "tiger-crabs" of whose ravages villagers complained. The collector returned to report "tiger-crabs" were lawless soldiers.

Big Oil Company Uses Goats to Cut Its Grass

Oklahoma City, Okla.—The mowing machine and lawn mower business took a blow at Ponca City, Okla., recently when a big oil company decided to use goats to keep the grass cut on its 160-acre tank farm. There are on the farm more than 106 tanks, holding about 140,000,000 gallons of crude oil and gasoline, and strict precautions against fire are necessary. As goats do not play with fire, they won the contract on the grounds of safety and economy.

U. S. BREAKS UP GANG OF ALIEN SMUGGLERS

Immigration Inspectors Nab Two Leaders.

Brownsville, Texas.—With the trial conviction and sentencing to jail of Isaac Amram and Juan Samano on charges of smuggling aliens into the United States, it is believed by United States immigration authorities here that the two leaders of a far-reaching band of border lawbreakers have been disposed of, temporarily at least. An investigation is now being made to determine whether or not the smuggling organization had ramifications in New York, Europe and the different ports of Mexico. Hundreds of aliens, most of them Greeks and Italians, were clandestinely brought across the Rio Grande by Amram and Samano.

Amram, who is only twenty-six years old, speaks English, Spanish, French Greek, Italian, German and Turkish fluently and has a smattering of various other tongues and dialects. He has traveled extensively through Europe, Asia, Spanish America and the United States, acquiring his education in this country.

Charge is $100 a Head.

According to his story, his grandfather, a Spaniard, settled in Turkey, and he was born in that country, coming to Mexico several years ago. Some of the languages he acquired as a youth along the Mediterranean; others he studied in universities.

Juan Samano was until recently a magistrate at Reynosa, Mexico. According to Amram's version of the gang's activities, Italians and Greeks were brought across the river, the smugglers charging $100 a head for this service.

Belief that the organized gang of alien smugglers operating from Reynosa had been broken up by the arrest of Samano and Amram was expressed by Brownsville immigration officers, who assert that through the activities of the organization many Greeks and Italians were brought to this side of the Rio Grande. The confession of Amram and the details brought out in stories told by the captured aliens coincided.

Leader Smuggled In.

American immigration officials had ascertained from several Greeks and Italians, apprehended after they had crossed the river, that Samano was a member of the organization which had its headquarters at Reynosa and had been endeavoring for several weeks to effect his capture. He was finally apprehended at the American customs office at Hidalgo when he crossed to get a manifest on an automobile he had purchased.

Amram stated he was smuggled across the river at Reynosa two years ago, Samano aiding him; that he went to New York, where he was employed as a musician, and later came back to the border and became a member of the Reynosa band.

Preacher by Day Is Cab Driver at Night

New York.—By day he is Rev. Thomas H. Whelpley, ministering to his flock at the Chelsea Presbyterian church, but by night he is plain Tom Whelpley, hack driver.

His motive is not hard to understand. He is alive with curiosity about how the many thousands who seldom appear at church on Sunday spend the long Saturday nights before and driving gives him a chance to know.

Recently, while out on a run, he remembered he had a wedding to perform. In a minute he had rushed into his room, changed into his clerical garb and walked solemnly into the transept.

After the ceremony, as the young couple were being congratulated in the doorway, Rev. Whelpley did his Jekyl-Hyde act and appeared at the wheel of his cab.

"Cab!" shouted the young groom.

"Yes, sir," answered the preacher, who had just tied the knot. They were off through the rain to Woodside, L. I., and their new home.

Lonely After Release, Convict Kills Self

New York.—To James Brackett the stone walls of Sing Sing meant home. "I can't stand the loneliness of freedom," he said after he had been released on parole recently. Seventeen years ago Brackett was convicted of murder and sentenced to the death chair. One hour before the time of his execution a reprieve was granted.

After fifteen years he was released on parole, but the lonliness preyed on his mind.

"All my pals are up there," he said. "I want to go back."

Brackett was found dead in his bed, the gas jets open. He was buried by Capt. Stanley Shepard, the Salvation army parole officer, who saw to it that his remains did not lie in the Potter's field.

Girls Wear "Galluses" Just to Mock the Men

Visalia, Calif.—Not to be outdone by the men of the Tulare county courthouse, girl employees have taken to wearing suspenders. When young men clerks and deputies suddenly appeared in the courthouse wearing "galluses." Mrs. Edna Dewey Harkins, deputy county recorder, started something by donning a pair of red suspenders, and now there is an epidemic.

FAMOUS BELL BACK IN SAN FRANCISCO

Used in Early Days to Call Out Citizens.

San Francisco.—Priceless relic of early days in San Francisco, the Vigilante bell that used to summon the people to council and war at Fort Gunnybags, here in the '50s, has been hung in the marine deaprtment of the chamber of commerce, a gift to the chamber from the First Baptist church of Petaluma.

Stirring memories of those times which tried the hearts of San Francisco's best men and the necks of her worst were recalled when Robert Newton Lynch, vice president and general manager of the chamber, announced the presentation. It was through his efforts that the bell was brought back here.

The bell was purchased in 1856 by the Vigilante committee, of which W. T. Coleman was then president. It was bought from a Boston firm of metal workers, Conroy & Connors, weighed 1,100 pounds, and cost $1,500. It is bronze.

Hung in the steeple of old Fort Gunnybags, it sounded the death knell of many a reckless villain, proclaimed peace and victory to the upright and struck terror to the hearts of the vicious when the Vigilantes found it necessary to take the law into their own hands.

In 1858, when the bell no longer was required, the residents of Petaluma bought it from the Vigilantes for $550 and hung it in their first Baptist church. There it was used both for religious services and as a time bell, sounding the hour at 6 a. m., noon, and 6 p. m.

When the Civil war started, Union sympathizers rang it to announce Northern victories and those friendly to the Southern cause became angry. To prevent discord among members of the community, the bell was taken down and hauled away one dark night to a warehouse. A few hours later Northern sympathizers returned it to the steeple, hoisting the Stars and Stripes above it.

The next night a Southerner made his way unobserved into the belfry, and with a hammer sought to silence the bell forever. He made a big crack in it, not unlike that in the famous Liberty bell, but this had no silencing effect. The bell remained in use until 1907, and its chimes could be heard through the countryside within a ten-mile radius.

Future Seaplanes to Be Less Cumbersome

Langley Field, Va.—Seaplanes of the future need not be so cumbersome as those of the past.

This has been established by experts of the national advisory committee for aeronautics in a minute examination of the work actually done by a seaplane's pontoons, which enable it to alight on water, but cut down its speed in the air.

Present specifications for navy seaplanes call for pontoons having a structure sufficiently strong to withstand a shock on landing of 15 pounds to the square inch. Measurements made here with delicate instruments attached to various points on the floating surface of pontoons in operation, however, show that only seven pounds of pressure is exerted to the square inch, suggesting that their strength can easily be reduced with a material saving in weight and a corresponding improvement in performance and endurance in the air.

Wants Typist Job, But Has Only One Hand

Detroit, Mich.—Mrs. Flora Parker is looking for a job as typist or stenographer and she has only one arm.

When she was two and one-half years old in London she was the victim of an accident. After she grew up she taught school in London and then there was a young chap who had "gone out," as they say over there, to Canada. He sent for her. They were married. Two years later there was a baby and then, suddenly, Mrs. Parker was the Widow Parker. Little Flora is three.

"I intend to make my own living," she said. "It is going to be difficult to make any prospective employer believe that I can be efficient. I can be. I am fast on the typewriter and my missing arm has never been a missing one to me. You see, I lost it so young that I never knew its use, and what we never have we do not miss."

Kill Sacred Cow

Simla, India.—Six persons were killed and nine wounded near here when a party of pilgrims attempted to prevent the slaughter of a cow held sacred by them. The cow was killed, and a riot ensued.

Canned Music Stirs Ire of Paris Critics

Paris.—Something must be done to head off canned music, say the terribly shocked musical critics who contemplate the speedy abolition of the element in orchestras. It is the recent excitement over machine played violins, the perfection of phonographs, and the construction of mechanical orchestras for motion picture houses that has stirred the classic ire of the judges of the press.

PICKING THE BRIDE'S BOUQUET

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

HUNT & HUNT often congratulated themselves on their Miss Andrews. Where could they have found a secretary so alert, so modern, so everything that was efficient? Luck—that was all. And the luck stayed with them. Other firms might envy the treasure, with her knowledge of deeds, transfers, business ratings, all at her finger tips. But hintings as to bettering herself never seemed to penetrate Miss Andrews' pretty ears—ears just peeping from modest bunches of curls.

And as for handling prospects!

"Like magic she does it," James Hunt would murmur in admiration as she landed some millionaire with a high-priced showy place, and had the decorators presenting their plans to the new owner before one could say Jack Robinson—supposing one mentioned such a low person in the office of Hunt & Hunt.

"I wonder if Miss Andrews was ever a girl—flapper—now, like my nieces and these other youngsters all so boyish in looks that they puzzle me. Miss Andrews is smart-looking, of course, but—well—she never had a romance, I'll swear."

Which was unkind, for all the elements of a first-class thriller were tangled up in what she called to herself the "dear past."

Romance? Miss Hunt was steeped in it. But when one pays the best tailor in town fancy prices to keep one looking businesslike, and when dark hair, a bit curly as it is, minds its mistress and stays put all day long, it must be admitted that there is little color of a romantic hue in the appearance.

Even in her own little apartment—as neat and trim as Miss Andrews—there wasn't even an incense burner to dispense that weird odor which fiction lovers imagine transports the whole room to far-off enchanted lands.

No. Miss Andrews was more apt to scent her apartment with good coffee—a cup of which she enjoyed over her open fire of an evening.

But when the real story began to happen it was June and a hot June, and the coffee had been foregone for a week or more. Miss Andrews was restless and wished she could take her vacation a bit early.

"Can I be getting old? That surely wasn't a white hair there!

"I wish—I wish—dear me—what do I wish?

"I'd like to have a house with a yard. Not a lawn, but an old-fashioned yard like we had at home in Kingston. This apartment is so stuffy. And hardwood floors and rugs hurt my feet.

"Let me see—how much have I in bonds now?

"No—not enough. And I couldn't come in to the office if I lived as far as Kingston.

"Well, I may as well forget it."

Forgetting made her cross, perhaps, for she shoved Felix Shoe-Polish rudely away when he came purring after a romp with his catnip mouse.

"Go away! You ought to be out in the grass, chasing field mice, with catnip leaves in your ears, Felix! I wonder why women must work alone so long for a little bit of living money? James Hunt has had enough to retire on this five years—and I've helped him make it, but I get only a 'raise' once a year and a bonus at New Year's.

"I wish—"

What Miss Andrews wished was forgotten the next day when Mr. Hunt the elder told her he wanted her to take a look at some Kingston property. Leave right away—see what kind of shape it was in. A loan on it—see if it was worth another. Set a price, and everything. She knew what to do. And here was the location.

Miss Andrews gasped. She hadn't known who had bought that place.

How many years it had been since she had seen it! Just down the road from her old home. What roses had grown there—old-fashioned hundred-leaved ones. Pale and pink and with a delicate perfume which had forever spoiled Miss Andrews for heavy, heady scents.

When she arrived at Kingston and found her way to the cottage the roses were still there. Though the field of clover just over the fence had been planted in prosaic corn. The roses, too, had been rudely trimmed and tied up as if some one paid to do it had hurried about the task.

The cottage was in good enough repair, though. The furniture, shrouded in covers, stood about in the same places. Over there by the window Sam's mother used to keep a great stand of ferns. Sam's mother. So there had been a Sam in Miss Andrews' life?

With a sigh of weariness and something else Miss Andrews sank down on the sofa by the fireplace.

"I should have taken a taxi at the station. The walk is surely longer than it was—let me see—how many years is it since we would stop here on our way from school and Sam's mother always had lemonade and cookies?

"It couldn't be that there's such a thing as ghosts—there's a step in the kitchen as surely as I am Pauline Andrews."

Miss Andrews was no coward. She walked steadily to the kitchen door and asked, "Who's there?" in a voice that trembled only a little.

Something, though, made her waver and clutch at the door when she saw a real, flesh-and-blood man standing by the sink.

"I can't seem to find any scissors, Pauline, to trim these rose stems. Hold them carefully and they will not stick your fingers. Mother always knew how to take the sting out of roses—she said."

Miss Andrews turned pale, then pink, then pale again.

"It's not you, is it, Sam? Sam McCully who lived here when we went to school the other side of Kingston and whose mother always asked us in to rest on the way home evenings? Why—I heard you had gone off somewhere. You never seemed to care about the old crowd after we graduated. And I went to the city to work and the girls have all m-married and gone.

"I didn't know the name of the owner—Larrimore—when I came up to see the house today for my real estate firm.

"Haven't you been in Kingston either—or didn't you know the house is for sale?"

No, Sam hadn't been in Kingston and as for the house, that had gone to pay the debts after his mother died.

"You didn't know, but mother was slowly dying, even in the days she was so jolly and good to us all."

"I had to look after her—I couldn't leave her for college or business, and when you—and all the rest left, it was pretty lonely.

"I hadn't anything to offer you, Pauline—when at last I was alone, and free.

"I heard you were doing so well—such a wonderful salary. But now I've enough to buy this house back—this house where I've stolen the roses to give you from the old bush by the walk.

"I came to see the way things were left, though Cousin Larrimore, who bought it, would not disturb mother's home, I knew.

"And I saw you, Pauline, at the window upstairs. So I gathered the roses and slipped in through the pantry window—I've often done it when I stayed too late at a party—and you and I walked home too slowly.

"Then—seeing you here, I wished you'd stay, Pauline.

"I can buy the place and still have enough for a little business in Kingston. We can have enough—that's happiness.

"It won't be the city—and that wonderful office where you talk in millions every day—"

Pauline smiled happily. Then spoke practically.

"No, it will not be that old office, thank Heaven! Who wants an office when there's home—and a hundred-leaved rose right at the door?

"We'll go right down to the city and fix up the deed, and then get James Hunt to play 'father' at the ceremony. Poor man! He's going to have a new secretary, and he will not like it.

"But you and I, Sam—we're going to be folks out of a story book. Here, give me the roses—you didn't know you were picking the bride's bouquet, did you?"

But Sam was a wise man. He answered in a better way than words.

Japanese Baby Hurt by Falling Meteorite

The hitting of a human being by a meteorite is probably the rarest of all accidents, according to Dr. E. E. Free. Yet that is what happened, says Pathfinder Magazine, to a three-year-old Japanese baby living near Sukatu, a village northeast of Tokyo. The incident was reported to Popular Astronomy by Issei Yamamoto of Kyoto university.

At the time of the occurrence the child happened to be playing out of doors alone. Hearing a sudden cry the mother rushed out to find the infant seared across the neck as if by a hot iron. Further search disclosed a small stone in a fold of the child's dress. It was still slightly warm, which evidently had caused the burn on the neck. Transmitted to Yamamoto and examined by the scientists of Kyoto university, this stone proved to be a typical meteorite, covered with the usual black crust caused by melting during its flight through the air.

The stone is only about one-fourth of an inch in length and weighs only a few grains, making it probably the smallest meteorite ever recorded. In spite of the millions of meteorites that hit the earth's atmosphere each day and burn up to make shooting stars, only a few reach the ground. In only one previous historic instance is one known to have hit a human being. That occurred in 1827, when a native of India was killed by a meteorite.

Water and Cholera

Hamburg and Altona are cities that have merged into each other, like New York and Brooklyn. They still have, however, separate water supplies, both coming from the River Elbe. Altona filtered its water and Hamburg did not. A map showing where cholera cases appeared followed irregularly the line of demarcation between the part of the city that got filtered water and that which did not. It was regarded as definitely proven that filtering the Altona water made it safe from cholera carrying.

Linen Airplanes

Metalized linen, a new fabric, may bring about a complete change in the construction of aircraft. It has a tensile strength of over 1,800 pounds per foot width, and is very light.

An airplane half the present weight, yet considerably stronger, could be constructed from such a fabric, while petrol tins for an Atlantic flight could be made of metalized material lighter than the thinnest aluminum.

Within the limits of New York city there are as many inhabitants as on the entire Australian continent. In July, 1926, New York had 5,924,000, and a census of Australia made a year later gave the population as 6,178,492.

The Ward of Robbers' Roost

By CRITTENDEN MARRIOTT

© W. G. Chapman. WNU Service

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian and Department of Justice operative, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old. She does not want to leave Fair, for whom she has the affection of a daughter. Jim Barker, sheriff and aspirant for Stella's hand, directs Fair to run a shipment of arms into Mexico and bring back whisky. Unknown to Fair, Stella, dressed as a boy, accompanies the gang. The bandits' errand is successful and the party returns to Barker's ranch. Stella refuses proposal of marriage by Wade, Barker's lieutenant.

Here Wade found her. "Look here, kiddo," he said, perching on the table close to her chair. "I ain't got a thing against you; just the contrary. But Barker wants you; an' he's the real head of the gang. That dad of yours was a mighty good man in his time; but he's played out; he's lost his pep. An' what Barker says goes."

Stella's lips curved. "Does it?" she asked, scornfully. "Maybe you'll find you're banking on a dead card. Then you'll be sorry for this misguided bluff. Anyway, we'll see!"

"Sure we will. That's what I'm keepin' you here for. But the quicker you get it into that head of yours that Barker's goin' to have his way the better it'll be for you. That is, he'll get his way unless I help you."

"Oh, that's it, is it? I might have guessed it. Well, what's your price?"

"You!"

"Me?" Stella sat up in good earnest.

Wade squirmed at the amazement in her voice. "Why not?" he demanded, hotly. "You ain't never been overmuch stuck on yourself so far's I can see; an' I'm as good as the next man—even if his name is Jim Barker."

Stella was really a woman, though she had always posed as a boy; and in the emergency she flew to the traditional weapons of her sex. "Oh, shucks, Bill," she scoffed. "I haven't got anything against you personally—except this dirty trick you've just played on me, but I don't want to marry at all. I don't want to be a woman. I'm going to play man all my life."

"You can't. You won't be let."

"Why won't I? Nobody ever hinted anything different till only the other day. What's the matter with you and Barker and all, beginning to bother me all of a sudden?"

Wade hesitated. Then he laughed. "I could tell you that you're gettin' mighty good lookin', kiddo," he said. "An' it wouldn't be no lie, either. But that ain't why Barker wants to marry you. What Barker wants is your money."

"My money!" The day had been one of surprises, but this was the chief of them all. Stella gasped.

"Didn't know you had any, eh? Well, you have. Your granddad back East left a fortune. Didn't even know you had a granddad, did you? Well, you have; an' the lawyers are huntin' for you to hand it to you on a silver platter. Barker got wind of it through an ad in the paper an' got somebody to investigate for him. I don't know just what he found out, but it was enough to make him want to marry you. An' if it satisfied him it'll satisfy me. See?"

Stella saw. She saw a good deal that Wade did not see. The information about the money threw her departure for the East into new perspective and illumined it with a rosy glamor. Personally she had never had much money or much use for what she did have; but her reading and the talk of the outlaws had given her a very good idea of the value that most people set upon it. At the very least it would take her to her own people, not as a poor relation but as a wealthy one. It would make a difference, she told herself sagely, even if her kin were as friendly as Fair had maintained. If she could get to them—

If she would get to them! But could she get to them? There was Barker—and Wade—to be considered.

Wade was talking—in fact, he had not stopped; and with a wrench she forced herself to listen.

"Barker doesn't give a hoot for you," he was saying. "Fact is, he hates you. You get on his nerves somehow. I guess you know that yourself. And he's too old for you. Now, I'm different. I'm young an' good-lookin', if I do say it myself, an' I'm fond of you; honest, I am. If you'll marry me, we can go East and get the money an' live in style, an' leave your dad to run the Roost. Once I'm his son-in-law an' gone, he won't have a bit of trouble."

Stella nodded absently. Very probably this was true. But—

"And Barker?" she questioned.

"Barker? Don't you worry about him. When he gets here with the padre I'll just bump him off. And then the padre can marry us. See?"

Stella's brows contracted. She had seen more than one man killed in action, and she had grown more or less callous to blood letting. But she had never seen one assassinated. More than anything else, Wade's calm explanation made her realize that Fair's denunciations of the members of the gang of thieves and murderers were justified.

"Sure I would. What you chewin' the rag about? You'd shoot him yourself to get away from him just as you tried to shoot me ten minutes ago, wouldn't you? Well, I'll take the job off your hands."

Stella nodded. "Yes, I would shoot him if I had to," she admitted, slowly. "But that's different."

"Humph! What's the difference?"

Stella hesitated. That there was a difference, she knew; but she found it hard to state it.

"If you can't see it for yourself," she said at last, "I guess there's no use my trying to explain. No, I won't marry you, Bill. And I won't marry Barker, either. But if you'll give me back my gun I'll fight my way past him; and if he tries to stop me I'll shoot him. Give me my gun, please, Bill!" She held out her hand imploringly.

"Yes I will—not!" Wade's face darkened and the veins in his forehead stood blackly out. His real nature, concealed—except for his plan in regard to Barker—for a moment beneath a mask of good nature, glared bleakly out. "You'll marry me before you leave this house," he rasped. "I've given you a fair chance an' you've turned me down. Now I'm going to fix things so you'll have to marry me. And when Barker gets here I'm going to fix him for good and all. Get me?"

Head projecting, eyes glaring, lips curling back from his teeth, he advanced upon the girl.

CHAPTER V

Go Ahead Morton rode out of Mustin toward Loboville on the morning after Jack Green reached Robbers' Roost. Gayly he whistled as he rode. He was young; he loved the outdoors; he loved to feel the smooth stride of his horse between his thighs; and he was riding to the rescue of his lady fair (of course she was his lady; of course she was fair; so much at least must be granted to the situation). Villains—real robbers and murderers—were waiting for him; what more could youth want? He was twenty-seven; but he felt twenty-one—and, traditionally, a man is as young as he feels.

"I reckon that must be the J/B ranch," he muttered. "I'm just about due to reach it. Guess I'll stop to ask for work and give Barker the once over if he's at home. I'd kind of like to see the fellow who's got nerve enough to think of marrying into the Mortons of Virginia—dog-gone him." He spurred his horse to greater speed.

The buildings, as he approached them, seemed to be deserted or very nearly so; though far away to the northwest a trail of dust rising from the plain indicated that an indefinite number of riders had probably left its vicinity not so very long before. At the ranch itself a single horse, saddled and bridled, whinneyed to his own from the corral inside which it was hitched; but neither its rider, nor any other human beings were visible. And no smoke, with its connotation of grub, rose from the chimney.

Disgustedly Go Ahead regarded the place. "Too late for breakfast, I reckon," he remarked. "This sure is one hot old welcome. Still, if I'd notified Barker that I was coming, I might have got a hotter one than I wanted. . . . Guess Barker's not here. . . . Well, it don't matter. I'll meet old J. E. soon enough without hunting for him. Still, maybe I—" Startlingly sudden as the explosion of a cannon cracker a cry cut the stillness. And another and yet another followed.

Queen of Bulb Flowers

Holland for several years past has been noted for its spacious tulip gardens. Every variety of tulip is cultivated by the Dutch gardeners, and new hybrids are often worth a great deal of money.

The tulip has always been the queen of bulb flowers since it was brought from Turkey by the ambassador of the Emperor Maximilian. As a wild red flower in Persia it was of old a symbol of love and romance.

Most new blooms cultivated by Dutch gardeners are hybrids grown from the seed of flowers fertilized by pollen from others.

Term Applied to Sacking

"Gunny" in gunny sack is of Hindu origin. In Hindu a sack is called "goni." The same term is also applied to a sacking material made from the fiber of two plants which grow in India. Hence any sack made of similar coarse material is called a gunny sack in English, "gunny" being a corruption of "goni."

Mother Risks Life To Save Little Son

Marion, Ill.—Mrs. Verious Allen Fairmount threw herself under a tractor disk-harrow and saved the life of her three-year-old son, but was critically hurt.

The tractor was standing in the farm yard with the engine running when Mrs. Fairmount's two small sons climbed on the machine to play. They threw the machine into gear and the younger son toppled from the seat in front of the moving harrow.

Mrs. Fairmount threw her body between the knives of the harrow which passed over her.

CHARGE FELON'S ORGANS STOLEN

Say Executed Man Was Robbed of "Innards."

San Francisco.—Charges that certain organs and glands were taken from the body of Clarence (Buck) Kelly immediately after his execution at San Quentin recently and grafted on a patient in a San Francisco hospital have been made by Attorney Milton U'ren, acting for Kelly's relatives. The heart, brain and several other organs were removed and the body mutilated before it was released by prison authorities, he asserted.

The state prison board assembled at San Quentin to consider the matter and determine the truth or falsity of the reports.

The body was removed after the execution to the undertaking parlors of Keaton & Dusel in San Rafael and it was there that the asserted discovery of the mutilation was made. The undertaker told U'ren the body had been mutilated within the prison, and added that he had been kept waiting within the walls for an hour and a half for the body after the execution.

Warden Holohan expressed himself as being shocked at the report. He promised to investigate the charges to the best of his ability and proceed against the guilty persons if any evidence of guilt is discovered.

Dr. L. L. Stanley, prison physician, declined to make extended comment on the charges.

He asserted, however, that "it is customary to perform an autopsy on all persons dying within the prison without special consent of relatives."

Royal Bengal Tiger Claws Ship Stevedore

Ricardo was in the dark hold of the steamer City of Evansville recently attaching crane hooks to cages of wild animals which had arrived aboard. There were several cages of laughing hyenas, 2 cages of tigers, 40 of monkeys, 8 of vultures, 6 of cranes, and 17 of snakes.

A cage of vultures, swinging in midair, caught on an obstruction. The men above called to Ricardo to release it. In running to do so he passed too close to one of the cages of tigers. A powerful, velvety claw lunged at him out of the cage and ripped his side. He fell screaming.

The scent of blood set the other beasts frantic, and their frenzied howls drowned out Ricardo's cries for help. Jacob Strumm, the German trainer who had supervised the care of the animals on the ocean voyage, descended and rescued Ricardo. But for the trainer's quick action, surgeons said, he would have bled to death.

He Pressed the Stick; Then Things Happened

London.—Flight Lieut. Eyre, R. A. F., reached for his map; he missed and it slipped into a corner of his cockpit. Two thousand feet over Essex and he undid his safety straps and reached again. Unintentionally he pressed the control stick forward. The plane stalled suddenly and an astonished flyer found himself catapulted into midair. With presence of mind he pulled his parachute cord, landed unhurt, lighted a cigaret, and addressed a gasping rustic: "I wonder where my kite's gone?"

Hoax Fails to Restore Man's Estranged Wife

Kalamazoo, Mich.—George Kilgore's determined effort to effect a reconciliation with his estranged wife apparently was in vain. Kilgore recently was found bound and gagged in his room, apparently the victim of a mysterious letter writer who had sent threatening letters to him and his wife. The letters threatened personal injury to Kilgore unless his wife consentend to return to him. After a severe grilling by the police Kilgore is said to have confessed the assault plot was a hoax.

All Night on Buoy

Graham was rowing in a racing shell near the buoy when it capsized He managed to swim to the beacon.

Is THIRTY the Love Deadline?

George Jean Nathan is well known as an editor, author and critic. He was born in Fort Wayne, Ind., in 1882, entered Cornell university, and was graduated in 1904. Since then he has been on the editorial staff of the New York Herald, a dramatic critic, and for fifteen years was associated with Smart Set magazine as a dramatic critic and editor. In 1924 he became, with H. L. Mencken, associate editor of the American Mercury. He has long held and published interesting views on women and their place in the home, stage, and in the business world. He is unmarried.

By GEORGE JEAN NATHAN

The result of years in browsing in the philosophical pastures of Plato, Socrates, Hegel, Schopenhauer, Kant and Simon and Schuster is plainly evident in the case of Will Durant. The poor fellow has become infected with the philosophy coccus, or metaphysical lead poisoning. He apparently cannot now view anything save through philosophical whiskers. He would apply the principles of Nicomachean ethics to hay fever and the transcendental dialectic to a Follies girl. He would endorse a brand of cigarettes with a quotation from the "Novum Organum." As an instance of the pox which has seized him, we have his recent animadversions on l'amour.

Fondling his beard, Professor Will has generated a profound cerebration to the effect that no man, and by inference no woman, is capable of falling in love after the age of thirty. By love, the professor says, he means true devotion. Being a bachelor of long and reputable standing in the community, I am perhaps not the most appropriate party to enter into a debate with the professor, yet it seems even to an outcast like me that he is much more highly equipped to write the story of philosophy than to produce philosophy himself.

As a philosopher, he may be said to have his weak points. In the first place, to argue that a man or a woman is incapable after thirty of succumbing to what is called love is to argue that only a man or a woman under thirty is capable of self-delusion. More, that love and true devotion, as the professor phrases it, are one and the same thing. Love and true devotion, unfortunately, are not always one and the same thing. A man or a woman falls in love much more often than he or she, if I may express it so, falls in true devotion. True devotion may be consequence of love, but it is not love itself nor the propulsive power of love. Love, as Heliogabalus meditated, is the triumph of imagination over intelligence, the delusion that one woman differs from another, the temporary conviction that there is nothing in the cocktail but genuine gin. It is a lovely violin duet played by a boozy, bald-headed man and a slattern hidden from the enraptured hearers' eyes. It is artfully charged cider in a Charles Heidsiek '15 bottle. It is nonsense picking the edelweiss on the peak of Olympus. It is beautiful and it is dumb. True devotion has no more place in it, at least in its first and most glamorous stages, than a harp has in a Strauss waltz or in "Papa Loves Mamma." To say that a man can't fall in love after thirty is to say that he can't enjoy music, liquor or any other such analogous sense-stealing diversion after the same age. As a man gets older, his capacity for making a fool of himself increases, and so his aptitude for love increases.

True devotion, to revert to Professor Durant's phrase, is hardly a gift at which youth excels. Surely the professor would not have us believe that the love of boys and girls is either founded upon or inspired by any such phenomenon. This is no place to wax too concrete about so delicate a matter, but even the professor, plied sufficiently with persuasive schnapps, would admit that what he calls true devotion is somewhat removed from the necking and petting that the younger generation in turn calls love. If that is true devotion, either incipient or potentially permanent, then I am ready to believe that Casanova's name was Dante.

It is a platitude, grounded in statistics, that marriages after thirty are generally more successful than marriages contracted before thirty. While no Pollyanna, I have a feeling that devotion, if not love, must have something to do with the prosperity and endurance of the past-thirty hitch. Love may keep lovers together, but love alone, in the accepted sense of the word, can't keep a married couple together. There must be something else and that something else, unless I am in error, is the peculiar hangover that goes by the name of devotion, respect, sympathy, understanding or what not. Love is less purged of the havoc of emotion by the test of time and the trial of faith. A successful marriage is more of a bargain between friends than between lovers. Love is never absolute, entire. In it, though it be as deep as the deepest sea, there is always elbow-room for a bit of a glance at some other man or woman. The patriot may love only one country, but the lover pretty generally has in his uniform a touch of the enemy's color.

Look for Discovery of "Valley of Ivory"

The legend of the "Valley of Ivory" has persisted for years. It is to the effect that somewhere in the heart of the Dark continent lies a valley to which, since the beginning of time, elephants have gone to die. It is strange that the carcasses of elephants dead from natural causes are never found in the jungle. Study of this phenomenon leads men to believe the giant beasts, sensing old age or disease, retire to some remote secret valley, there to die amid the whitened bones of their forbears. A few of the native chieftains knew of the whereabouts of this mine of wealth, but they have never revealed it to any white man. Now, however, a celebrated African outlaw who has tired of his life of crime has offered to reveal the spot if he is granted amnesty and a reward and it may be that the wealth of the "Valley of Ivory" will be scattered about the entire world in the shape of bits of carving.

Cute in a Baby—Awful at Three—and it's Dangerous

by Ruth Brittain

Thumb sucking does look sweet in a baby, but it is disgusting in the three-year-old and sometimes it hangs on until fifteen or sixteen! The habit may cause an ill-formed mouth or induce adenoids; and it always interferes with digestion. Pinning the sleeve over the hand; attaching mittens, or putting on cardboard cuffs, which prevent bending the arms at the elbows, are some of the ways to stop the habit.

Another bad habit—irregularity in bowel action—is responsible for weak bowels and constipation in babies. Give the tiny bowels an opportunity to act at regular periods each day. If they don't act at first, a little Fletcher's Castoria will soon regulate them. Every mother should keep a bottle of it handy to use in case of colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, loss of sleep, or when baby is cross and feverish. Its gentle influence over baby's system enables him to get full nourishment from his food, helps him gain, strengthens his bowels.

Castoria is purely vegetable and harmless—the recipe is on the wrapper. Physicians have prescribed it for over 30 years. With each package, you get a valuable book on Motherhood. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper so you'll get the genuine.

Varicose Veins Reduced Or Money Back

If you have varicose veins or bunches you can start today to bring them back to normal size, and if you are wise you will do so.

Just get an original bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil at any dispensing pharmacist and apply it night and morning to the enlarged veins. It is very powerful and penetrating.

After a few days' treatment the veins will begin to grow smaller and by regular use will soon reduce to normal.

People who want to reduce varicose veins, or get rid of eczema, ulcers, or piles in a few days should not hesitate to get a bottle at once. It is such a powerful, penetrating antiseptic oil that a small bottle lasts a long time. Any pharmacy can supply you.

Art Gallery on Wheels

Farmers and inhabitants of small villages in rural sections have little opportunity, compared with dwellers in the large cities, to see the works of great artists. So the authorities of the rural district of Solingen, Germany, have hit upon the novel idea of a traveling art gallery. Excellent reproductions of works of almost all well-known old and new modern painters, some 150 in all, have been brought together, and are to be taken from village to village and exhibited in schoolrooms, halls, etc. The whole "picture gallery," including the folding walls for hanging the pictures, can be stowed away in an auto truck.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Mary Gasper and John Gasper, her husband, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 5th day of November, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 8th day of November, 1926, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 226 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Eighty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($87.50), which became due and payable on the 5th day of May, 1927, the 5th day of November, 1927, and the 5th day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand Seven Hundred Fifty-six Dollars and eighty-nine cents ($2,756.89), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 5th day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and Two Hundred Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($262.50) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $87.50 thereof from November 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Three Thousand Fifty-five Dollars and seventy-six cents ($3,055.76);

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The West Half of the Northeast Quarter (W½ of NE¼) and the Southeast Quarter of the Northwest Quarter (SE¼ of NW¼) and Government Lot Two (2) of Section Nineteen (19), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 18th day of August, 1928, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Washes with hand carefulness

A LAUNDERING process which is too harsh for your dainty garments is also hard on coarse clothes. The Maytag washes dainty lingerie or coarse grimy work-clothes equally well. The clothes are cleaned by the action of hot, soapy water in a satin-smooth, cast-aluminum tub. It is gentle, but thorough—even the stubborn edge-dirt of collars and cuffs is washed out without hand-rubbing. A big tubful is washed clean in 2 to 7 minutes, an average washing in an hour.

The Roller Water Remover removes both soap and water evenly from all parts of the garment. The large, soft top roll working against a hard bottom roll does not harm buttons and buttons do not bite into the rolls. It has a Safety Feed, the drainboard reverses itself, and the tension adjusts itself.

Hilmer Lunke's name was left out in the April honor roll. His number of pounds of butterfat was 168lb. If at any time you find your name missing in these reports when you know your amount was at least 100 pounds butterfat, I wish you would call my attention to it.

Arno Steinhauer tops the list with 169 pounds more than the next high patron. So far this year Arno has held first place which is worthy of mention. Mr. Voth and Mr. Augustine have their names among the first five quite often, but Nelson's is now showing up for the first time. His name is now ranking No. 4 in this report which proves that things can be done out in the Mud Lake district too. Alf. Movick's name appears as 5th which of late is no surprise to the community. Alf. is accomplishing something from his dairying

We are getting less Land O' Lakes cream of late due to the hot weather and thunder showers. A few hints that may help you in over-coming this might be opportune at this time.

During the last few weeks we have received a considerable amount of cream that has been just slightly sour and perhaps some of you have felt that we graded too close. One of the outstanding causes is that too many patrons mix their mornings cream in with the rest of the cream the morning they take it to the local creamery before it has been properly cooled. This topic has so often been discussed before but many of our patrons either forget or else they figure that by mixing it with cold cream it will all be cold by the time they come to town.

Here is the trouble. Unless the animal heat is out of the cream and the weather is warm, you will find that by the time your cream is weighed in that it has started to turn and all your cream is warm. I believe another good way to do is to have several small cans that you can keep your cream in in order that same can be left in a can by it self for at least twenty-four or more hours before you pour it all together into the large can and, if you haven't got time to cool mornings cream properly before going to town, then keep it over until the next delivery. Cream should always be stirred for a few minutes when first cooled, it hastens cooling and cooles down more quickly as well as that it gets rid of the animal heat uniformally. Use cold water if you have no ice.

Right now I find that the patrons that have ice have no difficulty in keeping their cream in good shape. Next winter put up a few tons of ice. If you want me to get it for you, let me know and same can be shipped in to Holt for less then $1.50 per ton. This is cheaper then you can cut it yourself perhaps. You can freeze your own ice and the cost is nothing more then what it takes to run your pump. Of course the first year it will cost you a few dollars in getting your cistern dug and cemented but, even that cost is small if you do the work yourself. This is important and saves a lot of water pumping during the summer, especially when you want to go away for a day, which most of us should and are entitled to, at least on Sunday.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXXI

Grain For Cows On Pasture: It is a serious mistake not to feed cows grain when on short pasture. They go down in their production the same as whem they are not fed enough in winter. When the grass is eaten into the ground it kills out and weeds get started so there is a double loss.

With butterfat prices between 45 and 50 cents good cows will certainly pay a profit for grain in connection with pasture. Any kind of grain will do—ground oats, or barley, or bran, or shorts, or commercial feed. Even one pound of grain night and morning helps and it helps get the cows in their stalls for milking. Grain may be fed up to 1 pound of grain a day for each 3 or 4 pounds of milk produced daily, the same as in winter, if the pasture is short.

This Spring, with so little rain, should prompt the seeding of more sweet clover for pasture that supplies feed with much less moisture than ordinary pasture grass.

Mud Lake Claims Approved

Hon. C. G. Selvig,
Crookston, Minn.
My dear Mr. Selvig:

Replying to your letter of July 14, 1928, all of the claimants named in the act of May 3, 1928 (Private 111, 70th congress) have filed application for the amounts therein specified, which have been approved by the Department and forwarded to the Claims Division of the General Accounting Office for settlement, with the exception of that of the Heir of Almond O. Snook, in connection with which certain additional evidence is necessary before the claim may be approved.

Very respectfully,
Thos. C. Howell
Assistant Commissioner.

Pennington County Fair

More than sixty horses have already been entered for the big race program at the Pennington County Fair which will be held Thief River Falls, next week, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. The race program which will be held Thursday and Friday afternoons, consists of four events in the harness class.

Children under 14 years of age accompanied by parents or a guardian will be admitted to the grounds free every day of the fair.

Melvin Nohre retured home on Saturday from the southern part of the state where has been visiting with relatives. His family remained at Spring Grove.

John W. Black of Minneapolis was here on Friday attending to business matters at the Marshall County State bank of which he is president.

Selvig Spoke At Red Lake

Stressing the fact that upper and lower Red Lake was a part of one of the beauty spots of all North America, C. G. Selvig, member in congress from the ninth Minnesota district, told of the early history of the great lake at a picnic at the Red Lake narrows Sunday afternoon.

Containing 441 square miles of fine scenery the lake is a wonderful place to stay and will some day become a great resort, the congressman said.

Tourists who come here every year spend an immense sum in the state, he stated, and they are attracted only by the state's natural beauty, he stated, and its good roads and fine lakes.

LaVerendrye who established Fort St. Charles on the north shore of the Lake of the Woods in 1732, the year Washington was born, came to Red Lake a few years later and was the first white man to visit the lake. In 1798, David Thompson, a British explorer visited the lake and he mentioned it in a book and in 1873 Major Stephen H. Long, who was the first American to visit the lake, camped on its shores.

Several auto loads of people from here motored out there and enjoyed a great time.

Get Aquainted Tour

Thief River Falls business men a hundred strong will be here today at 5:45 p. m., and give the people of this community a good program consisting of speeches and band music. This will be their last stop on a two day "get acquainted" tour which they made thru the villages and communities to the north of their city in the interest of the Pennington County Fair which will be held next week, Aug. 1, 2, 3.

Theo. Ness had a new cement step put in at the front of his cafe Monday evening. Arthur Sorum done the cement work.

NATIVES PUZZLED BY U. S. SCIENTIST

Think Anthropologist Is Hunting for Treasure.

Washington.—When an American comes down to the Caribbean and begins industriously digging along a coast where pirates once flourished, what is he probably looking for? If you answer "buried treasure" you agree with what the people of Santo Domingo thought when Herbert Kreiger of the United States National museum landed at their island with a request to dig among the shell heaps left there by prehistoric cave men.

Mr. Kreiger had credentials. He is a straightforward person. But—he had a strong chest with his baggage!

The Santo Dominicans remembered that a few years ago a pot of Haitian gold was found on the governor's estate, and they watched the digging American. The strong chest which Mr. Kreiger carefully loaded with bits of broken crockery of prehistoric Indians was examined incredulously. When the visitor sailed for the States with no doubloons and with a perfectly satisfied expression on his face, they were still puzzled.

In his report of the expedition, which Mr. Kreiger has just presented to the Smithsonian institution, he says that the caves of Samana bay yielded some thirty kinds of shells. These represent the remains of seafood dinners eaten by innumerable cave dwellers who occupied the island before modern inhabitants came. Mr. Kreiger also collected bones of birds and animals cast into the refuse heaps of the cave dwellings, and brought back specimens to show the kind of animal life that abounded in this tropical island before Columbus' time.

The task of piecing together the civilization of the prehistoric Indians was made more difficult by the fact that fertilizer concerns have removed large quantities of the shell heaps in collecting bat guano and limestone phosphate from the caves.

"The region is of special interest to anthropologists," Mr. Kreiger reports, "because of the presence of many heretofore unexplored aboriginal village sites and cave habitations."

Rates on Air Mail Are to Be Reduced

Chicago.—It will cost only one-quarter as much to send the average business or social letter by air mail on and after August 1 as it does now, for on that date the rate will be reduced from ten cents a half ounce to five cents for the first ounce or fraction and ten cents for each succeeding ounce or fraction, according to an announcement by Postmaster Arthur C. Lueder. This means that an ordinary letter may be sent anywhere in this country for five cents and that an air mail package which now requires $2.00 postage may then be sent to any part of the country for $1.05.

The regulations on air mail are simple. Any mailable matter (except perishable matter liable to damage by freezing) may be sent by air mail. Registered, insured and C. O. D. matter is carried by air mail as are packages not exceeding 50 pounds in weight and not exceeding 84 inches in length and girth combined. Special delivery stamps still further expedite delivery of domestic air mail.

Denies Owning Artificial Arm; Now He Wants It

Montesano, Wash.—Because E. G. "Wienie" Wagner swore that a left arm did not belong to him he is having considerable trouble in getting the sheriff to give it to him. The arm, an artificial one, was found near the scene of a liquor raid and was held as evidence. Wagner, who is minus an arm, is alleged to have dropped it in his flight. On the witness stand Wagner denied ownership of the limb. He was acquitted. Now he is trying to get the sheriff to give it to him.

Lone Turkish Smoker Fights Village Reform

Tazlar, Turkey.—The Yellow Crescent Anti-Tobacco society is pouring propaganda on the obdurate head of the sole remaining adherent of the "hubble-bubble" in this village of several hundred who recently took a wholesale smokeless oath.

This is the first village in Turkey to renounce tobacco, the renunciation being the outgrowth not only of the new Yellow Crescent society's activities, but also of the wave of puritanism sweeping over the peasantry as a result of the new regime's tolerance of winebibbling and other unorthodox practices.

The one recalcitrant calmly sucks the amber mouthpiece of his narghile, replying to all arguments that he will continue to smoke until his death not only for the solace of his soul, but also as a patriotic duty, tobacco being a state monopoly and an important source of revenue of the young republic.

VETERAN IN SERVICE PLANS ANOTHER TRIP

U. S. Geologist Explored Alaska 25 Years Ago.

Washington.—One of the veteran explorers and geologists of the geological survey, Frank C. Schrader—the man who pushed up through the heart of unknown Alaska a quarter of a century ago and was at Nome when the big gold strike was getting under way—is preparing to go out into the field for further research this year, at the age of sixty-eight. Montana mining districts will likely claim his attention this summer. The West is familiar ground to him, for his duties have called him to Idaho, Nevada, Utah and California.

Mr. Schrader has been in the government service since 1891, having been born in Sterling, Ill., October 6, 1860. He is one of the oldest employees in the Interior department.

North of the Arctic circle has been the theater of his operations in the heyday of his explorations. He and his party outfitted at Bergman, Alaska, in 1901, and crossed the Arctic divide, the Endicott mountains, over which Capt. George H. Wilkins and his pilot, Ben Eielson, flew many times to and from Point Barrow.

Trip to Nome.

Down the Anaktuvuk river, that flows toward the North pole, and then down the Colville river to the Arctic ocean they went, having packed their canoes over the mountains. They worked their way along the barren coast of the Polar ocean and traveled with Eskimos to Point Barrow.

A whaleboat was secured at Point Barrow, and then south and west Mr. Schrader and his party went to Cape Lisburne and then through the famous Northwest passage by collier to Nome.

In that memorable trip, which opened up interior Alaska to science and the better use of mankind, Mr. Schrader and his party encountered many types of landscape. On the Endicott plateau they found valleys 3,000 feet deep, and adjoining this plateau they traversed gently rolling country along the Anaktuvuk plateau. Then came the coastal plain, 100 miles to the Arctic ocean, featuring soft rocks and silt, with beds of coal running through them and creeping willows on the shore of the Arctic ocean.

In 1896, on a trip down the Yukon river below the mouth of the Tanana river, in a great bank of silt, Mr. Schrader found the remains of a great mastodon with 11-foot tusks. As he was then traveling in a rowboat the tusk was too weighty to be transported, so he sawed off a piece, and this is now reposing on the mantlepiece of his home. The point where the mastodon was found was not far from the site of the present town of Fairbanks, but there was no town there in those days.

Gold Strike at Nome.

In the fall of 1899 Mr. Schrader came down the Yukon river and stopped at St. Michaels, and heard that there had been a gold strike at Nome. In that community accommodations were at a premium and the six or eight in the Schrader party hired one room in a hotel and slept on the floor. The gold diggings were along the beach and at Anvil Creek and the prospectors were living in tents on the beach.

Some of the miners kept their gold in old washtubs, covered with canvas, buried in the ground beneath their tents. Nuggets worth $7 to $8 were given away by the miners to the government men.

Some of the inhabitants of Nome believed the gold was washed up the sea from its depths, as the beach would be found sparkling with nuggets and small pieces of gold, but Mr. Schrader was able to inform them that the churning of the waves uncovered the gold on the beach itself.

Canadian Girl Earns Living as Trapper

Miss Cameron knows foxes. She knows skulking coyotes, lynx cats, clever little weasels. The habits of Br'er rabbit are an open book to her.

She has been a trapper since she was ten years old. When she came to Canada, to her father's homestead in northern Alberta, she was four years old.

Her traps are set out in a wide semicircle within a ten-mile radius of her father's homestead. Rain or shine, winter or summer, she follows her line.

Pawnbrokers Have Palace for Business in Venice

Venice.—The "three-ball" merchants of Venice live in fine style. No side streets and back alleys for the pawnbrokers of the city of canals; instead they have a palace, one of the best in Venice, all for themselves.

The Palace Corner Della Regina is a fine, imposing edifice built in 1724. Here the pawnbrokers of Venice have their headquarters. They lend money on anything from a tiepin to a merchant ship.

Norwegian Memorial

Minneapolis.—A church which will be a memorial to Norwegian pioneers of America and a central place of worship in their language is planned for this city.

LEADS ORCHESTRA IN ANOTHER TOWN

Inventor Uses Radio to Direct Players.

Berlin.—Conducting an orchestra hundreds of miles away has become possible with a special type of piano for which the inventor, Dr. Erich Fischer, has taken out patents in all countries.

Skeptics were in the majority when the papers announced that Doctor Fischer would proceed to Goettingen with several soloists and from there conduct the orchestra of the High School of Music playing in Berlin.

To every one's surprise, however, the experiment turned out a complete success, the orchestra in Berlin playing and the soloists in Goettingen singing with the same precision and accuracy as though all were assembled in a common hall with eyes glued to the conductor's baton.

The technique of this scheme, promising to become an incalculable time and money-saving expedient, is a simple one. Doctor Fischer seated himself at a piano which, though soundless for the human ear, accurately records and transmits to a highly sensitive microphone inside not only single tones, cords and templ, but also diminuendoes and crescendos, all of which were promptly wirelessed to the orchestra in Berlin.

Here each player was equipped with a headphone, the various groups of instruments, as strings, wood-winds, brass, etc., each being installed in separate rooms.

The tones of this scattered orchestra were collected in a common receiver from where they were flashed by wire back to Goettingen and there released through the medium of several very elaborate and powerful loud speakers.

Expert engineers estimated that the time that elapsed between the conductor's cues at Goettingen and the return of the full orchestral reproduction from Berlin was less than the interval between a conductor's signals and his orchestra's response in the same hall.

Gun Shoots Plaster in Restoring Ceiling

London.—Restoration of richly ornamented ceiling at Monmouth castle has produced a novel and effective method of plastering. It was found that when a mixture was run on the ceiling the process necessitated the use of a large amount of water, which saturated the old work.

Thereupon, the building research department of the British office of works discovered a method of treating the ceilings by literally "shooting" on a reinforcing plaster through an automatic gun.

Experiments have demonstrated that it is possible to build up a layer of plaster on a sheet of blotting paper without the under side of the paper showing any sign of moisture.

Your Old Straw Lid Always Good in Mexico

Mexico City.—Straw hats and overcoats, either or both, together or separately, are worn the year around in Mexico City, according to individual taste.

There is no fixed date for commencing to wear straws, no dead line when they must be abandoned. More straws are worn in the summer than in the winter, but there are plenty of men here wearing straws on Christmas day, and every day of the year. There are others who never change from a felt.

A light overcoat is needed almost every night of the year, even if the day has been warm. Most persons wear the same weight clothing all the year.

"Back-to-the-Farm" Movement in Mexico

Mexico City.—The Mexican government has appointed a commission to evolve plans for fostering a "back-to-the-farm" movement.

The object is to induce town and city dwellers to settle upon agricultural lands. Study also will be given to the question of colonization by foreigners, and perhaps inducements will be offered farmers of other countries to come to Mexico.

The investigating commission, created at the instance of President Calles, is composed of experts of the departments of treasury and agriculture and the government's agricultural credit bank.

Army Wives to Cook on Electric Ranges

Washington.—Maj. Gen. B. F. Cheatham, quartermaster general of the army, has just bought 1,900 electric ranges to replace worn-out gas, wood and coal ranges in officers' quarters at army posts throughout the country.

Madison Barracks and Fort Totten, New York, and Fort Hancock, New Jersey, are among the posts where army housewives are to have resplendent new electrical cooking equipment. The electric ranges are of the most modern, up-to-date type and are provided with an automatic heat regulator.

RACHEL'S EGG-BEATER LUCK

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

ELIZA POTTER shook the last crumb of brown sugar into the stewed apples. Horace liked sweet sauce and she was afraid this would not suit him. But there was no more sugar in the house. Worse than that, there was no money with which to buy sugar. Eliza looked out of the kitchen window with stern eyes at Horace standing on the back stoop with his pipe in his mouth. The pipe was empty. He reached into his pocket for tobacco, but found none.

"When things get just as bad as they can be they can't get any worse, that's one comfort," Eliza said, lifting her chin bravely. She took the glass dish of sauce to the table and placed it beside the blue plate which held the hot cornbread. The meal was now ready, so she called: "Horace!"

Her husband entered. He was a slight man who used a crutch. Eliza had reason to believe that Horace's hip could be mended if there was money for proper treatment. But he could not work much with an impacted fracture.

"Eat your dinner and you'll feel better," said his wife.

"You're determined to make the best of it?" he said.

"Of course I am. When things get just as bad as they can be they"—she could get no further. Pretending that a crumb had gone the wrong way, she coughed. Sometimes it was terribly hard to face Horace with any sort of helpful philosophy. When all was said and done the fact remained that they were old and destitute, that the house was falling down over their heads, that they hadn't a stick of furniture that wasn't decrepit with age, that there wasn't a chick nor child they could call their own, but they had put all the money they had saved for their declining years in a bad investment and lost it. "Horace," Eliza began again, "if you're going to sit there quarreling with your victuals you can just take a piece of this cornpone over to Mrs. Whitcomb. She'll appreciate it." She quickly placed a golden-brown square on a blue plate and handed it to Horace. With something like a grin he reached for his crutch. "Now then," Eliza whispered to herself as he hobbled away, "I can do something." She covered her face with her hands.

It seemed scarcely a moment before Horace was back, the unemptied plate in his hand. "Mrs. Whitcomb isn't there," he said. "She must have taken the bus somewheres this morning. There was a girl there that wanted to see her. I found her sitting on the steps. She looked all beat out."

"Why didn't you ask her over here?" demanded Eliza. She went to the door and looked across at the other house. The woman who sat upon Mrs. Whitcomb's steps had her head in her hands, Eliza's own attitude of a moment before. She seemed too young to be dressed in black. There was a large bag beside her.

Eliza went straight over there. She was close before the girl glanced up and saw her. The dark eyes held the look of a mother; the blue ones understood.

Until midafternoon the pale girl lay on Eliza's cord bedstead, while Eliza made her drink camomile tea out of a blue cup. Rachel Mayhew's young husband had died a few weeks before and she was selling egg-beaters from door to door to get him a monument. She had walked all the way from the next town. Her sales—well, they hadn't amounted to much—in fact, she had not sold a single egg-beater, but smiling bravely, she had, of course, just started out and must do better soon. As soon as her head stopped aching, and it was feeling lots better, she must hasten on.

At parting she gave Eliza an egg-beater—"though it's no pay at all for so much kindness as you've shown me," she said. Eliza snatched an odd-shaped blue vase from the mantelshelf. "Take that to remember me by," she returned.

Alone she looked at the egg-beater in a half-puzzled way. She whisked it round and round. It was so nice and new and shiny. Such a pity that she had no use for it. She wished she could sell things, but if a bright young thing like Rachel Mayhew failed how could she hope to succeed?

"When things get just so bad as they can be"—she tried to chant, but her voice gave out because there was such a tightness in her throat.

Next morning Horace sneaked away from home. He came back looking so wilted that Eliza was frightened.

"Well, I got a ride to town and back," Horace confessed. "I've been trying to get me a job. But—they don't peg shoes now the way I was taught." He paused. "I tried to sell the house here to Fletcher. He said it was only an old heap of junk."

"It's home, our home!" cried Eliza. "We've lived here for forty-odd years together. You've lived here all your life and your father and grandfather before you. Do you remember the day we got married and you brought me here, Horry? I had pink ribbons on my white hat. How my heart beat. I'd never had a home before. It meant everything to me—it does yet."

"You've been a fine wife, Eliza. And you'd have been a fine mother if the twins had lived."

"They'd have been 39 years old," mused Eliza softly. "Married, of course, with children. Did you ever think of it, Horry? I guess one investment more or less wouldn't have mattered if our boys had lived—well, I guess you better have a bit of something to eat. Mrs. Whitcomb brought over a big bowl of stew and I've been waiting for you to come and get your share."

They sat down at the daintily laid table. Though Eliza's tablecloth was of coarse, home-woven linen it was white as snow. The color came into Horace's thin face as he ate.

"Mrs. Whitcomb is certainly a fine neighbor," he said appreciatively. "But I guess you're a good neighbor yourself. That time she was sick so long you never left her day or night—"

"Hello!" Eliza jumped. A man was looking in at the open window. "Sorry to intrude," he said pleasantly, "but I'd like to see you folks a minute."

"Come right in!" Eliza sprang up and opened the door. "I'd ask you to dinner but—" she glanced at the empty bowls.

"I've had lunch, thanks. Mrs. Potter, have you a mate to that vase you gave Rachel Mayhew yesterday?"

"Yes." Eliza got the vase from the sitting room shelf. He examined it carefully.

"It is the same thing," the man said. "Rachel Mayhew came to our house selling egg-beaters. She showed my wife the vase. We keep an antique shop. Here's my card. My wife tried to buy the vase, but the girl said you gave it to her for a keepsake and she wouldn't part with it. She said you had another like it. So I thought I'd drive over here and see if you'd sell it. By the way your house seems to be full of quaint old things. This chair now—that table you are eating lunch from—that tablecloth, those dishes, that clock—if you want to sell any of these things I'll give you the best prices for them."

Eliza told Horace afterward that she came near topplin' over. But Horace was up on his crutch fairly shouting: "Take your pick of anything we've got and welcome!"

That very afternoon a truck came and carried away almost every article of furniture the house contained. The decrepit chairs, the battered tables, the hooked rugs were replaced by the new, bright things Eliza had always longed for. And tucked in Horace's purse was a check that meant for him a mended hip and for them both security against any number of rainy days in the future.

Rachel Mayhew came to see them in their new comfort. She was working for the antique-dealer's wife and looked plump and hopeful.

"That egg-beater of yours whipped up a lot of luck for us all," Eliza said as she poured tea from her new teapot. "I've heard of folks starving in the midst of plenty, but I never dreamed that was the way with Horace and me. Still, it's just as I've always said: when things get just as bad as they can they can't get any worse, so they're bound to get better."

Take Plenty of Time in Furnishing House

The collector hobby, present to some extend in almost every person's make-up, can be well served by spending a lifetime in collecting furnishings for the home, thinks Miss A. Louise Fillebrown, writing on home decorations in the Farm and Fireside Magazine.

Furnishing the house is something that shouldn't be done in an afternoon or a week of afternoons, thinks the writer. It is, on the contrary, a lifetime job.

"Many a bride rushes into town and buys furniture for a whole house in less time than it takes to make her bridal veil," says the writer. "Some young couples buy a houseful of furniture on the installment plan and have a debt to start with. It is really nice furniture but often is not what they want nor what is most appropriate for their home. Hasty buying is always risky. Then there's the cautious couple who buy 'just do' furniture until the time when they can buy the house of their dreams. That's foolish, too, I often think.

"It isn't necessary to buy all your furniture at once. You will have a more livable home if you furnish it piece by piece. It is well to buy good what you buy and use makeshift things for what you can't afford."

His Complaint

"A public office hain't by no means a private snap," said the postmaster at Seven Corners, down in the Ozarks. "Every little while something comes up to pester a feller, no matter how accommodating he is. Tuther day a gent that subscribes for the only Little Rock daily that comes to the office took a couple of shots at me just b'cuz he wanted his infernal paper before I was through reading of it. And last month an impatient cuss that was expecting a letter from a grass widder lady came in through the side of the office with an ax, when he knowed good and well that I was off on a turkey hunt and wouldn't be back for a couple of days."—Kansas City Star.

Absolute dependability is aviation's first law and that is why I use dependable Champion Spark Plugs.

Champion is the better spark plug because it has an exclusive sillimanite insulator specially treated to withstand the much higher temperatures of the modern high-compression engine. Also a new patented solid copper gasket-seal that remains absolutely gas-tight under high compression. Special analysis electrodes which assure a fixed spark-gap under all driving conditions.

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian and Department of Justice operative, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old. She does not want to leave Fair, for whom she has the affection of a daughter. Jim Barker, sheriff and aspirant for Stella's hand, directs Fair to run a shipment of arms into Mexico and bring back whisky. Unknown to Fair, Stella, dressed as a boy, accompanies the gang. The bandits' errand is successful and the party returns to Barker's ranch. Stella refuses proposal of marriage by Wade, Barker's lieutenant. Wade declares he will force her to marry him.

Go Ahead did not wait for the second one. Obviously the cry came from young and vigorous lungs, those either of a woman or a young boy. Their tones showed that their utterer was in trouble and needed help. By every rule of his being and of his name Go Ahead could not fail to answer. And he did not fail. He ran true to form. One jump took him from his horse to the ground; a second to the deep embrasured window through which the cry had come; and a third took him through it. His feet struck the floor while the third call for help was yet in the air.

Not that his third bound was his last. Just in front of him he saw a young slender boy (to all appearances) struggling desperately in the clutches of a short but powerful man; and the sight was quite enough to offset the gravitation that strove to hold him in place. So he took a fourth leap.

But for once the bandit lieutenant was too late. Before he could touch his gun he felt himself caught up, whirled in the air, and then sent sailing clear over the newcomer's head, to crash to the floor with a jolt that loosened his back teeth. Still game, he reached again for his pistol; only to feel himself sharply rapped across the knuckles and to hear a voice say "Naughty, naughty!" in his ears as its owner swiftly took possession of his weapons.

When, finally, dazed from the shock, he sat up, Go Ahead was halfway across the room talking with Stella and apparently ignoring his existence.

"Hello, youngster," Go Ahead was remarking. "Heard you call and dropped in. What seems to be the trouble?"

Stella was choking with fury; but she managed to find breath to reply "Nothing," she gasped; "nothing that I can't attend to myself, if you'll just give me my gun." She stretched out her hand for the revolver that Wade had obtained from her in the stable and which Go Ahead had just reclaimed from Wade.

Go Ahead looked at her, then at Wade, who was trying to clamber to his feet by the help of the wall. "He does look like a fellow who ought to be shot, doesn't he?" he asked. "But, pshaw, a kid like you don't want to begin his young life by shooting anybody. Suppose I just throw him out?"

Stella was beginning to get control of herself. "No," she said, more calmly but still unevenly, "I want to get to camp before he does and tell dad and the boys about him. Then, if he dares to turn up they'll attend to him. There's only one horse here and—"

The clatter of boots, made by at least two running men, sounded in the hall. An instant later the door was flung open and a white man, tall, broad-shouldered and heavy, burst in, revolver in hand. Behind him the squat form and swarthy face of Diego showed for an instant, then vanished.

Go Ahead had not waited. At the first sound of the footsteps he had darted to Wade's side, grabbed that unfortunate by the nape of his neck and jerked him to his feet. Then, laying his revolver across his captive's shoulder, he faced the door just as it flew open.

"Hands up, please," he ordered, gently.

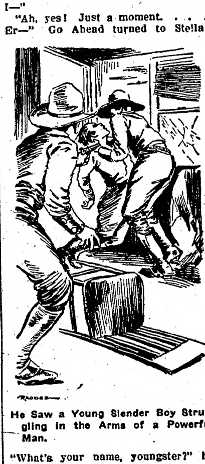
The newcomer glared, but the pistol muzzle also glared at him unwinkingly; and he let fall his gun and slowly raised his hands.

"What the devil's this?" he demanded, furiously.

Go Ahead looked at Wade critically. "Darned if I know," he answered. "Thought maybe you could tell me. It resembles a man somewhat, but it looks more like something that the cat's just brought. . . . Er—you speak like one having authority. Are you perhaps the—er—cook?"

"No, I'm not the cook. I'm Jim Barker, sheriff of this county; and I—"

"Ah, yes! Just a moment. . . . Er—" Go Ahead turned to Stella.



He Saw a Young Slender Boy Struggling in the Arms of a Powerful Man.

"What's your name, youngster?" he asked.

"B-bob," stammered the girl.

"Bob. Well, Bob, what do you think I'd better do with these two specimens?"

Stella's eyes swept the pair malevolently. "We'd better leave them here and go," she said at last.

Snap to the word, Go Ahead flung Wade from him, catapult like, squarely against Barker. Barker reeled backward, staggering, trying to keep his footing, but finally failed; and he and Wade went to the floor together in one scrambled heap.

As they fell Go Ahead ran forward and snatched up Barker's revolver. Then he swung on Stella. "Come on Bob," he called. "Let's go."

But Stella had been attracted by a noise in the balcony that overhung the far end of the room, behind Go Ahead. Up she swept her eyes, tearing them by main force from the scene on the floor. Just as she did so she saw Diego, pistol in hand, run out upon the balcony and aim at Go Ahead.

There was no time to lose. Straight at Go Ahead Stella flung herself, sweeping him backward toward the shelter of the balcony overhang. She believed that Diego would not shoot her, that he would know enough of Barker's plans to beware of harming her, and she was ready to take the chance.

"Back," she screamed, as she flung herself. Back—back—back!"

Go Ahead was quick enough; but only just quick enough. Diego's pistol cracked, and the ball grazed the top of his head, and then, plunging downward, cut a little curl from the top of Stella's wavy locks.

Before he could fire again Go Ahead and Stella were out of his sight, under cover of the balcony: and Go Ahead, thrown for the moment off his aim, had Wade and Barker again under cover.

Oxen on Railroad

On the railroad sidetracks of a cottonseed mill at Navasota, Texas, it has been found that teams of oxen supply the best and cheapest motive power available for moving about loaded railroad box cars. Long and expensive delays resulted from waiting for the locomotive to do the switching after it pulled its string of cars into town once or twice a day, but the oxen are always on hand when needed. Large Texas longhorn steers are used. Six oxen pull more than 200,000 pounds on the rails. One prize yoke of two steers, weighing 2,200 pounds each, can handle a box car alone.

Girl Chums Elope; Husbands Roommates

Boston.—Two girl chums, Dorothy Kimball of West Newton and Jacqueline Abbott of Brookline, stole a march on their friends and eloped to New York, secured marriage licenses and were married in the Little Church Around the Corner. Their husbands are also chums and roommates.

The Kimball girl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Kimball of 212 Chestnut street, West Newton, was married to Frank R. Connell, Jr., of 24 Walker street, Cambridge. He is a native of Minneapolis and a graduate of the University of Minnesota.

The Abbott girl was married to Charles B. Findlater, a student at the Harvard school of architecture. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip S. Abbott of Longwood Towers, Brookline. Miss Abbott is a graduate of the Choate School for Girls.

FEET HIS HANDS, TOES HIS FINGERS

Defies Normal Limitations of Mankind.

Berlin.—Artist, juggler and newspaperman, Carl Herrmann Unthan is one of the world's wonders. On April 5, he was eighty-years old. During all this span he has been defying the normal limitations of mankind.

For Herr Unthan was born without arms, seemingly condemned to a life of helpless misery. Instead of which, the victim of chance has led a brilliant and prosperous life. He developed his feet and made them serve nearly all the purposes of hands. This eighty-year-old cripple shaves himself, runs a typewriter with his toes, has figured on the variety stages of the entire world, renowned as armless violin player, juggler and actor.

Some years ago he was a familiar figure in the United States. As he grew older he retired from the stage and since then has been ceaselessly active as a writer on theatrical subjects for various newspapers.

When a Berlin reporter called upon him there had been a small tragedy in the little flat where he has lived for many years with an old servant girl, Pepi, for the "gracious sir" had that morning cut his toe with a razor while shaving. Nevertheless, the reporter found him sitting before his typewriter whose keys were clicking merrily under light blows of his marvelous and prehensile toes. The reporter shook the old man's foot and was motioned to a chair, where he sat and heard the entire story of this miraculous triumph of will over destiny. For at birth Herr Unthan's feet were no more adapted for hand work than those of anyone else.

Maimed Vet Kills Self With Odd Contraption

Kansas City, Mo.—Mrs. Lucy Minor removed a letter from her mail box recently. It was from her son, Harry Minor, a World war veteran, who had been a cripple for years as result of wounds.

"I'll be dead when you read this," the letter said.

Minor's body was found in a sitting position in a rocking chair, a rifle bullet wound in his head.

The rifle was supported on a pile of clothing. From the trigger a wire ran to an ice pick stuck in the wall, then to the rocker of the chair in which he sat.

The rifle was aimed at his head as he sat in the chair and his rocking caused a tension on the wire which pulled the trigger.

Minor was a victim of shell shock and was paralyzed from the waist down as the result of wounds received in action. His ill health and a recent separation from his wife are believed to have been the causes of his suicide.

Burglars in Britain Average $3.50 Weekly

London.—Assertion by Sir William Greaves Lord, K. C., of Manchester, that the average income of burglars in England is only about $3.50 a week has started a discussion throughout the country on the earnings of thieves.

The police believe Sir William underestimates them. In making his estimate he allowed for the time the average thief or robber spends in prison.

Detectives estimate that clever porch climbers and other burglars in the larger cities average perhaps $60 to $70 per week. The best paid are the crack burglars who rob homes of the wealthy. Confidence men are next. The poorest money getters are the pickpocket and the motor thief. The ordinary pickpocket, they estimate, makes $20 to $30 a week.

Car Takes Flight

Redding, Calif.—A high wind which raged over Redding, swooped down on the automobile belonging to J. G Stanley, lifted it from its parking space in front of his home and then deposited it practically undamaged in a neighboring yard 50 feet away.

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Eighty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($87.50), which became due and payable on the 5th day of May, 1927, the 5th day of November, 1927, and the 5th day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand Seven Hundred Fifty-six Dollars and eighty-nine cents ($2,756.89), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 5th day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and Two Hundred Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($262.50) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $87.50 thereof from November 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Three Thousand Fifty-five Dollars and seventy-six cents ($3,055.76);

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The West Half of the Northeast Quarter (W½ of NE¼) and the Southeast Quarter of the Northwest Quarter (SE¼ of NW¼) and Government Lot Two (2) of Section Nineteen (19), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 18th day of August, 1928, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

BANANAS

A sucker from a dwarf banana plant was secured from the Iowa State College Greenhouse, Ames, Iowa, on Sept. 2, 1925 by Professor T. M. McCall, Horticulturist at the Northwest School and Experiment Station, Crookston, Minnesota. The original plant together with two suckers from it bloomed and have produced fruit.

The plants bloomed at 27 to 28 months of age and the fruit required seven months to ripen.

The full grown bananas were ripened in the banana room of the Finch-Winslow-Carlisle Co., Crookston. Five days were required to ripen the fruit in the storape room.

We enjoyed three of these fine Minnesota grown bananas last week, which were sent to us by Prof. McCall with the above statement.

LESSON XXXII

CARE OF CALVES: Calves under a year old should not be required to get along on pasture alone, but have grain in connection to make a steady growth. Calves under six months do best in the barn during the summer with an outdoor lot for exercise.

Skimmilk may be fed to calves to advantage up to a year old—even a quart of skimmilk in water for the older calves gives good results.

It is a good plan to have a separate calf pasture with a lane to the calf barn so the calves can come in during the heat of the day and for their feed.

The East is coming further West each year to buy its dairy cows. Well grown heifers are commading good prices. It pays to keep the heifer calves in first-class condition—keep them growing.

AVOID THE SMUT TAX

Treating Seed Oats for Smut Pays Big Dividends.

THE yield and quality of oats may be materially increased by treating the seed with formaldehyde to control smut. Oat smut takes a heavy toll each year. This can be almost entirely prevented by seed treatment. The formaldehyde may be applied as a spray, a sprinkle or dip.

The spray method: Place the seed to be treated on a clean barn floor or in a wagon box. Mix one pint of formaldehyde (37 per cent by weight) with one pint of water and pour into a quart sprayer. This amount of solution will treat 50 bushels of oats. If a smaller quantity of seed is to be treated use a proportionately smaller quantity of the solution. Shovel the oats from one pile to another, at the same time spraying each shovelful. After the oats are sprayed cover the heap of seed with canvas or sacks which also have been sprayed with the solution. Allow the cover to remain five hours, when the oats may be bagged or sown.

A modification of this method which consists of using one pint of formaldehyde to ten gallons of water is sometimes used. Apply by spraying about one pint of the solution to each 5 bushels of seed in the manner described above for the half and half solution.

In applying the spray treatments care must be exercised to avoid irritation of the eyes, nose, and throat by the formaldehyde vapor.

The sprinkle method: This is a time-tried and effective method. The seed is placed in a pile as for the spray method. Make up a solution by adding one pint of formaldehyde to 40 gallons of water. Apply the solution with sprinkling can at the rate of about 1 gallon to each bushel of seed, the oats being shoveled from one pile to another. Then shovel the oats into a pile and cover as in the spray method. The covers should remain on for at least two hours, or as long as over night. The seed is then spread out to dry sufficiently to permit sowing or bagging.

The dip method: This method is essentially the same as the sprinkling method just described, except that the seed is dipped directly into the solution until every seed is wet, instead of being sprinkled.

For the sprinkle and dip methods care should be exercised to avoid freezing of the wet seed and to prevent heating.

Surplus seed treated with formaldehyde may be fed to farm animals without injury, provided it has been spread out and aired for a few days.

ALFALFA

During the next few weeks the Marshall county farmers will see the end of the summer seeding of alfalfa, the most valuable protein-producing plant that can be grown on Minnesota farms.

Planting this hig-yielding hay now will help local farmers overcome any national protein-feed shortage predicted for next year.

Alfala is the most profitable forage crop grown in the state, the heaviest yielden, the best soil enricher, weed destroyer and drouth resister. Pound for pound it has a feeding value equal to bran. When corn and alfalfa are grown on the same farm it is an easy matter to reduce feed costs because alfalfa provides the protein which corn lacks to make milk, pork, beef and mutton most economically and at the greates profit.

Experiments Show the Value of Light Baths

By taking a holiday in Switzerland and sitting in the sun, five pit boys from the mines in Mansfield, England, have demonstrated the value of light baths for men and boys who work underground. A report of the committee which has been testing the usefulness of light in industrial hygiene has just been published. Following the Swiss experiment with sunlight baths, a clinic was opened and 50 volunteers from the mines, fourteen to seventeen years old, have had ultra-violet light baths several times a week for three months. At the end of the time, the boys had gained in weight an average of more than four pounds. Boys of the same ages who did not get the light baths gained a little more than two and a half pounds during the same three months. The boys who had the light baths gained in height more than the boys who did not. The clinic will be continued, and the committee report recommends that wherever pithead baths are provided, light baths should be established with them. The report warns, however, that artificial light baths should be given only under medical supervision.

MOTOR BOAT RUNS ON SEAWEED PATCH

Lobster Fisher Makes Use of Yankee Ingenuity.

East Harpswell, Maine.—Patching a motor engine with seaweed and making it run is the latest achievement of Yankee ingenuity.

When Carroll Merriam started for a trip in his motor boat to haul his lobster pots he found that nocturnal marauders had stripped his craft. They stole oars, brass running lights, six cells of battery and oilskins, and, worst of all, they cut his six-foot copper gasoline feed line connecting the tank with the carburetor.

With no place within miles where he could obtain copper pipe, with no near neighbors and with an order to furnish fifty fine lobsters at 50 cents a pound for a noontime shore dinner, Merriam showed that Yankee ingenuity still flourishes.

He had a battery for a radio set in his home, and this he soon connected with his motor.

Then he rowed his dory out a few hundred yards to the Seal ledges, where he found a piece of kelp or devil's apron with an eight-foot stem that was hollow. Taking this ashore, he pushed one end over the end of the severed pipe projecting from his fuel tank and the other end left at the carburetor.

Wrapping them tightly many times from a roll of friction tape, he thus improvised out of the hollow stalk a fuel pipe line that enabled him to haul his traps and fill his order.

Begin Classifying of 7,200 Kinds of Plants

Washington. — The classification and identification of a large collection of tropical flowers, ferns and plants gathered last winter in the lofty mountains and dense jungles of eastern Colombia, some of which have never before been seen by an American, is the summer's task confronting Dr. Ellsworth P. Killip and Albert C. Smith of the Smithsonian institution.

Doctor Killip, assistant curator, and Mr. Smith, collaborator in the division of plants of the national museum, spent four months in the eastern cordillera of Colombia north of the Bogota region and brought back nearly 30,000 specimens representing about 7,200 varieties of plant life.

These included 800 "collecting numbers" of ferns, 300 of orchids, more than 200 of the mimosa and cassia families, about 75 morning glories and 100 passion flowers. Sets of the specimens have been distributed among the various institutions co-operating in the expedition, which was part of the botanical exploration of northern South America begun in 1917 by the New York Botanical Garden, the Gray Herbarium of Harvard university, and the National museum.

Mound Builders Were Mongoloids From Asia

Quincy, Ill.—That the Illinois mound builders are to be classed with the American Indians, and that they are not a mysterious Asiatic race, is the belief of Prof. William M. Krogman of the University of Chicago, here with Prof Faye Cole of the department of anthropology, to conduct explorations.

It is Krogman's theory that the Indians were a mongoloid people from Asia who made their way to this country by way of the Aleutian chain of islands and then gradually spread in many directions.

The migration, Krogman thinks, came in successive waves, new arrivals from Asia, coming and pushing the tribes that were previously here further south, east and west.

The period of initial migration is placed at 10,000 years ago. The first comers had the Neolithic, or late Stone age culture, using stone weapons and ornaments, while the dog was the only domesticated animal.

Centuries later, after the Spanish came, the Indians began to use horses. Krogman traced the formation of the Maya, Aztec and Inca settlements in North and South America and which developed a comparatively high civilization.

Seek Snake Antidote

Tucson, Ariz.—An adequate antidote for the bite of a rattlesnake will be sought this summer by University of Arizona biology students in conjunction with an Eastern chemical company. Rattlers and other reptiles will be brought to the laboratory for the final experiments.

African "Blue" Wildcat Placed in Jersey Zoo

Camden, N. J.—A "blue" wildcat, said to be the only one ever seen by a white man, and a gorilla, one of two in captivity in Amerla, were among the collection of wild animals Jules L. Buck, hunter and animal trainer, brought from his last hunting expedition in Africa to his home in East Camden.

WILL PRESERVE SCENE OF ARTHUR'S BATTLES

Movement in England to Save Historic Site.

Penzance, England. — A famous stretch of the Cornish cliff on the north shore of Cornwall, properly known as Church Cliff, will soon become a national monument if plans made by Rev. A. Blissard Barnes, vicar of Tintagel, come to maturity this year. This stretch of cliff, about 50 acres in area, stands as a bulwark against the Atlantic rollers, and commands magnificent views of a countryside which is rich with legends of Arthur Pendragon and his Knights of the Round Table.

Below the cliff, and within view from its top, is the precipitous island rock upon which are a portion of the ruins of an ancient castle, by popular belief the birthplace of the afterward celebrated King Arthur. Not far away is the stone marked Slaughter bridge, where many say the last battle of Arthur was fought, and where the last of the Pendragons received his fatal wound.

Doubt Arthur Ever Existed.

Milton, in his History of Britain, ramarks: "Who Arthur was, and whether any such person reigned in Britain, hath been doubted heretofore, and may again with good reason." Scholars and historians have pointed out that there is little evidence worth consideration that Arthur was more than the creation of natural myth. Yet to many Cornishmen, and to Englishmen and Americans as well, the heroic tales of the son of Uther, recorded first by Nennius in the latter half of the Ninth century, and spun since by poets and singers into a glistening web of fancies and romance, have made the figures as real and believable as those of the more authentic persons of history.

The proof of this lies in the number of English tourists who visit the ruins at Tintagel, the town at Camelford, the battlefield at Slaughter bridge, and other spots closely associated with the legend. In the last half-decade Americans, too, have found Cornwall. In increasing numbers the summer tourists have invaded the quiet country at the south of England to bathe on her white beaches at Penzance, Newquay, and Perranporth, to visit the famous tin mines near Redruth and Camborne, and to stand on the ground made famous by the tale of Arthur Pendragon, in the north.

Ruined Castle Draws Many.

The chief interest at Tintagel, of course, is the ruined castle, which is popularly referred to as King Arthur's castle and so represented to tourists. Regardless of the truth of this claim, the spot has genuine historic associations of later date, though it is now generally acknowledged that the crumbling ruins are of a period posterior to the Norman conqueror. A few English writers, however, moved to defend the legends of the Pendragon, have declared it possible that the castle, or some mansion or dwelling, must have existed there before the Conquest; that it was later restored by the Normans in their own particular style.

At any rate, there must have been some sort of castle on the Island of Tintagel, or Tintagol, when Geoffrey of Monmouth, the most believable of the early writers, recorded his version of the Arthurian legend, about the year 1147. At the close of that century, it seems evident, the Norman family of De Hornacot, seated at Hornacot, in North Hamerton, had a grant of the manor of Bossinney, including, no doubt, the Island of Tintagel. They thereafter took the name of Tintagel as a part of the family name, which is thought to indicate that there was some castle or mansion on the island for them to reside in.

The isle of Tintagel and the ruins upon it now belong to the prince of Wales, as duke of Cornwall. Much of the other land of especial note in the region is similarly protected for posterity. But the area along Church cliff, which is atached to the glebe land of the vicarage of Tintagel, is the property of the church, and as such may be sold at any time, provided proper authority is obtained from the ecclesiastical commissioners.

Since the increase in the tourist trade of the region began, the value of the land for building sites has steadily gone up. Rev. A. Blissard Barnes and others interested in the sentimental value of the cliff front have been alarmed lately lest an especially fine offer induces the church to sell, allowing the cliffs to fall into private hands.

Plan Traffic Tunnel for Hongkong Harbor

Hongkong, China.—The Hongkong government is studying a project to link the island with the mainland by a traffic tunnel similar to the Holland tubes, which join Manhattan island to New Jersey.

Between Hongkong and Kowloon, its mainland suburb, lies a three-quarter-mile-wide strait, which is Hongkong harbor, crossed by an inadequate ferry service, which is usually suspended during the typhoons which frequent this coast.

Engineers estimate that the tunnel need not be deeper than some sections of the London "underground." Such an undertaking, first of its kind in the Far East, would relieve the congestion of Hongkong and promote the already rapid growth of Kowloon and other towns in British territory on the mainland.

HUNTS WHITE BIRD IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Baltimore, Md.—Dr. James A. Nydegger, who has had considerable experience in exploring in Newfoundland, will lead a party afoot in an exploration trip to the tablelands of the island, in search of traces of the plane of Nungesser and Coli, who were lost while attempting the first westward flight of the Atlantic.

Confident that Nungesser's plane, the White Bird, spanned the Atlantic, only to meet disastrous head winds and be forced off her course, as was the Bremen, Doctor Nydegger says he will explore every mile of the interior of the island. He said:

"My impression is that they crashed against tall trees or a mountain while lost in fog. There were a dozen reports that persons had heard their motor along the coast. The Guggenheim foundation spent thousands of dollars searching from the air for traces of their plane, but if they were lost in the tablelands the wreck could not be seen from the air.

"The White Bird would disappear from sight like a baseball in grass three feet high. With two or three trusted guides I will follow the Grand Codary river into the dense woods of the island.

"I will send the guides back and forth across the island, crossing and recrossing until every mile of unexplored territory is covered. I am confident I will find traces of them.

"While I hold out no hope that they are alive, I believe we will find their wrecked plane. It is a little over a year since their brave attempt to fly from France to America failed, and it is not too late to make a final search.

"Nungesser's mother has always maintained that somebody will find the White Bird. I hope that I will be the fortunate man."

To Inherit $1,000,000 for Changing His Name

Omaha, Neb.—What's in a name? Millions, perhaps, for Seth Rosewater, the seventeen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rosewater of 258 Riverside drive, New York.

Young Rosewater legally took the name Seth Warner Buchard last February, his mother said. The Rosewaters formerly lived here. The name is that of the young man's maternal uncle, Anson W. Buchard, formerly an official of the General Electric company, who died last year. Buchard left no heirs besides his widow.

The widow, Mrs. Allene Buchard, was understood to have proposed that Seth become her principal heir, provided he take the name of her husband and thus perpetuate the Buchard name. The Buchard estate has been valued at more than a million dollars.

"My son has not been adopted," Mrs. Rosewater said. "He is merely going to carry on the Buchard name. Our name will be carried on by our eldest son."

$420,000 Set of Books Put in Harvard Library

Cambridge, Mass.—Eighty-eight slim volumes whose value was estimated at $420,000 now repose in the Harvard university library, having been brought here from New York under armed guard.

The volumes constituted a part of the famous Eli Abethan collection of the late William Augustus White of Brooklyn, and were given to the university by his son, Harold T. White, who acted on behalf of the heirs.

Among the most valuable of the books are the 1599 edition of "Romeo and Juliet," of which only 12 copies are believed extant; "Love's Labor Lost," 1598 first edition; "Much Ado About Nothing," 1600; a third edition, 1611, of "Hamlet," and a 1608 copy of "King Lear."

Uruguay Fruit Growers Win Government Aid

Montevideo, Uruguay.—To aid the country's fruit growers the government of Uruguay has created a credit of 10,000 pesos, which will be expended under the direction of agricultural department engineers in demonstrating how fruits should be classified and packed for export.

By the proper preparation of fresh fruit, Uruguay not only hopes to again ship to Argentina, but also looks to Great Britain for an outlet. Recent Argentine regulations proved prejudicial to unclassified and unpacked Uruguayan fruits.

Dog Guards Crossing on Spanish Railroad

Monserrat, Spain.—A dog acts as guard of the grade crossing over the cogwheel railroad to the convent of Monserrat, to which thousands of pilgrims and tourists make excursions.

At ordinary times, when no trains are passing, the animal lies on a wooden bench at the side of the road, wearing a cap his owner made for him. When he hears a train approaching, he jumps up and stands on his hind legs, bearing between one of his paws and his breast a red flag which signals road travelers to a stop.

Mother Got the Wires Crossed

By JOHN LANE

(Copyright.)

DOROTHY LONGLY was not quite sure whether she would devote her life to missionary work in the Far East or marry a millionaire. Both propositions appealed to her. As to the millionaire side of the question she could not make up her mind whether she wanted a young millionaire or an old one. Each had points to be considered.

Dorothy was just out of Vassar, you see, and rather imaginative. Her parents took her for a trip to Europe and that took some of the nonsense out of her pretty little head—but not all of it. She discarded the idea of the cannibal islands entirely and changed her intended millionaire husband into a titled one.

There were plenty of titles for sale and some of them Dorothy liked very much; but whenever she picked out an especially pleasing title there was always a person who went with it whom she did not like at all. Her parents, being rather worldly people, did not object to a noble son-in-law—provided he did not come too high.

So Dorothy just fluttered about. And then she met Christopher Granger. Being neither a nobleman, a millionaire nor a cannibal, Chris was rather out of Dorothy's line. Perhaps that was why he interested her so much—he was so different from anything she had dreamed of for a husband.

To tell the truth Chris was merely a drummer, a commercial traveler, an ambassador of trade, and was over in Europe to sell a patent gas engine. He was a well connected young man and had letters of introduction to really "superior" people which obtained him an invitation to dinner at the Villa Pompano-Bruno, then occupied by an American family. That was where he met Dorothy who was also a dinner guest.

After dinner they sat out on the terrace and gazed at the lights of Rome shining below them—and he talked gas engine to her. Think of it, gas engines—and Dorothy was so romantic! But she took to gas engines avidly, asked a hundred intelligent questions about the mechanism of the contraption and made several valuable suggestions regarding putting it on the European market. It was not for nothing that Dorothy's father was the owner of the biggest machine shops in the States and had worked his way up from a mechanic to his present affluent condition. Mechanics ran in the blood.

Christopher saw much of Dorothy after that, calling at her hotel and meeting her occasionally at social functions. Mother and Father Longly frowned; but Dorothy was a spoiled child, had always had her own way and expected to have it. Mother Longly wrote back home and had Christopher looked up.

A real "honest to goodness" first-class marquis who kept his automobile and was of irreproachable character had been hovering about Dorothy, and Mother Longly had come to the conclusion that it would be delightful to say "my daughter the Marchioness" or "my son the Marquis." She got a letter answering her queries in due season which filled her with delight. Christopher Granger was married and had a wife and family living in South Hebronville, Mass.

Dorothy bit her lip but said nothing when her mother showed her the letter. That night when the marquis called, Dorothy was especially gracious to him, so gracious, in fact, that he proposed and Dorothy agreed to take the matter under advisement.

The next night she and Chris met—met at that same villa on the hill overlooking Rome where they had met first, and sat out upon the terrace where they had had their first conversation.

"I suppose you will be returning home before long," said Dorothy—and somehow she managed to put a surprising amount of frigidity into that commonplace remark. Christopher looked at her, wondering at her tone.

"Why, no," said he, "I expect to stay over here six months at least."

"Won't your wife and children miss you?" said Dorothy. "With such a happy home as you have I should think you would want to get back to it."

"Wife and children!" exclaimed Christopher. "Who has been spoofing you?"

"Oh, I know all about it," replied Dorothy. "Of course, it's none of my business—but do you think it is quite right for a married man to go about posing as a single man?"

"I was not aware that I had posed, as you call it, at all," said Christopher angrily, "and as to my being married I was never married in my life."

"What?" cried Dorothy, "have you not a wife and family living in South Hebronville, Mass.?"

"No, I have not," returned Christopher. "I have a cousin of the same name as myself who lives in South Hebronville—and he is married and has a family. But what does all this mean?"

"I guess it means that mother, when she investigated you, got the wires crossed," replied Dorothy.

"Oh, so that's it," laughed Chris. "Well, I am not married—but I would like to be."

"To whom?" asked Dorothy.

"To you," replied Chris.

And two months later he was.

Puts An End to Bunion Pains

No Need to Suffer Another Day

There is one simple yet inexpensive way to reduce inflammation of swollen toe joints and help get them down to normal and that is to apply Moone's Emerald Oil night and morning.

Ask any first class druggist for an original two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) and refuse to accept anything in its place. It is such a highly concentrated preparation that two ounces lasts a long time and furthermore if one bottle of Emerald Oil does not give you complete satisfaction you can have your money refunded.

Special note: People who want to reduce swollen or varicose veins should get a bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil at once. Applied night and morning as directed they will quickly notice an improvement which will continue until the veins and bunches are reduced to normal.

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian and Department of Justice operative, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old. She does not want to leave Fair, for whom she has the affection of a daughter. Jim Barker, sheriff and aspirant for Stella's hand, directs Fair to run a shipment of arms into Mexico and bring back whisky. Unknown to Fair, Stella, dressed as a boy, accompanies the gang. The bandits' errand is successful and the party returns to Barker's ranch. Stella refuses proposal of marriage by Wade, Barker's lieutenant. Wade declares he will force her to marry him. Wade attacks the girl and "Go Ahead" arrives on the scene in time to rescue her. Barker appears and is disarmed.

—10—

"You saved my life, Bob," he said smilingly.

"That's nothing between friends," laughed the girl, excitedly. "But if you like, you can save mine now. Keep these men standing where they are for ten minutes."

"Oh, sure! Is that all?"

"Yes." With the word the girl turned and ran to the tall window opening under the balcony on the outside world, leaped into it and then out and down.

Fiercely Wade and Barker sprang forward, furious to see the girl escape; but they stopped at a gesture from Go Ahead's pistol. "Hold on, people," he said. "You heard what the boy said. Better not move for ten minutes." His voice was very kind.

Wade laughed fiercely. "Boy?" he grated.

"Oh, well. Call him a man if you like," Go Ahead conceded. "He sure did act like one."

Wade opened his mouth to speak, but a furious oath from Barker silenced him. "Shut up, you fool!" he yelled.

Go Ahead laughed. "Talk as rough as you like, fellows," he said, "but I guess you'll have to wait till the ten minutes are up before you can mix it."

As the ten minutes dribbled away Go Ahead caught the sound of furtive footsteps on the planking of the balcony over his head. Evidently, he guessed, the man who had fired at him was leaving the balcony to try to slip upon him by some other way or to set an ambush for him when he started away after the ten minutes were up.

Where would he watch—at the window or the door to the hall? Go Ahead did not rate the fellow's intelligence very high and guessed that he would watch at the window because Bob had gone that way. Still, if he were just a little more intelligent he would probably watch at the hall door, just because Bob had not gone that way. After all, it was just a guess.

What was the answer?

To Go Ahead it was plain enough. Go Ahead and chance it!

Abruptly his eyes gleamed. Forward he leaned, pistols extended, menacingly. "You d—n scoundrels!" he raged. "Ill-treating a boy like that! You ought to be killed. By heavens, I will kill you!" From his hands blazed alternate streams of fire.

Wade and Barker could not know that he aimed above their heads; and they did not wait to investigate. Pell mell they rushed for the door to the corridor and flung themselves through it. And instantly a revolver somewhere in the corridor began to crackle.

Go Ahead knew what this meant and that he ought to leave by the window at once. But curiosity held him. To the still-ajar door he ran and peered through the crack just in time to see Wade stagger back and fall. Barker hurl a sheath knife through the air, and Diego drop his pistol with a howl as the knife drove into his right arm.

This was enough for Go Ahead. Leaving Diego to fight it out with his employer and his employer's henchman, Go Ahead jumped out through the window.

His horse was gone, presumably taken by Bob; but Wade's horse was still standing hitched in the corral; and in a moment Go Ahead was on his back and was speeding away.

CHAPTER VI

When Stella leaped from the window she intended to run to the corral for Wade's horse, which she knew was tethered there. But when she saw another standing close by, held in place only by his trailing bridle, she guessed that it was Barker's, jumped on it, and sped away.

She felt no qualms at leaving Go Ahead to restrain Wade and Barker, and she had forgotten Diego. But before she had gone a hundred yards she remembered him and checked her horse. Diego was armed and was watching. Go Ahead (whose identity she did not know) appeared to be a stranger; he did not know the ins and outs of the ranch house; Diego might ambush him and— She would go back and fight it out with him! It was all right for a girl to run away, but she was not a girl; she was a man. Men stood by each other to the death; she would do the same.

Her hand dropped to her belt—and found nothing; and she remembered that Go Ahead had failed to give her back her pistol. Except for a small sheath knife she was unarmed. Her going back would merely add to the difficulties her champion might find in getting away. He was a man, all right; no doubt he would manage things satisfactorily—if she did not go back to hamper him. On the whole—Unwillingly, she spurred her horse and raced away to the north once more. But from time to time she looked back wistfully. For some reason her heart was unusually heavy within her.

As he leaped to the saddle of Wade's horse and raced away he saw, afar to the north, the trail of dust that marked Stella's course; and instinctively if not quite automatically he followed it.

For a while Go Ahead rode on silently, not hurrying to overtake the fleeing youngster but merely following his trail. He was thinking deeply; but his thoughts were clearly not unpleasant, for after a while a slow smile curved his lips.

"Some boy," he muttered in admiration. "Some boy! I'll tell the world so. Good looking, too. 'Bob!' Good name for a likely lad. Seems to fit him somehow. Wonder what that big lout was jumping on him for? Darn it! I ought to have shot the cuss."

As he talked to himself Go Ahead was cantering along, watching the dust line before him. Undoubtedly it was getting thinner, perhaps because he was falling farther behind or perhaps because the soil was changing and Bob's dust did not so readily rise in the air.

Meanwhile, Stella, pausing for a moment on the crest of the slope, had seen, two or three miles ahead, at the crest of the next swell, the men whom she was pursuing. They seemed to have halted for a moment. The distance was of course too great for her to make out the reason for their stopping (anywhere except in the desert they would have been practically invisible to her); but she guessed that they were looking back for her and Wade. So she rode on, faster than before.

In the second "valley" she came up to them and tailed on to their plodding procession.

No one spoke to her as she came up; and she spoke to no one.

There was no particular need for speech, and your plainsman is conservative in the use of language—except of course when he goes to town and paints it red. After a while, however, Black Kennedy, a special crony of Wade's, who had known all about the plan to hold Stella at the ranch, dropped back to her side.

"Where's Wade?" he asked.

Stella glanced at the questioner slowly and indifferently. "Wade?" she echoed. "Left him at the ranch." Stella knew that Kennedy was close to Wade, and she had decided to hold her tongue about the latter's conduct toward her until she got back to the Roost.

"Humph! Where'd you get that horse?"

"At the ranch. My horse was lame."

Kennedy knew that the girl's horse was lame, and he knew also how it had come to be lame. What he wanted to know was how Stella had managed to get another horse after he had personally seen to it that every other mount at the ranch house except Wade's had been sent away. Frowningly, he stared at Stella—and made another discovery.

Title Writers Discovered

"Everybody," said Twain, "is always complaining about the weather, but nobody does anything about it." (Change weather to picture and it is still good.)

"Parts were good," wrote Mathew Arnold, another title expert. "Parts were original. But that which was good was not original, and that which was original was not good."

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Mary Gasper and John Gasper, her husband, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 5th day of November, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 8th day of November, 1926, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 226 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Eighty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($87.50), which became due and payable on the 5th day of May, 1927, the 5th day of November, 1927, and the 5th day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand Seven Hundred Fifty-six Dollars and eighty-nine cents ($2,756.89), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 5th day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and Two Hundred Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($262.50) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $87.50 thereof from November 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Three Thousand Fifty-five Dollars and seventy-six cents ($3,055.76);

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Ole C. Stenmo and Randi Stenmo, his wife, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of February, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota on the 23rd day of February, 1926, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 187 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of Forty-six Dollars and eighty-two cents ($46.82), being the balance due and unpaid of the semi-annual installment of amortized principal and interest which became due and payable on the 9th day of February, 1927, and to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($62.50), which became due and payable on the 9th day of August, 1927, and the 9th day of February, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of One Thousand Nine Hundred Fifty-eight Dollars and forty cents ($1,958.40), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 9th day of February, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and One Hundred Seventy-one Dollars and eighty-two cents ($171.82) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $46.82 thereof from December 31st, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $62.50 thereof from August 9th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $62.50 thereof from February 9th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred Ninety-three Dollars and ninety-five cents ($2,193.95), including insurance premium of Five Dollars and forty cents ($5.40), which said mortgagee has been required to pay;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The Southwest Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼ of SW¼) of Section Fourteen (14); the South Half of the Southeast Quarter (S½ of SE¼) and the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼ of SW¼) of Section Fifteen (15), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West, containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the Government Survey thereof,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 15th day of September, 1928, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, including said insurance paid, as aforesaid, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

A Torrent of Soapy Water Kept Hot by The Cast-Aluminum Tub

THE Maytag was the original gyrafoam washer, which makes water do the washing. But the Maytag does more than that—it keeps the water hot to expand the meshes of the clothes, loosen the dirt and aid the cleaning action of the soap. It also keeps the soap thoroughly mixed with the water where it will do the most good.

These are some of the reasons why the Maytag washes faster—an entire washing in an hour or so; washes cleaner—collars, cuffs and grimy overalls without hand-rubbing; washes delicate garments hand carefully.

Wringing the clothes is easy with the marvelous New Maytag Soft-Roller Water Remover—another exclusive Maytag advantage. It is practically automatic in every operation.

Gas Tax Amendment

A vigorous campaign, advocating the adoption at the geneaal election in November of the State Constitutional Amendment No. 1—the gasoline tax amendment—will be started September 1, according to an announcement made in St. Paul this week by Senater L. P. Johnson, from Ivanhoe, President of the Gasoline Tax Amendment Committee Inc., formed to especially conduct this campaign.

Amendment No. 1 provides for placing one-third of the state's gasoline tax in the State Highway and bridge Fund to be used in improving secondary roads. Under existing provisions of the state constitution all of the gasoline tax money now is expended on the state trunk highway system, in addition to the moneys obtained from the automobile license taxes.

Acording to Senator Johnson speakers will be sent into every county in the state to explain Amendment No. 1.

The members of the executive board of the Gasoline Tax Amendment Committee, Inc., composed of Senator Johnson, Senator Iver J. Lee of Glenwood, State Representative Oscar A. Swenson, of Nicollet; State Representative Andrew Finstuen of Kenyon; Ole Langhough, of Evansville, and Harrison Hatton of St. Paul, are holding a series of weekly meetings in the St. Francis Hotel in St. Paul to block out final details of the campaign.

Substantial support for the campaign has been secured from several quarters and it now appears probable that all voters will be given ample opportunity to hear Amendment No. 1 fully explained.

The Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation, the Minnesota Rural Letter Carriers Association, and several other organizations are actively aiding Senator Jonnson's committee in planning the fall campaign.

Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Hagen of Grand Forks are visiting with relatives here this week.

Joe. Nelson and his mother spent the week end visiting relatives at Crookston and Glyndon.

Lewis Larson visited at Alvarado over Sunday.

Returned from Auto Trip

R. J. Vieths, superintendent of the local schools, arrived here on Wednesday from his home near Winona. During his summer vacation, Mr. Vieths in company with three of his home town boys toured thru every state east of the Mississippi river and made a trip to Quebec in Canada.

On their return home they passed thru the string of states next to the Mississippi river on the west side. They drove about 12,000 miles with a new Ford coach on their trip thru 32 states.

Threshing Started

The first threshing machine in this community to be heard this year, was the one owned by Arthur and Paul Hoffman, which on Wednesday was used in thresing out a few loads of barley.

Jim Peterson, local Standard Oil agent, was the official starter of the machine as he pitched the first bundles into the feeder.

Martin Swenson has been at the A. H. Langlie farm the past two weeks doing some carpenter work. While there he rebuilt the granery and garage, putting in new concrete floors in both of the buildings. He also put on a thirty foot extension on the concrete barn built there last year by Opseth Bros. and Swenson, making the new barn eighty by thirty-four feet.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXXIII

WHY CORN DID NOT GROW: There was a striking lesson in proper methods this past spring in so much of the corn not growing that was planted during the six weeks' dry weather: Here and there were corn fields with perfect stands while much of the crop showed less that 50 per cent stand—a failure of the corn to grow thru lack of moisture in the first six inches of soil.

Most corn land is plowed in the spring and when it is not harrowed immediatly and compressed with a roller or subsoil packer in dry weather, it dries out very rapidly and the seed will not germinate. To prevent the soil from drying out, land plowed in the morning should be harrowed thoroly before noon. A subsoil packer is of much value in getting a firm seed-bed and should be used immediatly after harrowing and again after the seed is planted. Corn is one of the quickest plants to germinate under proper conditions, and the failure of so much of the crop to grow this past spring might have been avoided thru right methods.

Many Attended The Pennington County Fair

Several hundred people from here attended the Pennington County fair held at Thief River Falls last week. Many claim that it really was one of the best three day exposition they have ever witnessed in this part of the state.

The Pennington County Fair Board is to be congratulated on the fine manner in which they arranged things and provided a large progrom of amusement for many thousand visitors who saw the fair blossom forth in its twenty-seventh annual celebration.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Jarland and family of Ringbo, Miss Seaterud of New York, Mr. and Mrs. T. Nelson and family and Mrs. Lindstrom of Newfolden, Mrs. O. Knutson of Thief River Falls and Mrs. Victor Johnson and son Roy were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Olson on Sunday.

Kids Free at State Fair; Thrift Tickets 50 Cents

Gee its Red!
PINK LEMONADE

Children will be admitted free to the Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, Twin cities, September 1 to 8, announces W.F.Sanger of Windom, president of the Fair.

"We are going to make this year's big exposition a Children's Fair," says Mr. Sanger, "and in order to encourage the attendance of the kiddies we are going to admit them free. As a result, there is no excuse for keeping the youngsters away from the State Fair. Any boy or girl under 12 years of age, whether accompanied by a grown-up or not will be admitted free this year."

Mr. Sanger also calls attention to the advance thrift ticket sale, which will be conducted from August 13 to 25. These tickets, which can be bought singly or in number, will sell for 50 cents, a saving of 25 cents. Thrift ticket agencies have been established in more than 900 stores and banks in 700 towns and cities in the state.

District Judge Candidate

We have been reliably informed that Attorney W. E. Rowe of Crookston will become a candidate for Judge of the District Court at the November election. Mr. Rowe did not, however, file as a candidate in the primaries and his name will not, therefore, appear on the official ballot. To overcome this stickers containing his name will be distributed or his name may be written in the ballot by the voter. Mr. Rowe's ability and standing as an attorney in the district and throughout the state are well known.

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian and Department of Justice operative, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old. She does not want to leave Fair, for whom she has the affection of a daughter. Jim Barker, sheriff and aspirant for Stella's hand, directs Fair to run a shipment of arms into Mexico and bring back whisky. Unknown to Fair, Stella, dressed as a boy, accompanies the gang. The bandits' errand is successful and the party returns to Barker's ranch. Stella refuses proposal of marriage by Wade, Barker's lieutenant. Wade declares he will force her to marry him. Wade attacks the girl and "Go Ahead" arrives on the scene in time to rescue her. Barker appears and is disarmed. Stella escapes to return to Robbers' Roost. "Go Ahead" follows.

"Where's your gun?" he demanded abruptly.

Stella raised her eyes slowly and looked the man in the eyes. "I let Wade have it," she answered coldly. "He wanted it. Anything else you want to know?"

There was a lot more that Kennedy wanted to know, but he saw no way of learning it without resorting to extreme measures, which would certainly stir up opposition by Stella's friends in the party. He was sure that something was wrong, but he could not imagine how the girl had got away from the ranch house except by Wade's consent—and he could not imagine Wade giving that consent. His inability to make even a guess as to what had happened cut the ground from under him.

"No!" he answered at last, frowning heavily. "I ain't got anything else to ask you just now. But I reckon I will have later." With a jirt of his reins he cantered back to the head of the column, where, as Stella noted, he began to talk angrily with Gopher Joe, another crony of Wade's.

Half an hour later a rider coming from the direction of the Roost appeared in the distance and, coming nearer, turned out to be Jack Green. There were greetings this time, of course, for Green had been away for a month or more and his friends wanted to know where he had been and what he had done while he was there. Green had answers ready, and after a few moments the party moved on, leaving Green to go his own way.

Green, however, did not go on. He simply waited till Stella, who at sight of him had taken pains to fall well behind the others, came up to him. Then he fell in beside her and began his tale.

"Did a young puncher show up at the J/B ranch while you were there?" he questioned, cautiously but eagerly. "A regular he-man about twenty-five years old?"

Wonderingly Stella turned her eyes on him. "I guess he did!" she exclaimed. "There couldn't be two of them could there? Do you know him? Who is he?"

"He's your forty-'leventh cousin from Virginia—the one your dad sent me East after."

"Good gracious!" Stella could swear on occasion; brought up as she had been she could not have failed to pick up more or less profanity; but he seldom used it, for Fair objected. This time, however, her startled feelings found relief in the strongest oath at her command—an oath that one of the younger bandits had taught her years before when she was very young, explaining at the time that it was such an awful "cussword" that she must never use it except under the very gravest provocation. Long since she had learned that all this was merely the conception of humor held by the young scapegrace, but she had never entirely got rid of the impression that it made upon her mind, and in moments of stress she still resorted to it. "Good gracious!" she swore, once more. "You don't mean it?"

"Yes, I do!" retorted Green. "He ain't a bit like most eastern dudes. He's all right, he is. An' you. dad hoped I'd get to the ranch before you left so's I could fix things up. But my horse put his foot in a gopher hole and broke his leg and I had to go back for another, an'—"

Stella was not listening. Her thoughts were moving fast. "What did dad want you to fix?" she questioned eagerly.

"Eh? . . . Oh! He wanted you to join him an' go East with him right away while you've got the chance by bein' away from the Roost. He said he knew you wouldn't want to go, but that—"

"Got a spare gun?" Stella's cut-in was abrupt.

"Ye-es. But—"

"Give it to me!" Stella snatched the revolver from Green's hand almost before he could get it from his holster. Then she jabbed it into her own and whirled her horse to the rear. "Let's go," she cried, over her shoulder.

Green's wits were not so quick as Stella's, but his muscles worked automatically; and in a second he was by her side. "How come?" he questioned.

"Oh, come on, goose! We'll talk later."

"Jest as you say, Bob; jest as you say." Green also spurred his horse and the two shot away.

But it was not to be just as Stella said. The volte-face of the two was quickly noticed by the others, and a chorus of shouts rose behind them. "Hold on! Come back! Where you goin'?" rang Kennedy's voice above the rest.

Stella turned in her saddle and waved her hand impudently. "Going back to the ranch," she yelled. "Want to see Wade again." Then she turned her back on the men and scurried away as if everything was settled.

But out of the corners of her eyes she kept watch to the rear.

Green did the same; and a moment later he snickered. "You ain't stopped them none," he remarked. "Most all of them are after us."

Stella did not answer immediately. But she chirruped to her horse, and he let out another link in his speed. Then—

"It's Black Kennedy's doings," she explained. "He was real peeved when I came up a while ago. He wanted to know, you know. And I didn't tell him, not so's you could notice it. He's a pal of Wade's and I reckon he knew the dirty trick that Wade and Jim Barker tried to play on me at the ranch and couldn't make out how I'd got away."

"But—but—but—" Green was gaspin. "How did you get away?"

Stella chuckled. "That cousin of mine you brought from the East dropped in. Oh, yes! He dropped in, all right. And what he did to Wade and Jim Barker was a plenty. . . . Hello! What's that?"

"That" was the whine of a bullet traveling overhead. The horses of the fugitives were better than those of the pursuers and had been steadily widening the interval between the two groups, and Kennedy, in the lead, but finding himself falling behind, had sent a bullet as a warning.

"Declaration of war," grunted Green.

"That's what. Black Kennedy means business. Well, let him mean. I'm not going back to the Roost. I hated to go back and make more trouble for dad by telling him what happened at the ranch, and I was only doing it because I hadn't anywhere else to go. Now I have. I've got a cousin to go to, and—oh—yes I found out this morning that I've got a fortune waiting for me in the East; that's why Barker wanted to marry me. I'm going to find— What's his name?"

"Name's George Ashmead Morton; but everybody calls him 'Go Ahead' an'—"

"'Go Ahead'!" Stella shrieked with laughter. "Oh, oh!" she choked, a moment later, "some of those Eastern dudes must be real sensible, after all. . . . Well, I'm going to find dear Go-ey, and go-ey East with him."

Services of a Friend

A blessed thing it is for any man or woman to have a friend; one human soul whom we can trust utterly; who knows the best and the worst of us, and who loves us, in spite of all our faults; who will speak the honest truth to us, while the world flatters us to our face, and laughs at us behind our back; who will give us counsel and reproof in the day of prosperity and self-conceit; but who, again, will comfort and encourage us in the day of difficulty and sorrow, when the world leaves us alone to fight our own battle as we can.—Charles Kingsley.

Start Again

Ruth, aged four, had been taught to tell the time, and from the clock she got her only idea of figures. "How old is you, Goldie?" she inquired of the little girl next door. "I'm twelve," was the reply. "My goodness! Isn't that too bad?" exclaimed Ruth. "Next year you'll have to be one again."—Youth's Companion.

MINNESOTA BRIEFS

Duluth—President Coolidge will visit the iron ranges of northern Minnesota August 2.

Fairmont—Thirty-five hundredths of an inch of rain fell early Tuesday, the first moisture in 24 days.

St. Paul—Frank T. Starkey of St. Paul is chairman of the executive committee of the Farmer-Labor party.

Mapleton—Mapleton will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of its incorporation on August 19, 20 and 21.

Albert Lea—Gordon Malmer, all-state high school basketball player in 1918-19, is dead from creeping paralysis.

Red Wing—A general increase in the cost of rural education is noted in the levies made this year in Goodhue county's 167 school districts.

Little Falls—A group of local sportsmen took part in a record planting of approximately 25,000 trout fry in the streams of this vicinity.

Fairmont—Senator Henrik Shipstead has accepted an invitation to speak at the Martin county fair the closing day, Sept. 19.

Red Wing—The Chamber of Commerce directors have taken the first steps which will lead to the construction of a swimming pool for Red Wing.

Graceville—John Ryan, 24 years old, and Esther Noshbush, 18 years old, both living between Barry and Graceville, drowned in Bigstone lake near Bonanza beach, 22 miles west of here.

Little Falls—Edwin A. Remer of Minneapolis, formerly of Little Falls, has been selected head of the newly organized Minnesota Pharmacists association.

Fergus Falls—The United States government has begun condemnation proceedings in federal court here to acquire large tracts of land in Roseau and Lake of the Woods counties.

St. Paul—Atty. General Youngquist has started action to stamp out alleged gambling at the nightly dog races staged by the Twin City Greyhound Association at Savage.

Savage—The state started court action to halt dog racing and acceptance of "donations" on the Savage racetrack. Application for an injunction has been filed in District Court at Glencoe.

Fairmont—Martin county commissioners appropriated $12,480 for poor relief in 1927, and $7,000 for poor relief. Appropriations for revenue in Martin county were lower than those in Blue Earth, Brown, Faribault, Jackson, and Watonwan counties.

St. Paul—The Roman Catholic church in Minnesota increased its membership 60,145 in the period between 1919 and 1926, according to figures made public by the federal department of commerce.

St. Paul—Breeding of new strains of wheat which under test give promise of surpassing the yields of the rust resistant Marquillo variety, has been announced by plant specialists of the University of Minnesota.

Crystal Lake—A franchise has been granted to the Minneapolis Gas Light Company, empowering the company to lay gas mains in the village. From $25,000 to $30,000 will be spent on the project.

Faribault—Kelsey D. Chase, who came back from Sherman's famous march to the sea to prospect for iron ore in northern Minnesota and finally became in turn, mayor of Faribault and Crookston, died at Faribault. He was 86.

Chaska—C. H. Klein, former state senator, will represent Minnesota Republicans on the national committee that notifies Herbert Hoover of his nomination August 11 at Palo Alto, Cal.

St. Cloud—Absorption of the Security Muffler Corporation, Utica, N. Y., is announced by President George Bouthinon of the Diamond Motor Parts Company. The physical properties of the Security company will be moved here.

Hopkins—Plans to erect a new telephone plant in Hopkins and install dial service at a total cost of around $83,000, are announced by the Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. Increased rates for the new service will be asked.

Minneapolis—Strict regulations forbidding the use of firearms "except in self defense" were issued to federal dry agents here by S. B. Qvale. This order applies particularly to automobiles. There will be no shooting at cars unless the drivers shoot first.

Virginia — Using hydroairplanes, launches and automobiles, a party of at least 15 congressmen will make an inspection of Superior National Forest and border waters on which the Backus interests propose to build dams. The trip will start August 4 from Duluth.

Owatonna—A new women's auxiliary for the Federation of Postoffice Clerks of Minnesota has been organized here. Mrs. Hubert Olson of Mora is president.

St. Paul—Loans on 69 farms, aggregating 12,509 acres, were foreclosed during June by the State Rural Credit Bureau on delinquent loans totalling $322,026.

Minneapolis—Station WCCO will be in the national hookup for both presidential candidates' acceptance speeches, according to L. J. Seymour, assistant manager of the Twin City station.

WATCH ICE FLOES FOR PHANTOM SHIPS

Eskimos Believe Lost Fleet Will Return.

Nome, Alaska.—While American newspaper readers have their attention centered on the feats and perils of Arctic aerial exploration, Eskimos of the north Alaskan coast search the horizon for another reason.

They seek every returning spring for one or more of the phantom fleet, the frozen, lost ships, drifting with the sinister ice pack from which, sooner or later, some of them must emerge as the great floes break with the seasons.

Whether the fleet is legendary or really exists is one of the problems haunting Arctic navigators for years. Vessels have disappeared into the unexplored polar basin ever since the beginning of the Arctic navigation. In one great swoop, the death fanged ice pack in 1876 carried off 30 whaling boats from the waters of the American continent. All but 70 of the men escaped to Point Barrow but the ships were frozen hard and high into the pack. The ice fields covering a million square miles rotates around the central pole slowly in the same direction of the earth's movement and in cycles brings objects gradually back to certain spots.

Eskimos who have escaped from the ice pack after being carried far north into the unexplored wastes have returned with tales of silent ships hard and fast in the white bergs. Some tells of seeing a ship sitting alone in a vast solitude. Others report several boats close together but frozen solid miles and miles in the Arctic interior.

In the hope that some day the ice pack will break up and release one or more of the phantoms Eskimos each spring eagerly scan the returning open waters. Should one of the old boats escape in good condition and be cast on shore near the native villages they might revel in the wealth of wood, steel and iron instruments and various stores. Once solidly frozen in the Arctic, food, clothing, rope, tools, and weapons are preserved for all time and return to usefulness when thawed.

The first breakup of the polar seas also brings Eskimos a great offering of driftwood in which are found a varied and more or less useful assortment of articles.

Harbor Waters Give Up Bodies of Many Failures

Boston.—For the most part, nobody cares. You can tell that by the clothing. Even the professional sobbers who can find tragedy most anywhere and in almost anything don't pay much attention. The police perform their cold professional rites—file reports in the red-brick police station on Commercial street—and then turn the whole matter over to the medical examiner.

But every case is a real tragedy. Every case meant a million heartaches before it became a "case" and the tragedy may be lessened a bit by the ending.

During the last two months the harbor police handled a dozen of the tragedies. For the sake of brevity they use the term "floater" to describe the cases. It is not used in disrespect. It's just a term coined for want of a better expression. It means a body found in the water of Boston harbor after the sea decides that it is time to give up its dead.

Of the dozen, one was an unfortunate woman. The rest were men who, for the most part, carried their stories of tragedy and twisted lives to a watery grave in the harbor. Practically all of them took their own lives, in the belief of the police, last winter. Practically all of them chose night and the cloak of secrecy that darkness gives to Boston harbor on winter nights.

Town Uses Soda Water for Street Cleaning

Altheide, Germany.—The city council voted to use soda water exclusively for street cleaning purposes.

Henceforth, under the new measure, soda fountains will be hauled through the streets and plazas with sprinkler attachments.

Altheide's mineral springs spout 2,000,000 quarts of the stuff every day and most of it is wasted. Ordinary water is expensive and it was decided that soda could do the work more efficiently and cheaply.

Magnet Saves Life

Guthrie, Okla.—A magnet saved the life of Fred Perdue, a young farmer, in an operation here. Perdue complained of severe pains in his back. An X-ray photograph revealed the point of a broken needle was beneath one shoulderblade and working toward his heart. Surgeons used the magnet to withdraw the steel.

Ohio Duck Equipped With Two Spare Legs

Kenton, Ohio.—A four-legged duck which is able to hold its own in activities of the other ducks, is a recent acquisition of Mrs. Homer Latimer. The duck has the regular set of legs and, in addition, has another leg growing out of each side of its body.

FORGER, TRAPPED BY COMMA, TO BE FREED

Tiny Mark Proves Will to Be a Fraud.

Albany, N. Y.—Sent to Sing Sing two years ago, George Starin Cowles, gray-haired Yonkers architect, who forgot to clip the tail of a comma from the letterhead on which he forged a will naming himself the largest beneficiary of the estate of his uncle, is soon to receive a conditional pardon.

Supreme Court Justice Tompkins of Nyack, who sentenced Cowles to serve eight to sixteen years, recommended that the sentence be commuted. District Attorney Arthur Rowland of Westchester and Special District Attorney Sydney A. Syme of Mount Vernon, who prosecuted Cowles, have concurred in the recommendation.

"I feel that the ends of justice have been served in the Cowles case," Justice Tompkins explained.

Plotted for Years.

For 25 years, according to the plea for clemency made by Cowles' lawyer when his client was sentenced, the Yonkers architect plotted to steal the fortune of his uncle, Edwin A. Oliver, part owner of the Yonkers Statesman, and writer of a humorous column. The birth of the idea, the attorney said, came when Cowles discovered that his grandfather, John W. Oliver, instead of willing him $250,000, named Edwin A. Oliver, his son, as chief beneficiary.

At that time Cowles was engaged to marry Nellie Drummond, daughter of a Yonkers business man. The wedding was postponed while Cowles brooded over devices to gain the money he felt was rightfully his. Then the younger Oliver died and Cowles discovered that only a small part of the fortune had been left to him.

Studied Long at Library.

He studied days and nights at the New York public library and finally submitted a will which, he said, was Oliver's last testament. The genuine will also was filed.

In preparing the fraudulent will, Cowles cut off the name of the printer of the legal sheet, but inadvertently left the tail of a comma. Further investigation showed that the blank on which the fake will was drawn had been printed in October, 1924, while the will was dated a month earlier.

Cowles' accomplice, Miss Drummond, at whose home he had been living for years, and William Weeks, Olivers' chauffeur, confessed they had witnessed the fraudulent will and Cowles pleaded guilty of forgery. Weeks and Miss Drummond were freed.

After he had been in prison several months, the real Oliver will was probated and revealed bequests of only $46,000, instead of the $250,000 Cowles had expected would be his. To Cowles was left $3,867, but he never received a cent because of his legal expenses in contesting the real will.

Huge Helium Discovery Makes Gas Plentiful

Dexter, Kan.—The discovery of new natural gas fields which have a high helium content, together with improvements in the method of extraction, has placed this gas on the open market for the first time.

Helium, used chiefly for floating balloons from the penny toys to American dirigibles like the Los Angeles, has until now been under government control. Besides the field at Fort Worth, Texas, which has been supplying the government with 500,000 cubic feet of helium a month, a new one is now being opened at Amarillo, Texas. This new field will provide practically an unlimited supply, certainly enough for the needs of the War and Navy departments, according to officials of the bureau of mines.

This gas, besides floating balloons, lessens considerably the danger of caisson work by shortening the recompression time and reducing the number of cases of "bends" and also makes it possible for deep-sea divers to work safely at much greater depths. Since it is available commercially it is being used in metallurgy and for filling radio tubes and glow lamps. Other uses are developing as the supply becomes generally available.

Just Italian Football; Reads Like Real War

Rome.—"In the name of Italy, in the name of august Rome, by command of the duce, strong in a faith which wavers not, conjoined as it is with a faith in the destiny of the new Italy, our magnificent lads fought a stern battle, won a hard, a longed-for and a glorious victory. The great heart of Rome kept them erect, a heart that beat with agony, but never with despair even in the darkest moments when a gloomy shadow of defeat hung over them."

This quotation from one of the Roman papers is extracted from a description of a football match between Italy and Hungary, and it means that Italy beat Hungary by four goals to three after Hungary had led at half time.

Another Metal Is Born of Factory Waste Heaps

London.—Out of waste heaps where worthless ore had been previously dumped a new metal, called beryllium, has been extracted. This new metal is about a third lighter than aluminum, much harder, and has about four times its elasticity. Salt water does not corrode it, nor will liquids or fumes. Its light gray color takes a polish like steel.

KEEL LAID FOR LARGEST VESSEL

New White Star Liner Will Be 1,000 Feet Long.

London.—The biggest ship in the world was begun in Belfast recently when the keel was laid for a giant White Star liner to cost $30,000,000. She will be more than 1,000 feet long, with a beam of 100 feet and tonnage of about 60,000.

The ship will not be ready for sailing until 1932, and experts have yet to decide what type of machinery will be installed in her.

When the new ship is added to the White Star fleet she will be called the Oceanic. The six largest steamships in service at the present time, all in the Atlantic trade, are:

The Leviathan of the United States lines, 59,957 gross tonnage, 907 feet long and 100 feet 3 inches beam.

The Majestic of the White Star line, claimed by some to be the largest liner afloat, on the basis of the builder and designer's prewar measurements, which are 56,551 gross tons, 915 feet and 5 inches long and 100 feet and 1 inch beam.

The Cunarder Berengaria, 52,226 gross tonnage, 883 feet 5 inches long, 98 feet 5 inches beam.

The White Star Olympic, 46,439 gross tonnage, 883 feet 5 inches long, 92 feet 5 inches beam.

The Cunarder Aquitania, 45,647 gross tonnage, 868 feet 7 inches long and 97 feet beam.

The new French liner, Ile de France, 43,500 gross tonnage, 757 feet 8 inches long and 91 feet 8 inches beam.

Only 15 Grizzlies Left in Washington

Olympia, Wash.—Fifteen grizzly bears in the national forests of this state represent the last stand of this vanishing species of wild life. There remain there also 50 head of caribou and possibly 80 mountain sheep.

But, notwithstanding a population of nearly 2,000,000 in the state, with various cities of from 100,000 to 450,000 inhabitants, Washington retains a generous supply of wild life of the primeval wilderness, contained largely within prescribed boundaries. According to a census completed by the federal forest service, deer are the most common animals in the forests, 22,500 of them having been seen and counted, with 8,500 elk and 5,600 black bears. The mountain goat is by no means in danger of extinction, for more than 200 of them were recorded by the rangers.

All of these animals, from the little company of grizzlies to the legion of deer, were noted by rangers while in the line of regular duty, and there may be large delegations running about in privately owned forests and in the more inaccessible parts of mountain ranges. In addition, Washington has 11 kinds of fur bearers so numerous that trappers have been in the business from generation to generation since the Lewis-Clark days. The wolf and the coyote roam in large numbers, and cougars, wildcats and lynx inhabit the snowy sections of the mountains.

All states in the Pacific Northwest report an abundance of wild life, said to be balanced so well that the species succeed in keeping check on each other.

Find Signs of Electric Lamps in Ancient Egypt

Munich.—That electricity must have been known to the ancients has been many times asserted, but now comes forward an electrician at Munich, one Stadelmann, who has been in times past an archeologist, to assert that he found in Egypt, in buried walls, indications denoting the use of electric lamps. He claims that Moses brought electricity from Egypt and that there are biblical paragraphs which will bear him out in his statement that lightning rods were in use in the temple at Jerusalem. Stadelmann believes that the serpent of bronze of Moses was nothing more nor less than an ordinary lightning rod such as is in use today.

He points out, further, that the ark of the covenant, made as it was of wood and adorned inside and out with gold, constituted a veritable leyden jar which communicated with a lightning rod on the roof, and that it was so arranged that, under determined conditions, it could be charged with electric fluid and produce the death of any ignorant person daring to enter the sacred precincts of the ark without necessary precautions.

Courtesy at Any Cost

Paris.—Factories worth millions of francs burned while the Paris fire department stood and watched because it had not been asked to help. A formality requires a signed request from officials before one set of fire fighters can cross city limits to help another.

Fine of $1 Is Paid by 100 Contributions

Kinston, N. C.—One hundred residents of Lenoir county have raised a fund to pay Capt. Frank Rhem's $1 fine for flogging two convicts at the stockade here. The contributors—judges, lawyers, bankers, doctors, ministers—gave one cent each to the fund. None was allowed to give more.

Meeting called to order at 10 o'clock A. M. All members present.

Commissioner A. C. McMillin offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Whereas the thru traffic from Thief River Falls to the Red Lakes pass over ten miles of township roads, and whereas the maintenance thereof places a heavy burden upon the township, and whereas the County has maintained said road, therefore Be It Resolved that the State Highway Commissioner and the State Board of Apportionment be requested and hereby is requested to apportion $2,000.00 additional to Marshall County for the year 1929 to aid the County in the maintenance of said road.

Commissioner A. N. Lodoen seconded the motion and the same being put received a mojority of the votes of the members of the County Board and duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner Per H. Kulle offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Whereas the east approach of the interstate bridge at Oslo is constructed of timber, and whereas the same is unsafe for the heavy traffic to which the bridge is subjected, therefore,

Be it resolved that the State Highway Commissioner and the State Board of Apportionment be requested and hereby is requested to apportion $5,000.00 additional to Marshall County for the year 1929.

Commissioner Ole Torgerson seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Resolution

Whereas, a petition signed by a majority of the persons owning cattle in the County of Marshall, as shown by the last preceding assessment roll in the Auditor's office of said county, has been presented to this Board praying that it appropriate a sum of money equal to 25c per head of cattle in the County, as shown by said assessment roll, in consideration of the payment of indemnity for tuberculous cattle, as may now or hereafter be provided by law, for assistance from the Minnesota State Live Stock Sanitary Board and the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry for the purpose of eradicating said Marshall County from tuberculous cattle, as provided by Chapter 269, Laws 1923, and also requesting that this Board agree to appropriate like amounts to assist in the payment of the expense of conducting each additional tuberculin test that may be necessary, which will be administered until the percentage of the tuberculosis in cattle within said Marshall County is reduced to meet the requirements of a Modified Accredited Tuberculosis-free Area, and

Whereas, all of the conditions and requirements of said Chapter 269, Laws 1923; have been taken and complied with, and are hereby expressly found to have been so taken and complied with, so that this Board is therefore, authorized to make such appropriation and to enter into such agreement.

Now, Therefore, Be it Hereby Resolved, that this Board levy and appropriate and agree to levy and appropriate funds to meet the provisions of Chapter 269, Laws 1923, and to in all manner perform the conditions and requirements of said act, and that the Chairman of this Board and the County Auditor of said County are hereby expressly authorized and instructed to execute an agreement with the Minnesota State Live Stock Sanitary Board as in said law provided.

Passed and adopted this 19th day of July, 1928.

A. S. ROKKE,
Chairman of County Board.

Attest:
A. G. LUNDGREN,
County Auditor,
(Auditor's Seal)

Commissioner A. C. McMillin offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Whereas the County Highway Engineer has filed his recommendation for work for the year 1929 wherein he recommends that no additional work be undertaken beyond the pending program, therefore Be It Resolved That Said Recommendation Be Accepted and Approved, and it is further resolved that the County Highway Engineer is hereby authorized to undertake grading and graveling on the following Jobs in said amounts

Commissioner A. C. McMillin offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that all sheep three months old and over be assessed at $2.00 per head.

Be it resolved that all dogs be assessed at $3.00 each.

Commissioner A. N. Lodoen seconded the motion and the same being put, received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner Ole Torgerson offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

It appearing that the 1928 Real Estate and Personal Property assessment in the Township of Espelie is unjust and inequitable as between that town and other townships in this County and upon an inspection of the returns of the Assessor for said Espelie Township it is apparent to this board that the Assessor has not included all the personal property located in said town on his return and the total value of Real and Personal Property assessed in said town being to this board apparently greatly undervalued and results in a discrimination between the town of Espelie and other townships in said County and the Board believing that a great quantity of Personal Property has been undervalued.

Commissioner Per H. Kulle seconded the motion and the same being put, received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

TWO LEGGED ENEMIES

The problem before all those interested in saving game and fish is that of control of human beings.

But the thing most important in all of their considerations consists of themselves, the man with the gun and the fishing rod.

Control him and wild life will be saved.

Under natural conditions game will increase or hold its own. Floods may come, waters may rise or recede, but the fish will spawn and grow. The crows may caw and the vermin of the woods continue their killing, but game birds will increase. The wolves may howl, but the deer will grow in numbers.

The truth of such statements is obvious to any resident of the game country.

Under natural conditions there was an increasing or constant supply of wild life.

But wild life cannot cope with its two legged enemy. Ducks will not increase when every lakeside brush pile contains a shotgun. Deer will diminish when on every stump is a rifle. Fish will disappear when fishermen go to the lakes by thousands and tens of thousands.

Wild life can hold its own with its natural enemies. It can even increase as civilization extends. But it cannot contend with hooked lures, high power rifles and death dealing shotguns.

Control ourselves, control the human being in his desires to catch and kill, and you will protect and build back wild life.

ONLY APPROVED AUTO LAMPS MAY BE SOLD

Highway Department Establishes Laboratory to Make Tests. Required by Law.

The Minnesota Highway department is now in position to make the tests and give the approval which is required for all motor vehicle lighting devices before they can be sold in the state, Commissioner C. M. Babcock announces.

A section of the highway traffic act makes it unlawful for any person to sell or offer for sale, either separately or as a part of the equipment of a motor vehicle, any electric head light or any auxiliary driving lamp, rear lamp or signal lamp, unless it is of a type which has been approved by the commissioner.

The University of Minnesota is cooperating with the Highway department in making this law effective. A laboratory for testing lamps intended for sale in the state, has been established and equipped in the electrical division of the college of engineering. Commissioner Babcock feels that there is now no reason why automobile lighting devices should be sold without the approval required by law.

The law requiring the approval of the highway department, applies alike to lamps which are sold as part of the regular equipment of new automobiles, lamps, lenses and reflectors which are sold for replacement purposes, and any spotlights, signal lights, or auxiliary driving lamps, intended to be sold for use as additional equipment of motor vehicles.

Selling or offering any lamps for sale which have not been approved is a misdemeanor.

Many automobile headlamps which have been sold in the past do not comply with present standards, and the highway department recommends that owners of cars which either have lamps that give a dazzling light, or lamps which do not properly illuminate the road, should have them tested and if necessary, have them adjusted or repaired, at an official lamp adjusting station. There are now more than 100 of these stations throughout the state.

Approved types of lamps will also need occasional adjusting, as they may get out of focus if the car is roughly handled or bumped when parking.

A COMMENDABLE MOVE

This paper has frequently supported the plan of having prisoners in the county jail use their leisure time at something more profitable to the community that is supporting them than merely loafing. We have suggested road work, work on the county farm and improvements of county grounds and at times an effort has been made to follow suggestions, but it remained for Itasca County to take the first sensible step in following out a consistent program.

The Itasca Iron News, published at Coleraine, tells the story in a recent editorial in which it says:

We wish to congratulate our county attorney W. B. Taylor, and the county of Itasca as well because Mr. Taylor recently dug up a moldy statute that permits the sentence of jail offenders to hard labor instead of allowing them to be gentlemen of leisure at the expense of the county. The one thing that makes criminals above all other things is this desire to shirk work and to have what others possess. To this class there is no greater penalty than imposing the work sentence. Six months at good hard work on Itasca county roads will either make a habitual moonshiner move out of the county or reform, and we predict that nothing has been done in the past 25 years which will equally decrease the number of offenders. Let 'em work and work hard. Some of them would rather be hung than work. With most of them one lesson would be enough.

The first application of the law was made by Judge Torrance. The more we see Judge Torrance in action the more we believe that our judicial district is indeed fortunate in having him on the bench, and that he is going to prove the most popular judge in northern Minnesota. Judge Torrance in commenting on the hard labor provision of the law, said that Itasca was the first in his district to insist on its enforcement, but that he believed it to be a wise move and would tend to decrease the amount of petty crime with which the local courts would have to deal.

Municipal judges and justices of the peace have been notified by the county attorney of this provision of the law, and are directed to use their judgment in making sentences. The law provides that hard labor sentences be imposed where prisoners are physically able, between the ages of 16 and 50 years.

It would not be a bad plan to start one of these new roads so insistently demanded and let jail offenders do the entire construction work. It could be called the "New Reformation Road."

We commend this plan to the attention of the local authorities in the hope that some similar idea can be worked out here.—Bemidji Sentinel.

BANKER-FARMER MOVEMENT GROWS

Funds Supplied by Banking Organizations in Many States to Finance Studies and Contests.

The nationwide movement being conducted by county and state bankers' associations and the American Bankers Association in co-operation with the state agricultural colleges and county agents for the purpose of bringing about both local and national solutions for farm economic problems has shown notable results during the past year. A review of these activities in the Bulletin of the Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association, summarizes some of the chief points as follows:

In Missouri a meeting was held at the College of Agriculture at which the bankers again appropriated $1,600 for boys' and girls' club work. Saline county bankers have raised $500 to stimulate beef calf clubs and report definite results obtained in getting farmers to lime their soil and grow alfalfa. County "key bankers" to promote banker support of farm betterment projects are being appointed and another Short Course in Agriculture for bankers is being planned.

In Kansas no less than fifteen counties are reported by the Extension Service as engaged in definite banker-farmer work. County key bankers attended four district conferences during the year.

The Louisiana bankers' agricultural committee met at the College of Agriculture in connection with a bankers' farm course. The bankers are thoroughly aroused to the wisdom of tick eradication and are co-operating to that end. County key bankers are being selected and county meetings with bankers throughout the state will be arranged.

Results Shown

In Kentucky key bankers have been appointed in each county with the result that the bankers of the state are co-operating with the College of Agriculture more specifically than any other group of business men. Some of the fruits of this co-operation is demonstrated by the fact that the number of dairy cattle in the state has increased seven per cent and the production per cow twelve per cent. Three counties in the state have eliminated all scrub bulls.

In North Carolina the oustanding accomplishments have been the honoring of "Class A Farmers," that is, those attaining a degree of proficiency in a well balanced and sound system of farming as indicated by a score card prepared by the College of Agriculture and the Bankers Short Course given there. Future plans provide for the continuation of the county key banker system and the arrangement of county banker-farmer tours.

In Virginia $15,000 has been raised by subscription for boys' and girls' club work, largely from bankers. A group meeting was held at the College of Agriculture with two hundred bankers in attendance. The Committee on Agriculture of the State Bankers Association voted to continue and check up on the county key banker work.

The reports from New York on the activities for the past year included the distribution of 20,000 short form farm credit statements prepared cooperatively by the agricultural college and bankers. The bankers' agricultural committee also arranged to send suggestions to the banks of the state to aid in financing purchase of dairy cattle to replace those lost by the tuberculin test.

Bankers' Farm Schools

Bankers' Farm Schools or "Short Courses" continued popular during the year. Several colleges held such courses under the auspices of the state bankers' agricultural committees and are repeating them this year.

"Minimum of Talk—Maximum of Demonstration" was the character of program put on by the Kansas Agricultural College for the second Bankers' Farm School in April. Four representatives were invited from each of twenty counties, consisting of the county key banker, the county agent, the secretary of the county bankers association, and the president of the farm bureau. Proper farm methods were brought out by demonstrations, then tours were made to farms whose owners had followed the practices and methods outlined by the college to illustrate the lessons. Emphasis was placed on the important part bankers can play in developing agriculture.

In South Dakota specific plans for the ensuing year are the appointment of county key bankers, co-operation in boys' and girls' club projects and group meetings of county agents and key bankers. In Minnesota the county key bankers system is to be continued with special emphasis on bringing the county agent and key banker into closer co-operation.

At a banker meeting at the North Dakota Agricultural College it was decided that the key banker organization would be completed and in order to acquaint the bankers with agricultural needs county bankers' meetings were planned during the year.

At a conference held at Montana State College it was reported that county key bankers had co-operated in arranging for a livestock special train which ran for seventeen days, made twenty-nine stops and came in contact with 22,000 people; that bankers had assisted in six district conferences that led to the formation of a state agricultural program, and that twenty-eight counties reported definite work under the leadership of the county key bankers such as assisting in the purchase of purebred livestock and loans to club members.

Other States in Line

Idaho College of Agriculture was the scene of a special meeting attended by thirty-five bankers and college representatives. The conference voted to join the key banker ranks.

In Oregon the first banker-farmer short course was held in January with a good attendance and marked enthusiasm. A meeting of the state bankers Agricultural Committee held in conjunction with the course voted approval of the banker-farmer contest sponsored by Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association, and appointed a committee to confer with college authorities on methods to prevent spread of contagion in dairy cattle.

California held twenty-two successful county tours during the year and as a result it is planned to extend the tours to every county in the state and also to arrange a state-wide tour. The county key bankers played a big part in pushing this work. At an Arizona College of Agriculture meeting of bankers county key bankers were appointed and plans made for community conferences of bankers, farmers and others where local agricultural needs will be discussed.

In New Mexico bankers and county agents met at Clovis as a step in the plan to acquaint bankers in different sections of the state, with agricultural conditions and to bring about greater co-operation between them and the county agents. At the Colorado College of Agriculture plans were formulated to select county key bankers, to follow up work with key bankers and county agents and for chairman of the state bankers' committee to attend and address group meetings.

In Nebraska four "farm outlook" meetings were held, largely attended by bankers. Sixty-nine county key bankers were appointed during the year and follow-up work between them and county agents is to be pushed.

For Iowa effective co-operation is reported between bankers and the Extension Service of the state college in their farm bureau programs. Every third farmer in the state is a member of the bureau. The key banker system is to be continued and special emphasis is to be placed on team work between county agents and key bankers.

Director D. H. Otis of the Agricultural Commission American Bankers Association attended many of the meetings.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

On When Women Come Into Money.

As Aunt Emmy sipped her tea she heard the conversation drift to the Slade sisters. The fact that they had inherited a large fortune and would have to administer it themselves created considerable comment.

"My husband says old man Slade made a big mistake not putting it in trust for them," said Mrs. Burt. "He says women never should handle large sums of money because they are 'financially uneducated'—he really means 'dumb.'"

"Of course not," Aunt Emmy agreed. "There are all sorts and kinds of women all the way from very prudent to very foolish."

"Well, anyway, an awful lot of women have been victimized in financial things—just look at all the widows that have been robbed," insisted Mrs. Burt.

"There won't be so much of that in the future as in the past," Aunt Emmy said. "Women have been easy to victimize because they knew so little about money affairs, but now they are realizing this danger more and more and are taking advantage of the financial advice departments their bankers have set up for them. One thing that has led to women's financial undoing is their natural love of pretty things. This trait often leads them into foolish investments and speculations to get money quickly. Once a woman sets her heart on a thing she can't wait until it is hers."

"But if women didn't buy things, there wouldn't be any business," spoke up Molly. "Women are the natural spenders of the family, Dad says."

"Yes, but they would have more to spend if they'd go a little slower," replied Aunt Emmy. "Every time I see a woman falling for some silly get-rich-quick scheme I think of the nice things she could buy with the money she is going to lose. If they'd go slower—they'd get farther."

"From what I know of the Slade girls," Molly began—but just then the Slade girls themselves came in.

"We're so sorry to be late," they apologized, "but we have been having our first lesson in finance down at the Trust Company. They are going to give us quite a lot of time and explain all the things we ought to know about money to keep us out of financial trouble."

"Well, my dears, you are going to the right school," said Aunt Emmy. "If every woman would do that there'd be less trouble and more pretty things for all of them."

Ghost Vessel Seen in the North Sea

Ship Without Crew Directed by Radio Control in German Experiments.

Berlin.—Travelers on the North sea may see at times a large dummy ship with masts and funnels, but not a living soul on board, prowling around those waters.

Reminiscent of the Albatross haunted ship of the Ancient Mariner, this weird craft, propelled by a normal ship's engine, will move slowly and then fast, according to the will of its invisible human masters, or zigzag across the waves.

But few persons are aware that this "ghost vessel" represents the first experiment of the new German navy with a wireless controlled dummy ship. The vessel itself is the former German battleship Zaehringen, with 11,800 tons displacement. The Zaehringen has been rebuilt at a cost of more than $600,000 especially for this purpose. The German navy decided upon this experiment after similar successful tests had been undertaken by the American navy.

To Serve as Target.

Ultimately, the Zaehringen will become the target for German naval gun practice. But the initial experiments are limited to trying out the efficacy of wireless control of a moving vessel. The preliminary trial will last a month.

The naval hulk, once the stalwart Zaehringen, after pulsing out of Wilhelmshafen, without a man aboard, will be guided and completely controlled by the German naval radio station on an escorting torpedo boat. In order to avoid a collision of the Zaehringen with other North sea craft, the escort will remain constantly within sight of its dummy ship, although many miles removed.

In view of the high cost of constructing the ghost vessel, precautions have been taken to avoid the sinking of the Zaehringen even during the gun practice later in the year.

To Use Dummy Shells.

Shells to be fired at the Zaehringen also will be dummies. They will be nonexplosive and will, at worst, tear a hole in the hulk of the target ship. But the vast empty spaces in the hulk of the Zaehringen have been stuffed with cork, solid cork, so that the ship must either be hit below the water mark or literally torn to pieces by the nonexplosive shells before it is in danger of sinking.

The solid cork sink-proof scheme was decided upon as being more effective than the use of empty beer barrels, used by the German navy during the war to keep mine sweepers afloat.

Bird Fetish Rewards Mesa Verde Explorers

Mancos, Colo.—The discovery of a prehistoric bird fetish, the finest thing of its type ever found on the Mesa Verde, was one of the rewards of the 1928 annual archeological investigations conducted by a party of seven men, under the guidance of Supt. Jesse L. Nussbaum of the park, who is also archeologist of the Department of the Interior. The explorations of this year were carried on among the cliff dweller ruins of Wetherill mesa on the west side of the park. The expedition was financed with special funds donated for this purpose.

The fetish, which is about three-quarters of an inch in length, served as a pendant on a string of beads, being strung by a hole drilled through its breast. The carving on the little bird is especially beautiful. Its eye sockets were carefully drilled out and small pieces of rock crystal set in with pinon gum to simulate eyes.

Through this year's explorations the Mesa Verde museum's collection of cliff dweller pottery will be increased by over forty restorable jars and bowls. According to Superintendent Nussbaum the newly uncovered pottery contains some of the best specimens received at the museum up to this time, both as to technic and decoration.

Train Disturbs Nap of Deer on Tracks

Middletown, N. Y.—A sleeping doe, on the tracks of the Wallkill Valley railroad, caused a train to halt near here recently. The engineer saw what appeared to be a bundle stretched across the rails. He blew his whistle and started the engine bell ringing. When the car neared the object he was startled to discover that it was a deer fast asleep.

Just as the train stopped the deer lifted its head, gave a startled glance at the mechanical monster that had interrupted its slumber and bounded off into the woods that border the tracks.

Wall Street Using Photostatic Bills

New York.—Three and four million share days on the New York Stock exchange have brought about one innovation in sending out of monthly statements—photostatic copies of ledger sheets.

For years leading commission houses in Wall street have prided themselves on the practice of mailing statements to customers promptly on the first of each month. Recently many of them have been two to ten days late through sheer inability to overworked clerks to copy the voluminous entries of purchases and sales after the close of the last business day of the month.

One firm hit upon the idea of having photostatic copies made of all active accounts after the books had been posted and balanced and is sending them to customers, claiming that considerable time is saved in the process. The question of any saving in expense is still to be determined, but the experiment will be continued and if found practical, other large firms probably will follow suit.

Woman Pilot Christens Her Plane the Chigger

Fort Worth, Texas.—The only woman pilot entered in the National Air Tour has christened her small monocoupe Chigger, in memory of that exceedingly industrious insect. Mrs. Phoebe Fairgrave Omlie came in contact with a chigger army when she arrived at the aviation field here. Now the word chigger is painted in gold letters on Mrs. Omlie's plane.

Hermit Steer Exiles Self in Grand Canyon

Denver, Colo.—Living alone in the mysterious canyons of the Colorado river in Grand Canyon National park is a hermit steer, now about fifteen years old.

In 1916 when the Grand canyon was a national monument supervised by the forest service, a grazing permit was given Scott Dunham of Fredonia, Ariz., and he brought his stock down Bright Angel canyon and headed them out to the plateau to Haunted and Phantom canyons. Upon creating of the Grand canyon as a national park the steers were driven out, but one was missing. Now the national park service has discovered the hermit, first by tracking him by extra large hoofprints noticed in April, and he will likely be permitted to spend his declining years in solitude.

Tokyo, Japan.—The Union of Boy Scouts in Tokyo is planning to invite seventeen representatives of Boy Scout organizations from the eastern part of the United States to visit Japan at the time of the coronation of the emperor at Kyoto next November. It is expected that the expenses of the visitors will be defrayed by the Japan-American association.

The program of entertainment for the American Boy Scouts includes several days' stay in Tokyo, and visits to Nikko Kamakura, Hakone, Nara and other famous sight-seeing spots of Japan, in addition to attending the enthronement ceremonies. The Japanese Boy Scouts also hope to take their young American friends on several camping trips.

Band Speeds Travelers at Station in Chile

Arica, Chile.—Travelers to Bolivia are given a merry farewell here. A military band plays at the railroad station during the half hour preceding the train's departure.

This custom, established long ago, formerly was utilized to his advantage by a foreign official, who when tourists from his country arrived en route to Bolivia told them he "would have the band out to see them off." The tourists modestly objected, but he insisted. The band played at the station and the travelers departed, greatly impressed by the attentions of the official and totally unaware that the celebration was not expressly in their honor.

SCIENTIST ENDS 3-YEAR VIGIL ON LONELY DESERT

Smithsonian Institution Astrophysicist Measures Heat of Sun in South America.

Washington.—Buried three years in the nitrate deserts of Chile, in a country so lonesome that even Indians could not be hired to remain, H. B. Freeman, Smithsonian institution astrophysicist, has returned to Washington after scientific research in connection with measurements of the sun's heat.

The Smithsonian solar observatory near Calama, Chile, is one of the three stations scattered over the globe where the institution is making daily computations of the sun's radiation. These observations are being taken over a long term of years with a view of collecting proof of variation and determining the amount so as to provide [illegible] from which to learn the influence of the variation on the earth's weather.

Freeman, who was accompanied by his wife, declared that the desert is too barren to support animal or plant life. During the three years but one wild animal—a fox—was seen, and that was near Calama.

"Our drinking and washing water was hauled by automobile from Calama, 12 miles away," Freeman said.

Fresh food, excepting meat, was a rarity. Occasionally vegetables were sent in from the coast 600 miles away. Fresh eggs sell for $1.50 a dozen in the winter months.

In an effort to relieve the monotony of life at the observatory the Smithsonian equipped it with a radio, but static was so bad that the finest and clearest results sounded like a hail storm, according to Freeman.

Despite the desolate life on the desert Freeman said that neither he nor his wife looked upon the hardships of their solar observatory life as more than inconveniences, and considered them of no moment, in view of the importance of getting solar measurements for a long period.

Freeman, after a vacation in California, will be stationed in Washington to prosecute investigations in connection with solar radiation investigation under the direction of Dr. C. G. Abbott. These investigations, which have been in progress several years, have convinced Doctor Abbott that the variation in radiation of the sun has a pronounced effect on terrestrial weather. It has been observed that in periods of maximum radiation lower temperatures have existed generally over the earth. Such a period now is present, the sun spots being at their maximum activity.

This is possibly due to the fact that maximum sun spot activity tends to large magnetic influences creating storm periods. Heavy cloud formations may cut off some of the sun's radiation from the earth and thus cause temperature decline.

All Simply Good Business

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"I WANT to save the old place, sir," said young Philip Moreland to the family lawyer.

"You cannot do it merely on your salary in Humbert's," said Mr. Trask.

"No—the Humbert job is merely to pay my living expenses now. Before I went abroad, I always expected to live in the home on my return, but I didn't count on that crash in stocks—I ought to have known better. But I want to save the old place for my children, Mr. Trask."

"You are married, Mr. Moreland?" and the lawyer's grizzled brows rose inquiringly.

"Good heavens no, sir. Haven't even met the right girl—I never was interested much in girls, you know, Mr. Trask—too busy with mountain climbing and exploring for that."

"A good thing for you, too. Well, Mr. Moreland, I think I can help you out in the matter of the house. You say that you will take all the greenhouses, and so forth, and start a fashionable florist business. You still have that Scotch gardener, MacLaren? Good for you. You can live in the large house if you want to. The small lodge cottage at the south gate is wanted by a young woman who'll open a tea shop there. The price I am charging her will take care of the interest on mortgages, and pay something on principal. What your florist business does is still more profit for the house. In two or three years you will be free and clear."

"Good! Now tell me what to do next."

"Not on your life," said Mr. Moreland seizing his hat. And he went out.

Mr. Trask smiled amiably. "He hasn't seen Miss Fenby yet!" he murmured.

Phil Moreland got into his car and drove back home along the smooth Long Island roads to the splendid inheritance that was his. He carried, in the car pockets, all kinds of reading matter that would help him solve the problem of saving the place for his children if he ever had any! He entered by the south gate and scanned the small brick lodge, with its wide porches and pretty grounds.

"I will have Meadows erect a heavy wire fence behind the place and so cut off this south entrance from the house and grounds," he mused and the next day there was begun a vary tall and very strong wire stockade.

"That is just what it is, auntie," averred Irene Strang Fenby. "A tall stockade! I am glad it is there. I shall plant jasmine and clematis and other things so that it is covered over. I suppose that Mr. Moreland is a rather snarly old bachelor, and I am more than glad that he has put the fence up there. Makes us feel quite independent, auntie."

Two weeks afterward Mr. Philip Moreland was driving past the south gate of his estate on his way to dinner three miles away. There came to him a delicious fragrance of fried chicken and hot bread. He stopped and stared at the "Brick Tea House" and then he parked his car within the space of the open gate, and went into the building.

The first thing he saw was a charming wide veranda set with small tables with an elderly woman, in a charming lavender frock, knitting and rocking gently in a chair.

"Perhaps you would rather sit inside," she told him.

"Thank you," said Philip, and entered.

It was all green tables and wicker chairs and pretty flowered chintz. Guests were seated at all the tables excepting one. There Philip seated himself.

And Miss Irene Fenby herself, charming in flowered silk, with her black hair satin smooth, and her soft black eyes shy, and yet businesslike, brought his delicious dinner. She waited on him, once a little awkwardly, when she explained that their regular waitress had burned her hand. Philip could not keep his eyes off of her. He lingered as long as he politely could over the meal, and then went home to dream about the girl.

"Look here!" he told himself sharply. "This affair is strictly business—and so I forbid you to eat there again, 'young feller-me-lad.'" He remained away a week and went there once more and had more fried chicken and hominy, and fell deeper in love with Miss Fenby than before. When he saw her quick flush of recognition at his second visit, he flaunted himself and came every day. Then at last one day Miss Irene Fenby became aware of his identity.

"I cannot bear him," she told her aunt solemnly. "So mean about putting up that fence! Oh, auntie, I ought not to say that for the old place is adorable and I know if it were mine I wouldn't let anyone open a tea shop here!"

Then, in the fall of the year, Mr Philip Moreland went to his lawyer again and told him that now that the mortgages were all paid, he thought he would turn out the tea shop.

"What will become of Miss Fenby?" asked Mr. Trask.

"We are going to be married!" reported Philip joyously. "And Irene's aunt will live there, too. That is all simply good business," he added contentedly.

There's a Difference

A young fellow who never has been known to go out of his way to take an airplane ride was told the other day that he was included in a "get off the earth" party to go up one afternoon with a visiting pilot at the Mars Hill airport.

"Well, I can't say that you seem particularly overwhelmed by the invitation," one of his companions remarked.

"Overwhelmed, yes," answered the young fellow, "but I don't think it is anything to get up in the air about."—Indianapolis News.

Faked

"Of course, you can fake a fight if you want to. What can't you fake, for that matter?

"At a fruit and vegetable show a chap won the first prize for cabbages with a magnificent specimen.

"'That's a beauty, that is,' another chap said to him afterwards. 'I'll give you half a dollar for it.'

"'No you won't,' said the prize winner. 'I gave 60 cents for it myself.'"

Doubtful Compliment

Ike Sewell landed himself a new job the other day as a guard out at the asylum. Ike was strolling through the grounds one afternoon when one of the patients came up to him and said:

"We all like you better than our last guard, sir."

"Thank you, my good man," replied Ike pleasantly, "and why?"

Skeleton of Extinct Bird Found in Rocks

The prehistoric rocks of Wyoming have yielded up parts of the skeleton of a huge flightless bird that lived on this continent many hundreds of thousands of years ago. The fossils were found last summer, but their discovery was announced for the first time before the recent meeting of the American Philosophical society in Philadelphia by Prof. William J. Sinclair of Princeton university.

The bird was similar to other giant extinct birds found on this continent, but constitutes a new genus, which has been named omorhamphus. It had no wings, and was a ground dweller like the modern ostrich. Instead of the specialized clublike toes of the ostrich, however, it had more primitive feet with short curved claws. In some respects it resembled the moa of New Zealand, which became extinct during the memory of the native tribes of those islands.—Kansas City Times.

Here's Speedy Relief From Bunion Pains and Soft Corns

Get a two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) today. Every well stocked drug store has this, with the distinct understanding that your money will be cheerfully returned if it does not reduce the inflammation, soreness, and pain much quicker than any remedy you ever used.

Two or three applications of Moone's Emerald Oil and in fifteen minutes the pain and soreness disappears. A few more applications at regular intervals and the inflammation is gone.

And as for Soft Corns a few applications each night at bed time and they just seem to shrivel right up and scale off.

No matter how discouraged you have been with pads, shields, or other applications, if you have not tried Emerald Oil then you have something to learn.

It's a wonderful formula—this combination of essential oils with camphor and other antiseptics so marvelous that thousands of bottles are sold annually for reducing varicose or swollen veins.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Mary Gasper and John Gasper, her husband, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 5th day of November, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 8th day of November, 1926, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 226 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Eighty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($87.50), which became due and payable on the 5th day of May, 1927, the 5th day of November, 1927, and the 5th day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand Seven Hundred Fifty-six Dollars and eighty-nine cents ($2,756.89), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 5th day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and Two Hundred Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($262.50) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $87.50 thereof from November 5th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $87.50 thereof from May 5th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Three Thousand Fifty-five Dollars and seventy-six cents ($3,055.76);

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

State Fair plans Colossal Program

ONE Thousand and one great educational and entertainment features will be presented at the coming $5,000,000.00 Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, Twin Cities, September 1 to 8.

The mammoth 1928 exposition will be a hundred times bigger than the biggest circus ever held. It will present a gigantic livestock show of more than 3,000 head of cattle, horses, swine and sheep. A wonderful exhibit of farm crops, fruits, and flowers will be a feature. Twelve hundred boys and girls will demonstrate club work.

A startling feature will be a public demonstration of an auto driven by radio control from an aeroplane, 1,500 feet in the air. Giuseppe Creatore and his world-famous band of 44 pieces will play three times daily for seven days. Three days of auto racing, and four days of horse racing are scheduled. Poodles Hanneford, world's greatest clown rider, will headline the vaudeville program. There will be 80 acres of machinery, a $500,000 art show, a wild-animal zoo, the fireworks spectacle "A Night in Bagdad," and hosts of other attractions. They all make it the biggest and best State Fair in all the land.

Will Hold Achievement Day

The Holt Boys and Girls 4-H club met in the schoolhouse here Friday evening and gave a very good program to a good sized crowd that came in for the last meeting of the season. This was the biggest meeting the local club has had this year and, had the largest attendance..

H. A. Pflughoeft, the district club leader, of Crookston was here. He gave a very interesting talk and reports that this was the best club meeting he had ever seen.

The program, which it had taken a lot of time and effort two arrange, was splendid, in fact it was the biggest and best the local 4-H club has ever put on.

It was decided at the last meeting that the club have their annual Achievment Day in Holt on Saturday, August 25. All the club members will exhibit their work. The sewing club will show their work in one of the local stores.

There will be a showmanship and judging contest and, all the members of the calf club will parade with their calves.

The public is welcome to come and see the local organization perform on the street here on Saturday, August 25.

On Monday and Tuesday this territory was soaked with some more heavy rain. The showers that hit here on Monday afternoon had quite a bit of hail with them but, as far as we know no serious damage was done.

O. J. Backlund and family motored to Thief River Wednesday.

Johnny Nelson returned home Saturday from Argyle where he has been working.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Olson and Mrs. Chas. Hagglund motored to Thief River Falls Saturday and had some dental work done.

LESSON XXXIV

FILLING THE SILO: Corn can be put in the silo in any stage of maturity from the tasseling stage on, but the greatest amount of feed is secured when the corn in the ear is glazed or sufficiently mature to cut for seed. In the northern sections it may be necessary to cut the corn before sufficiently mature to avoid frost. When corn is caught by frost the sooner it is cut for silage or for fodder the better.

Corn makes sweet or sour silage according to its maturity and to the amount of moisture it contains. When the corn is heavy in sap it should be left in the field a few days after cutting. When the weather is very dry one day may be sufficient,

The knives of the silage cutter should be sharp. Poorly cut silage packs poorly and results in moldy and spoiled silage. A distributer should be used in the silo. One man with a distributer can do a better job in the silo than two or three men can do without one.

THE NEW FARMING ACCOUNT SCHOOL

The good business farmer today watches his farm accounts carefully. In respect to his labor, his farm stock and his soil, he knows what they can do and how they can be most profitably handled. He knows the mathematics of growing feed from the soil, pigs and poultry from the feed and cash profits from pigs and poultry. He knows whether he is milking the cow for paying returns or the cow is milking him out of his invested capital. Wherever his accounts show a deficit or insufficient profit on one or more items, he immediately studies to overcome the handicap and correct any mistakes that have been made.

The Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association is conducting a nationwide educational campaign for better methods of farm accounting. The commission has been stressing the wisdom of country bankers through cooperation of county agents, calling farmers together, and holding account schools where instruction is given on the use of the farm account books.

Each person is led through the various steps in keeping accounts and each enters his own inventory which he has previously been instructed to take and bring to school. This gives a good start and when properly followed up by letters and an occasional visit by the specialist in charge, greatly aids the man who is really in earnest to come through his first year of keeping accounts successfully. Many times country banks offer the rooms for holding the account schools. In some instances, an employe of the bank is designated to assist farmer patrons during the year in keeping their accounts.

French Bathers Fond of Brilliant Plumage

The Erench are a decorative and decoration-loving people and they let themselves go when they indulge this instinct at the seaside, according to Bettina Bedwell in Liberty.

At some of the beaches the men appear in blazers that make the awnings and parasols blush modestly, while the women wear everything from chiffon to birch-bark bathing suits, and their peignoirs resemble gorgeous tropical birds. "At Deauville," she writes, "anything goes, and it is here you find sensational and freakish bathing clothes—such as beaded bathing suits and those made of feathers.

"The Lido is consecrated to pajamas, and bathing suits don't matter very much; while Le Touquet, Dinard, La Baule and other resorts on the northwest coast are backgrounds for the more substantial and less sensational models."

Tinted Coal Coming

Pink-tinted coal may be the latest fashion in anthracite if experiments now being made by a Pottsville (Pa.) producing company are successful. The object of the colored anthracite would be to give it a distinctive advertising feature and distinguish it from other coal. The paintlike substance is put on the coal with a sprayer, and it is said not to interfere with the burning qualities.

Tiger Face on Auto

With eyes that flash green lights and with teeth of steel, the replica of a tiger's head has been mounted on the radiator front of an automobile made in Germany for hunting in India. The feature is expected to aid in running the car through the jungle as well as being an attractive ornament.

The Ward of Robbers' Roost

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian and Department of Justice operative, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old. She does not want to leave Fair, for whom she has the affection of a daughter. Jim Barker, sheriff and aspirant for Stella's hand, directs Fair to run a shipment of arms into Mexico and bring back whisky. Unknown to Fair, Stella, dressed as a boy, accompanies the gang. The bandits' errand is successful and the party returns to Barker's ranch. Stella refuses proposal of marriage by Wade, Barker's lieutenant. Wade declares he will force her to marry him. Wade attacks the girl and "Go Ahead" arrives on the scene in time to rescue her. Barker appears and is disarmed. Stella escapes to return to Robbers' Roost. "Go Ahead" follows. Overtaking the outlaws Stella learns who her rescuer is. She decides to return to him, is pursued and "Go Ahead" intercepts her.

Another bullet sang through the air, this time very close to Green's head. Stella noted it and swung around in her saddle.

"Jack," she cried, "there's no use in your coming with me. I know all I need to know about Go Ahead. And dad needs you. You make a motion to try to stop me and slip up on it, and then stop and wait for the others and tell them—"

"Nothin' doin'!"

"Yes, there is. There's a whole lot doing! And there'll be a lot more if you don't obey orders p. d. q Kennedy's shooting at you; not at me. He knows mighty well that Barker doesn't want me dead. I wouldn't be a bit of use to him dead. Now you drop out and tell some lie—"

Another bullet whistled by, and as if it were a signal Stella whirled her horse and drove him with stunning force against the mare that Green rode, bowling the smaller animal completely over.

Green, good horseman that he was, reacted instantly but hopelessly; barely did he succeed in jerking his feet from the stirrups and springing clear as the mare crashed to the ground.

Stella's horse reeled, too, from the shock, but quickly recovered himself and, touched by the spur, shot away like an arrow. As he went, Stella, crouching low in the saddle, called over her shoulder: "Bawl me out to the boys, Jack. Give me a roasting. Understand?" An instant later she topped the rise up whose flank she had been racing and vanished from the sight of the pursuers.

And then, as she straightened up in her saddle, she faced Go Ahead, who had been racing up the other side of the slope to learn the meaning of the popping rifles that he had heard.

CHAPTER VII

Stella went straight to the point. "Glad to see you," she chortled; "'specially as I'm in trouble again. If you're not bound for anywhere in particular, maybe you won't mind going my way. There're some fellows back there over the rise that seem to have a grouch on me, you know."

"Sure I know." Go Ahead did not speak until Stella stopped, but well before that time he had spun about and was galloping beside her. "Funny how many undesirable citizens there are in the country nowadays," he observed.

Stella nodded. "Ain't it the truth?" she answered. "But what're you doing up here?"

"Came after you. Felt sort of responsible. Wanted to be sure you got home safe. Still want to. Who are your friends over the crest?"

"Nobody worth talking about. But I guess we'd better hurry some or they'll come pestering around." Stella touched her horse with the spur and he quickened his pace. "You from the East?" she asked.

Go Ahead laughed. "Discovered!" he exclaimed, gayly. "I thought my make-up was perfect and here a—a—shall we say a sixteen-year-old boy?—sees through it the first crack out of the box."

Stella dropped her head quickly in order to hide the gleam in her eyes. That morning, for the first time in her life, the fact that she was a woman had really been brought home to her (neither Barker's proposal nor Fair's warning had done it before); and she was only too glad that this Eastern cousin of hers had not guessed her sex.

Her first real thought was that his ignorance gave her an opportunity, herself unknown, to try him out and find out what sort of man he really was. The events of the morning had corroborated what Fair had told her and had deeply shaken her faith in the "boys" among whom she had been brought up; the scales had at least partly fallen, and she had begun to see them as they really were. Naturally, in her first spasm of disillusion, she had begun to wonder whether all men were the same where women were concerned—whether, specifically, the particular man beside her was the same at heart.

Instantly, as was her wont, she decided to claim no kinship with this cousin of hers and to conceal her sex until she had found out for herself whether he—and the new world which he represented and into which she was going—was any better than the men and the old world from which she was about to depart.

To revolve all this in her mind and to think up an answer to his hinted question as to her age took her about three seconds. Then she looked up. "You might say sixteen if you've a mind to," she returned, laughingly. "And I didn't guess you were from the East from the way you acted up when you jumped in at the window this morning. By the way, what's your name? You haven't told me."

For a moment Go Ahead hisitated. He was traveling as George Morton, which, while it had the advantage of being his own name, was less conspicuous than his common appellation. He might easily tell this youngster that his name was George Morton. He opened his mouth to do so; then switched in mid-action. "My name's Morton," he said; "commonly called Go Ahead because I like to butt into things. But I'm not using that part of it these days, and when other folks are 'round I'd rather you'd call me—"

"Go-ey?" suggested Stella.

"Er—well, yes, if you like."

"All right. Now tell me what you did to these triplets I wished onto you at the ranch."

Go Ahead chuckled "Didn't do a thing to them," he replied. "Just sicked 'em on to each other and came away and left them to fight it out. Haven't seen any list of casualties yet."

Stella turned her horse to the west before she answered. She had glimpsed something ahead. Then—"Reckon there weren't any," she remarked, with the utmost carelessness. "Less'n perhaps it was Diego. It's most too far to be certain sure, but I'm guessing that Bill Wade and Jim Barker are with that bunch of Mexicans that just came over the crest there that we were heading for. And"—Stella looked back over the course they had just traversed—"yes, there's Black Kennedy and his gang coming from behind us. We're between the two, and they're too many for us to fight. So I guess we'd better move along sort of pronto, if you don't mind."

"Don't mind a bit." Go Ahead had followed Stella's turn to the west long before he got a chance to answer, and the two horses were racing along the bottom of the dip at top speed. "You seem kind of popular 'round about these parts, Bob," he suggested.

"Yeppy! Am today, all of a sudden. Never was before. Found out why this morning, too. Oh, yes, I'm popular."

Go Ahead did not answer at once. He was studying the situation and considering its possibilities. He knew, and he was sure that the boy beside him knew, for all his flippancy, that it was one that called for considerable study. For the moment, indeed, he saw no way out.

Handy Man

In this changing age of machinery, it has been aptly put by a Manhattan epigrammatist, many hands do not make light work light. The weight of this heavy argument, he points out, lies in the fact that because of modern facilities there no longer is need for the purposeless handy man about the house or factory with his inconsequential and makeshift antics. In a word the walls no longer have just ears but amperes! Electricity is doing the work of 350,000,000 men without losing its temper, its force or its friends.

Words Most Used

Analysis of business letters, newspapers and ordinary correspondence has produced a list of 50 words said to be used more frequently than any others:

The, and, of, to, I, a, in, that, you, for, it, was, is, will, as, have, not, with, be, your, at, we, on, he, by, but, my, this, his, which, dear, from, are, all, me, so, one, if, they had, has, very, were, been, would, she, or, there, her, an.

The first 12 words make, on the average, 30 out of every 100 words commonly used. The 50 words run 50 to the 100 in all ordinary writing. Only one of the 50, "very," has more than one syllable.

Moral Progress at Least

Actual moral progress, if any, is painfully slow, but at least our methods are not nearly so harsh and brutal as they were in the old days and now we fail to catch our criminals with fingerprints instead of bloodhounds.—Ohio State Journal

PURSUING THE MISSING SERPENT

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

"I THINK mother," said long-legged Professor Banker, taking off his glasses and polishing them, "that I will get up early and go to the woods for some snakes. I want them for my classes, and this hot weather should be ideal for getting them."

"Very well, Charley," answered his gentle little mother, "and I will get up, too, and get your breakfast."

"No, I won't allow that. I can eat any time."

"That is just the trouble—you will forget all about your breakfast. Yes, you will! I know you—don't you often go to bed with your glasses on, and didn't you actually dress one day without removing your pajamas? Very well, then," as he still protested. "I will put a box of lunch in the wagon tonight, if you will promise me to eat it on your way to the woods. I have an empty shoe box that will be just the thing, for it will hold a lot."

So, like a dutiful son, he promised and went to bed. When the faithful alarm clock clanged in the early morning the professor dressed quietly, slipped out, hitched up the old horse and drove to the woods.

By the middle of the morning he was quite tired. It had been good hunting for snakes and his cages were full.

His beautiful specimens were stored carefully in the wagon and he was preparing to untie his horse when he spied an enormous black snake gliding under the ferns. It would never do to miss that one!

"Oh, what a beauty!" he cried, "Do wait a minute, can't you? Don't you know I have been looking for one of your family all the morning? Where is there a cage? A box? Anything—ah—that empty box! Not an ideal cage, but it will serve if I keep you cool—there—I have you!"

The professor's long legs had covered the ground rapidly while he talked, and the snake was overtaken and secured, coiled in the box, and the box tied up in less time than it takes to tell it. The box was stowed under the wagon seat and covered with a piece of canvas to keep it cool.

Arriving home, his captor put the box under the side porch in a cool spot until he could get a proper cage; then he went into the house to change his clothes. He came out of the front door with his arms full of books and forgot his most precious find.

Beside his usual forgetfulness there was a reason why snakes should be a minor consideration for the moment. Just as he stepped from the house the professor caught sight of his pretty neighbor, Miss Connell, on her way to the university. He called her and asked her to ride with him.

"You don't mind riding on this high seat, do you? And you are not afraid of the snakes in the cages back there, are you? Fine! Up you go—I have so much to tell you. One thing, you are so different from other girls. Did you know that—" as they drove off.

It was not until some time later that he thought of his prize under the side porch and hurried home to attend to it.

The box was not there.

"Mother," he asked in a peculiar tone, "did you see anything of a box I put under the side porch?"

"Yes, dear, here it is on the kitchen table. I thought you must have forgotten it."

"You didn't open it?"

"Certainly not, dear. You know I never open your things."

"It's a good thing you have no curiosity, for this had a snake in it."

He lifted the lid a tiny bit.

The box was full of lunch!

Mrs. Banker was horrified. "Charley!" she cried. "Your sister Jane has taken that snake to the picnic instead of her lunch! The boxes were similar and were here on the table together!"

"I will ride to the woods and warn them before they have a chance to open the boxes. They would be terribly frightened, and besides I don't want to lose that beauty."

Hoping to make better time, the professor hastily mounted his old bicycle and started after the picnickers, his coat tails flying and his long legs going up and down like the piston rods of an engine.

I believe I intimated before that it was a hot day.

When Professor Banker reached the high hill overlooking the picnic grounds, he was glad to dismount in the shade and fan himself with his hat. Looking eagerly for the young folk, he could see, far below him, the boys chasing a tramp and a farmer in the act of picking up a box from the road. At that distance he could not know that it was the identical one he was searching for.

Warm, tired and panting he walked through the woods, trundling his bicycle, until he came upon the girls, and found to his relief that they had not yet spread their lunch.

They were surprised to see him, but greeted him cordially, and started to set out the refreshments. He explained his errand to the shuddering group, and the contents of the fatal box.

The boys came shouting back, full of their story about the tramp. It seemed that while the girls were gathering flowers for the table, a tramp had sneaked up and stolen some of the boxes. The boys had followed him, and had seen him open one of the boxes and begin to eat. They had descended upon him whooping and yelling to scare him, and had chased him as far as the railroad track.

As the search for the snake had been fruitless among the lunch boxes, they concluded that the tramp must have taken it and clambered down the bank to investigate.

Reaching the place and finding the box gone the professor remembered seeing the farmer pick up a package and drive away.

If he wanted that snake he must ride back to town in a hurry before some one who didn't appreciate snakes should kill it.

Of course the professor did not know the farmer, but had noticed that the horses were poorly matched; one being large and white, and the other small and dark.

On with the chase!

Through the dust and heat—up one street and down another, around corners and in empty lots—behind big buildings, until finally, with the aid of the local policeman whom he had enlisted in the cause, he found the team in the livery stable. The wagon stood outside with the farmer beside it.

"Pardon me for troubling you," panted the tired professor. "But have you seen my snakes? I mean—you picked up a box back near the woods, didn't you? Well, there was a snake in it—" and he told his story.

The farmer, at first incredulous, then amused, laughed. "Here it is," reaching under the wagon seat. "No, by Jiminy! This box has a pair of shoes in it that I intended taking to the shoemaker! I've taken the wrong box! Come on, let's go!"

The excited trio hurried to the shoemaker's. "Have you mended my shoes yet?" shouted the farmer.

"You know I haven't. I told you I was unusually busy today."

"'S a good thing you are busy! There's a big snake in that box!"

"Aw, quit your kiddin'."

"No, honest. Ask the professor here."

"It's true. Where is the box?"

"Isn't it there on the table?" Where did you leave it, Dolmar?"

"I left it right here. Has anyone been in since I was?"

"No. Yes, there was, too! Harry Hamilton! and as foolish as a lord. He'll think he's got 'em sure when he opens that box. I was too busy to wait on him, and he just took the box and left."

"Where does he live? We must get to him before he opens it. The fright might be too much for him in his condition."

The four men almost ran to the rooming house where Hamilton lived. They found him sitting in a rocker in the act of untying the box on his knees.

"Don't open it!" shouted the policeman.

"I felt something move in there," murmured Hamilton.

"Of course you did," cried the professor, "it's a snake!"

But the warning came to late—the box fell open, and onto the knees of the startled man rolled a big, black thermos bottle and a half-dozen doughnuts.

"Where's my snake?" demanded the professor.

"You can search me, professor," mumbled Hamilton, as he rolled over onto the couch for a nap.

Sure enough, where was the poor reptile that had caused all the trouble? Why curled up in the box under the canvas in the wagon where the professor had so carefully left it in the morning.

All day he had been chasing the lunch his mother had prepared, and he had forgotten to eat.

Gold Produced Not Worth What It Cost

Though there is now about $9,000,000,000 worth of gold in the possession of man, it is generally accepted as a fact that the gold that has been taken out of the earth is not worth what has been spent in its pursuit.

Many men have spent lifetimes in the hunt for gold and have never found it. Innumerable shafts have been run into lonesome mountain sides that have never encountered pay dirt. He who wanders among the solitudes of the Rockies, for example, is quite likely to encounter the scars on the hillsides left by prospectors who have worked claims that never produced. The occasional claim has proved to be a bonanza. The occasional strip of sand has yielded its yellow dust most profitably for a time. On the whole, however, more has been spent in the quest for gold than was ever realized from it.—William A. Du Puy in Current History.

Love and Cooking

"Food cooked by an artist will keep a man in perfect health," says Luther Burbank in "The Harvert of Years," "while food cooked by a bungler will drive a man to drink as sure as fate. I've been accused of exaggerating the importance of this, but I don't mind. I declare that a meal prepared by a person who loves you will do you more good than any average cooking, and a person who dislikes you is bound to get that dislike into your food without intending to."

Knew the Make

Walter Anthony, the music critic, had taken his car to the sanatorium for an overhauling. "And while you are about it," said Walter, "you might take out all the promiscuous squeaks."

"Listen, bo," was the reply. "This make of car don't have any promiscuous."

Are You Ready When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

Fletcher's CASTORIA

Prehistoric Skeletons

Skeletons of prehistoric animals have been unearthed in fossil beds recently discovered near Redington, Neb. One of the specimens is believed to be the skeleton of a mammoth. The skull is about four feet across and seven feet long. The complete head weighs 1,100 pounds. The five-foot jaw bone of another unclassified fossil was found. Further evidence of prehistoric life was discovered in the way of shells and prints of vegetation. The fossils were obtained from beds that are believed to have been the banks of an ancient river.

Oxen Got Homesick

City life proved too much for a yoke of oxen brought to Franklin, N. H., to take part in the centennial celebration. They yearned for their usual life on the farm in Sanbornton, from which they never before departed, so much that a veterinarian who was called in after the oxen took sick ordered them back to the farm.

STREET RECALLS FRENCH NOBLEMAN

New Orleans Financial Center Carondelet's Monument.

New Orleans, La.—Wherever cotton is traded the world over business men are alert to daily development in a New Orleans street which bears the name of a French nobleman famous as a public benefactor.

Carondelet street, where the New Orleans Cotton exchange is located, extends fifty-one squares from Canal street to Robert, west end. The first six blocks from Canal to Poydras street encompass the city's financial district, where the daily turnover runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars. Midway in these six blocks is the cotton exchange, at Carondelet and Gravier streets. From this building Secretary Henry G. Hester sends out his reports which affect the market wherever the staple is known.

The French nobleman for whom the street is named was christened Francisco Luiz Hestor de Carondelet, Seigneur d' Haine St. Pierre de Nostles. Born in Flanders in 1747, he came to Louisiana in 1791 for a six-year stay. During this time he served as governor. Then he went to Peru from Louisiana to serve as viceroy.

Baron Carondelet recognized the advantages that would accrue to New Orleans from construction of a canal linking the Mississippi river with Lake Pontchartrain. Giving much of his personal fortune and lending his slaves for the work, Baron Carondelet was the dynamic force behind the movement for the canal, although a yellow fever scourge prevented the consummation of his plan. Canal street, now ranked as one of the famous thoroughfares of the world, marks the site of the nobleman's undertaking.

For his many benefactions Louisiana welcomed him as governor. New Orleans paid him tribute with Carondelet street, Baroness Carondelet street, now Baronne street, and Canal street, named for his work.

Plans a Dictionary of Good Grammar

Lincoln, Neb.—To do with grammar what dictionary writers have done with words is the idea behind a book written by Maurice H. Weseen, associate professor of English in the University of Nebraska. He has tried to make correct grammatical usage as easy as correct word usage.

Alphabetizing the stumbling blocks in English, Professor Weseen has taken the most accepted terminology in an effort to aid in standardization of English, which, he says, "can be accomplished only through a long and slow process of elimination and survival."

The material for his latest book, "Crowell's Dictionary of English Grammar," was gathered during 12 years as an instructor of English in Iowa State college and at the University of Nebraska.

He drew the illustrations from every day speech and writing.

"Quotations from Shakespeare and Milton often are of little value to the person who seeks to settle in his own mind some doubtful or disputed point of usage with reference to a practical problem of today. For that reason I have emphasized American usage, both in the giving of examples and in the citing of authorities, and have referred only incidentally to English usage for purposes of comparison."

Girl's Purse, Lost From Plane, Found on Roof

Washington.—A pocketbook which was lost by Miss Barbara Pearson of Ashland, Pa., while viewing Washington from an airplane was recently recovered by William Owens, a tinsmith employed in the office of public buildings and public parks of the national capital.

The purse was found on the roof of temporary building No. 5, located at Twentieth and C streets. It was turned over to Inspector Wright, in charge of the public buildings guard force, who said it would be sent to Miss Pearson by registered mail. The pocketbook was identified by a certificate of flight made out in Miss Pearson's name by the Washington airport. It also contained $4.75 in money, a vanity case and two keys.

New York.—There's such a thing as being altogether too sarcastic about unsatisfactory new shoes. A furniture merchant put his in his show window with placards telling what he thought about them. The shoe dealer obtained an injunction.

Judge Marries 5,000 Couples in 25 Years

Fresno, Calif.—George Washington Smith, who has been a justice of the peace here since 1903, has just set what he believes to be a record as a "marrying justice" in officiating at his 5,000th wedding.

Smith began his career as a marrying justice January 18, 1903, and has kept a record of the ceremonies. His records show that the greatest number of marriages performed in one year was 394, and that 49 was the most in any single month, while the record day brought eight couples to his office.

TELL STRANGE TALES OF CHINESE GHOSTS

White Men Plan to Investigate Queer Doings.

Shanghai.—Three Shanghai men who don't believe in ghosts have left the city for Hongkong, where they plan to investigate the alleged ghosts of Sung Huang hill, in Kowloon, the place where the last emperor of the Sung dynasty is said to have hidden himself from his pursuing enemies.

The three nonbelievers are H. Richmond Curley, J. B. Borman, and Alexander V. McDonough. They claim that their curiosity has been aroused by the persistent reports from Hongkong of the strange carryings-on of the "ghosts of Sung Huang hill."

"Ghosts don't exist and we propose to prove it to the satisfaction of all persons in Hongkong and Kowloon who think otherwise," Curley, spokesman for the trio, declared.

Stories Accepted.

Chinese residents of Shanghai who formerly lived in Kowloon take much stock in the ghost stories of Sung Huang hill. In all seriousness they will tell of strange moans and groans in the dead of night; of wild cries of tortured men and women, and of white robed forms flitting mysteriously about the place.

Lee Chai-ling, an intelligent, educated Chinese of the international settlement, formerly a tea merchant in Kowloon, swears to the truth of the following story of the haunted hill, which, he says, he personally witnessed:

In 1924 three children disappeared while playing in the vicinity of the place. A group of Chinese determined to investigate. Their leader was a powerfully built, fearless Cantonese named Lo Hai-ching.

Lo Disappeared.

Lo led the party to within 35 feet of the place. He was about 10 feet in advance of the others when there came a piercing scream from the rear. All heads turned. They could see no one. Turning back, to their consternation they could find no trace of Lo. He had disappeared completely. The party fled in all directions.

Two days later Lo's headless body was found in the bay. The mystery never has been solved.

The latest story from the haunted hill has it that a prominent Chinese woman was lured to the hill by a young man and an old man. A charm seemed to have enveloped her and she followed them blindly. A bewildered servant was with her. The servant relates that his mistress followed the two men to the edge of the precipice, where the men disappeared.

The woman then exclaimed to her servant that there was something strange behind them. The servant looked. There was nothing. He turned back and his mistress was gone. Her body was found in the water.

Emir of Afghanistan Gets Knife, Fork Habit

Kabul, Afghanistan.—The court of Amanoula, doughty, westernizing emir of Afghanistan has adopted knives, forks and a bookful of American table etiquette through the act of an American woman, Mrs. Jackson Fleming of New York.

It was Mrs. Fleming who gave to Mme. Hourschid Bey, Turkish feminist lecturing in the United States, a standard book on American etiquette when she learned that her Turkish friend had been appointed matron of honor to Queen Sureya.

Mme. Hourschid Bey came to Kabul last year with Mrs. Fleming's gift under her arm to support her in her task of modernizing the veiled ladies of the court from the queen down. When the emir's eye fell on the book, he declared that it was just what he had been looking for, pored over it for a week and then had it translated into Persian under his personal supervision. Since then knives and forks have been in current and increasingly manageable use in the Afghan palace.

Rabies Is Classed as Children's Disease

New York.—Rabies may be classed as a disease of childhood, along with whooping cough and scarlet fever. Six out of ten deaths from this disease were among children under fifteen years. Of these deaths seven out of ten were small boys. The period between five and ten years has the highest mortality from this cause, according to statistics of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company.

The reason for this high mortality among children is twofold. First, naturally, children are more exposed to rabid dogs than adults, because of their habit of making pets, even of stray dogs. Secondly, the period of development of the disease has been found to be shorter and there is consequently less time to get the child inoculated with the serum which prevents the development of the disease.

NEW YORK MURDERS CALLED UNUSUAL

This View Is Based on Two-Year Survey.

Albany.—Murder in New York state, in the view of Senator John Knight, chairman of the subcommission on statistics of the Baumes crime commission, "is a relatively unusual crime."

This view, expressed by Knight in a report of his commission, was taken after two years of investigating by the body into the crime situation in the state.

"To be exact," said the report, "murder constitutes about one-half of 1 per cent of the felonies prosecuted in New York state. The great gist of crimes that constitute 99 per cent of the work of the criminal courts pass almost without notice, a few sensational cases capture interest and to a great degree determine the popular conception of justice."

"The general problem of making the United States less lawless," was seen as "bound up in what is done in these prosaic prosecutions, rather than in the Leopold-Loeb, Hall-Mills and Snyder-Gray cases in the generation," the report said.

Figures covering the crime record in New York city include 308 cases of murder and manslaughter in 1925; 289 in 1926 and 278 in 1927.

The assault and robbery cases reported were 1,483 for 1925; 1,173 for 1926, and 951 for 1927. Relative to burglary cases, the subcommission's figures show that while there were 4,103 in 1925, the number diminished in 1926 to 3,373 and climbed again to 3,380 in 1927.

The Baumes laws provide life sentences for those convicted of four felonies.

Modern "Knights" In Armored Joust Match

Stockholm, Sweden. — Jousting matches of the Middle ages required brawn as well as brain to win, it has been proved at a reconstructed tournament staged in Stockholm, at which authentic armor and weapons were used by the combatants.

The swords, coats of mail and shields were copied from historic relics in the Stockholm museums and executed under the supervision of Dr. Ernst Klein.

Coats of mail reproduced from originals of the Fourteenth century covered the entire bodies of the jousting "knights," and on their heads were placed helmets with visors. Broad swords, heavy shields and unwieldy lances completed the equipment. It took some two hours to inclose each fighter in his armor, which weighed about 110 pounds. The horses were clothed in gorgeous saddle cloths.

Divers Hunt $10,000,000 Gems in Torpedoed Ship

St. Nazaire, France.—Ten million dollars in uncut diamonds are being sought by Italian divers in the hold of the Belgian liner Elizabethville, which was torpedoed off this port in September, 1917.

The entire diamond output of the Congo for the year, belonging to the Belgian state, was on board in one safe. The Belgian government has engaged the Italian salvage boat Artiglio to bring up the diamonds.

The plan of the divers is to pass around the wreck on the outside, locate the captain's cabin, in which was the safe, and dynamite that side of the ship so the divers can enter. The idea then is to attach lines to the safe. The actual hoisting will be done by a powerful magnet with which the boat is equipped. The current where the wreck is is of great force, and if the magnet should lose its grip the lines will guide the divers to the safe.

Chinese Printer Who Won $56,955 Still at Work

Peking.—A Chinese printer, whose monthly wage is about $40, has won $56,955 in the semiannual race sweeps in Tientsin. Tickets in the sweeps are $10 each, and the winner risked about a week's wages. But as a result he is assured independence for life. His luck made little impression on him, as he appeared on time for work as usual.

He's Worth It

New York.—The highest paid telephone operator so far recorded is Augustine W. Hanley, forty-one, who receives $3,500 a year from a Fifth avenue jewelry firm. In 17 years he has scarcely ever forgotten a number.

Dad Claims Boy, 5, Is Youngest Auto Driver

Columbus, Ind.—Donald Ford, five, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Ford, is one of the youngest auto drivers in Indiana, his father claims. Before he reached his fifth birthday last February the boy was able to start the engine of his father's car, but lacked length to manipulate the clutch and brake pedals.

The father has rebuilt an old car in such a manner that it will fit the tiny driver, and now hardly a day passes without Donald taking a spin. And he knows his stop-and-go signs, his father says.

Diversion at Hand if Palm Beach Was Dull

"It's astonishing," he said, "how many New England farmers leave their ice-ribbed farms in the winter and come to Palm Beach to enjoy themselves. We must see to it that they get plenty of enjoyment.

"Some farmers were chewing tobacco 'round the stove in a New England livery stable.

"'So Abner Moss has gone to Palm Beach!' said a farmer with gray whiskers. 'Wonder if thar'll be enough goin' on down thar to satisfy him?'

"'Be that's it may,' said a farmer with white whiskers, 'old Abe ain't a-runnin' no chances. He took his checkers and checkerboard along.'"

No Jaguars Wanted

Hearing an automobile crash, William J. Slattery of Washington, D. C., opened his street door to see if he could be of any assistance. As he did, in popped what he thought was the house cat. Returning from the accident, his wife met him with the information, "That was a funny kind of a cat you let in." Slattery took a look and decided she was right. With the help of three men he finally got kitty into a crate and learned that it was a young jaguar, the pet of a sailor who had been giving it an airing in an automobile involved in the crash.

Costly Road

A "superhighway," extending for 42 miles from Glasgow to Edinburgh, Scotland, is being projected. The road will have two traffic lanes, each 30 feet wide. It is estimated the road will cost $195,000 a mile.

Scheme Didn't Work

An English druggist who attempted to sell medicated cigarettes as a cure for colds, nasal catarrh, asthma and bronchitis discovered that it could not be done. Cigarettes that contained coltsfoot, thyme, rose petals and lavendar in addition to tobacco, are banned by the law against "adulterating tobacco," the court ruled, and fined the offender.

GIGANTIC FAIR PROGRAM READY

THE largest crowd in all history is expected to attend the coming Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, Twin Cities, September 1 to 8.

With the most stupendous educational program in its long history, the management has set aside $129,756.50 in premiums and prize money.

Forty times bigger than the biggest circus, the Fair's exhibits will present the progress that has been made in the Northwest the past year in farming and livestock raising; in homemaking and child-training; in gardening and fruit-raising; in aviation and mechanics; and in all of the cultural things which mean so much to the growth and development of city and country.

all dressed up

No finer livestock show will be presented any where this year than the State Fair show. Here under one top, to speak, will be exhibited more than 3,000 head of the finest cattle, horses, sheep and swine, ever assembled on any fair ground. The livestock pavilion with its thousand head of cattle on the main floor alone, will be a sight long to be remembered.

Nearly half of the counties in the state will have booth exhibits in the agricultural building, and the keenest competition in years is forecast. Displays of farm crops, surpassing any shown previously, will make up the exhibits in this building.

The horticultural building, with its stupendous exhibits of fruits and flowers, will prove one of the most interesting and attractive spots on the big state fair grounds.

And then there will be the demonstration of club projects, with more than 1,200 boys and girls, representing every county in the state competing. The contests will represent the finals in club work, the contestants having been selected in preliminary finals in which more than 40,000 children competed. The prize list for Boys' and Girls' Club Work totals $20,046.50.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Ole C. Stenmo and Randi Stenmo, his wife, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of February, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota on the 23rd day of February, 1926, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 187 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of Forty-six Dollars and eighty-two cents ($46.82), being the balance due and unpaid of the semi-annual installment of amortized principal and interest which became due and payable on the 9th day of February, 1927, and to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($62.50), which became due and payable on the 9th day of August, 1927, and the 9th day of February, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of One Thousand Nine Hundred Fifty-eight Dollars and forty cents ($1,958.40), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 9th day of February, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and One Hundred Seventy-one Dollars and eighty-two cents ($171.82) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $46.82 thereof from December 31st, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $62.50 thereof from August 9th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $62.50 thereof from February 9th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred Ninety-three Dollars and ninety-five cents ($2,193.95), including insurance premium of Five Dollars and forty cents ($5.40), which said mortgagee has been required to pay;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The Southwest Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼ of SW¼) of Section Fourteen (14); the South Half of the Southeast Quarter (S½ of SE¼) and the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼ of SW¼) of Section Fifteen (15), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West, containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the Government Survey thereof,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 15th day of September, 1928, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, including said insurance paid, as aforesaid, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Washed in the MAYTAG in 2 to 7 minutes

Overalls or Lingerie

SUCH remarkable washing speed was unthought of before the Maytag originated the Gyrafoam washing action and the heat-retaining cast-aluminum tub. Yet it washes the daintiest garments as carefully as if done by hand—washes by water action alone.

This effective but careful method washes the stubborn edge-dirt from collars and cuffs, the ground-in dirt from play clothes or overalls without hand-rubbing. An average washing takes about an hour.

The Maytag Roller Water Remover has a large, soft top roll and large, hard bottom roll. They exert even pressure on all parts of the garment, and spare the buttons.

Phone for a Trial Washing

You may use a Maytag for your next washing without cost or obligation. You will find that it brings washday happiness. You will discover why it won world leadership. If it doesn't sell itself, don't keep it.

Harvey Gopp's name was omitted in the May report for this reason that he had taken cash for some of his cream and by the month for some. It was too bad that I had forgetten about his cash deliveries, however his deliveries for May were 136 pounds.

Arno Steinhauer holds the first place but is being crowded by Knute Nelson, at least Nelson is in the 400 pound class. Moberg is going strong and in spite of Voth delivering 1 pound more this month than last month he dropped back to 4th place. It has been some time since Borsheim's name appeared among the first five, nevertheless he is a patron that averages high thruout the year.

The honor roll is so long this month that I shall cut my remarks very short.

A hint of value to the producer, especially so to the patron that delivers Land O' Lakes cream. I have detected several cans of off flavored cream which taste very much like metal and some times it has been quite pronounced. After examining the several cans I have found some of them in a poor condition in respect that they were rusty, mostly in the bottom and a few rust spots on the sides. This is a serious matter and often will cause the score of your butter to be cut on account of metallic flayor. Cream that tests a thirty per cent or better will take on this flavor moreso then lower testing cream and, yet it is injurious to the quality of all cream to use cans that are rusty. When a can starts to get rusty it should either be retinned or discarded for the purpose of having cream or milk in it.

At this time of the year many cans are used for conveyin water for the men and horses while out in the hay meadow and fields. This might be all right if you do not forget to empty out the stale water and and have the can dried when you come home in the evening

Don't forget that the Farmers Poulty Association pays highest market price for live poultry. Coops are furnished without any charge and Mondays and Friday are the days you can leave your poultry here at the creamery. Check will be back the day after you leave them here. We have reveral patrons that have made shipments and are more then satisfied with the returns.

Let the home creamery handle your eggs and poultry as well as your cream. It is just as necessary to deliver your eggs often as it is cream, moreso then ever since the price of Land O' Lakes eggs is at a 4 cent premium.

LESSON XXXV

CONDITIONING COWS FOR GOOD PRODUCTION: Cows that average around 300 pounds of butterfat a year do hard work and need from 6 to 8 weeks' rest between milking periods. During this time they should be well fed and gotten into a high condition of flesh, as flesh in a good dairy cow is stored up material for milk production. Cows that are expected to make great records in production are always heavily fleshed before freshening.

When winter dairying is practiced, cows are had to freshen in October and November. This gives them their resting period in August and September, which is a good time from the standpoint of work, but also a time when the pasture is apt to be low and the dry cows neglected. It is a good plan to keep them coming in the barn with the cows that are milking and give them such amount of grain feed as is necessary to get them up in good flesh.

GOOD NEWS

We have just been informed that the Land O' Lakes Creameries will guarantee an additional premium of 4 cents on on Land O' Lakes eggs above the advance price paid on day of delivery.

This will, indeed, be good news to all poultry producers in the Northwest. This will mean a reward for delivery of better quality eggs.

This action was taken by the Board of Directors of the Land O' Lakes in order to encourage a quality program, as quality eggs are always in demand and make the most money for the producers. This premium will be effective from August 13th.

The Land O' Lakes Creameries have opened a dressing plant at St. Paul and the poultry marketed through the creameries in this unit will be shipped out in carload lots to St. Paul. When you have live poultry to sell see your local station man about particulars.

SYNOPSIS

"Go Ahead" Morton, Virginian and Department of Justice operative, receives a letter from Tom Fair, bandit leader, urging that some one be sent to rescue Stella Morton, foster sister, from the gang. An enemy in the gang prevents Fair from helping the girl. The letter was intended for "Go Ahead's" father, who is away from home. "Go Ahead" decides to go himself. At "Robbers' Roost" Fair explains the situation to Stella, now eighteen years old. She does not want to leave Fair, for whom she has the affection of a daughter. Jim Barker, sheriff and aspirant for Stella's hand, directs Fair to run a shipment of arms into Mexico and bring back whisky. Unknown to Fair, Stella, dressed as a boy, accompanies the gang. The bandits' errand is successful and the party returns to Barker's ranch. Stella refuses proposal of marriage by Wade, Barker's lieutenant. Wade declares he will force her to marry him. Wade attacks the girl and "Go Ahead" arrives on the scene in time to rescue her. Barker appears and is disarmed. Stella escapes to return to Robbers' Roost. "Go Ahead" follows. Overtaking the outlaws Stella learns who her rescuer is. She decides to return to him, is pursued and "Go Ahead" intercepts her. The girl explains the situation and the two ride away from their pursuers together.

He and Bob were racing westward between the crests of two long ridges that run parallel to their course about a mile away on either side. The two outlaw parties—Go Ahead had made up his mind that they were outlaws and that Bob was or had been affiliated with them—had changed their courses as soon as he and Bob had changed theirs and were riding slantingly to intercept them. Inevitably they were cutting down the interval and would certainly continue to do so for some time to come.

Go Ahead realized that unless he could find some way out the race was bound to end sooner or later in favor of the pursuers; at any moment a single shot might do it by merely wounding one of the horses. Anxiously he stared ahead, to where a low distant rise seemed to cross their path.

"Is there a rise ahead of us?" he asked; "or don't you know?"

"Sure I know. I wrote the map that the Lord used in building this country. It's a rise all right. If we can get over it we'll have a chance to get away, for there're miles of twistified country beyond that'll fool most of those fellows that are after us, maybe all of them. Listen, and I'll tell you about one or two turns. You never can tell when you'll want to know, you know."

The girl's voice showed not even a tremor. It ran along smoothly—as smoothly as if she were chatting about some indifferent subject under purely normal conditions. Glancing at her in wonder Go Ahead decided that she simply did not realize the danger. And in this he was right; Stella with the gang had been chased before and on such occasions had never seen anyone seriously wounded or caught; and she had come to believe herself and her friends immune.

Meanwhile, the outlaws steadily closed in from both sides. They did not fire, however; being on the flanks of the fugitives, who rode side by side, they could not fire at Go Ahead without running the risk of killing Stella, and even Kennedy's gang knew better than to do this. Besides, it seemed for the moment unnecessary. Their slanting approach, though it brought them nearer, yet inevitably brought them more and more directly behind the fugitives. Soon the one broad target would separate into two distinct ones. Then it would be reasonably safe to concentrate their fire on Go Ahead.

By and by single bullets, fired apparently by a single marksman on the left, began to whistle closer and closer to Go Ahead. Stella noticed this, and for the first time anxiety began to show in her manner. "That's Jim Barker shooting," she exploded. "He thinks he can shoot, and I guess he won't risk anybody else hitting me. I'm afraid I've got you into a fix."

"Humph! Maybe. Not much risk yet. Their chance'll come when our horses have to slow down in going up that rise while theirs are still running on the level. Once we get to the top we'll be all right."

Stella feared for Go Ahead, not for herself. After all, this had been none of his quarrel, she told herself. He had come into it solely in her defense. Of course others had defended her in the past, but they had been life-long friends and they had known that she was a girl. Go Ahead was a stranger who believed her to be a boy and who had yet taken her side against heavy odds. If he were hurt—

The thought of surrendering occurred to her, but only to be instantly dismissed. She knew perfectly well that Go Ahead would never let her surrender alone, and she knew that for him to surrender would mean his certain death. Neither Barker nor Wade would ever forgive the humiliation to which he had subjected them at the ranch that morning.

She thought also of crossing to Go Ahead's left and falling a little bit behind him, not so much to intercept Barker's bullets as to force him to stop firing, but she knew instinctively that Go Ahead would never consent to it and that to attempt it would merely lose them time. Under the circumstances, it was the sensible thing to do; but Stella, being a woman, knew without being told that it was the man's part to take fool risks for pride's sake, even though they brought him death, because the taking of them helped to build up the spirit that has saved and will always save home and country.

At last the up-slope began, gentle at first, but swiftly steepening. The laboring horses, spurred hard, strove to maintain their pace but could not do it. Slower and slower they climbed.

Behind, the bandits, coalesced in one big group, came rapidly nearer; their bullets, no longer fired by Barker alone, whistled by the left-hand side of the double target. It was only a question of seconds till one should go home.

Stella did what she could, closer and closer she pressed to Go Ahead's side, despite his equally persistent efforts to sheer off and thus diminish her risk of catching a bullet aimed at him. But she knew in her heart that all she could do was useless.

On the crest at last, outlined against the brazen sky but with dawning hope in their hearts, the two raced across the few yards of level ground and turned downward. Another spring would take them out of sight. They took it, but as they took it Go Ahead's horse staggered and, carried by his impetus, raced a little downward and then toppled and fell, while Go Ahead, warned in time, sprang free.

Nevertheless, when only a few minutes later the bandits reached the crest they saw only one dead horse and another riderless one running northward and downward into the dip. Go Ahead and Stella had both disappeared.

Bewildered, the foremost outlaws drew up their panting horses on the crest and stared wonderingly at the narrow and shallow valley beneath them from which the fugitives had so mysteriously vanished. Sandy and wholly bare except for a few scattered tufts of stunted grass it seemed to offer no possible place of concealment, and its ends, though not very distant, seemed yet altogether too far away to have allowed the fugitives to reach them on foot in the time allowed. And that they must have done so on foot, if at all, seemed evident from Go Ahead's dead horse and Stella's riderless one.

Cosmopolitan Group

The first settlement in Georgia was made January 13, 1733, by James Edward Oglethorpe at Savannah. The early colonists were German Lutherans, Piedmontese, Swiss, Scottish Highlanders, Portuguese Jews and Englishmen.

Best of Endowments

The finest endowment policy ever bestowed upon a man is the ability to work, the desire to work, and the enjoyment of work.—Exchange.

African Rodent

The ground rat or ground pig is a burrowing, ratlike rodent of South and West Africa. It is two feet long and has a very harsh, bristly hair, flattened, grooved, and brown in color. It is a near relative of the spiny rodents of tropical America, such as the coypu, hutia, and others of the family Octodontidae.

BUILD BIG BRIDGE OVER GRAND CANYON

Expect Span to Be Finished by January 1, 1929.

Salt Lake City.—From the precipitous walls of the Grand canyon, 130 miles north of Flagstaff, Ariz., what appears from afar to be a slender spider web gradually is being stretched across the top of the great chasm.

This web is actually a massive structure of steel designed to be the highest highway bridge in the world. The height from the waters of the Colorado river to the roadway grade is 467 feet.

Completion of the big span about September 1, and of the approaches about January 1, 1929, will bring into communication two vast regions hitherto inaccessible to each other except by way of a river ferry and a dangerous strip of mountain road.

The new route will eliminate the historic Lee's ferry, which has been in service since 1872, six miles above the site of the bridge, where John Doyle Lee built a cabin and acquired the ferry rights formerly possessed by the Mormon church.

Lee's first ferry was a clumsy affair, the first more serviceable boat being constructed in 1873 by John L. Blythe. This was a barge, 20 by 40 feet, capable of carrying two loaded wagons and teams.

After changing hands several times the ferry and all rights were acquired by Coconino county, Ariz., which now operates it under toll.

The new highway structure opens up a region that is little known to tourists and in which travel has been for the most part limited to traders and Indians. A strip of painted desert lies along one side, between Flagstaff and the bridge, and on the Utah side are the Bryce canyon, the Kaibab National forest, Cedar Brakes, Zion National park and the scenic beauty of the Grand canyon itself.

The main span is a deck arch of 618 feet, the arch being of the three-hinge type, with battered trusses designed with reversal stresses for cantilever erection. The bridge will be 833 feet long.

Transplanting Glands Fails to Renew Youth

Chicago.—Chemists and physiologists of the University of Chicago, after experimenting for years with gland transplanting to recreate youth or prolong life, have concluded that it cannot be done.

The only successes attained in part were with lower animals, where glands of the same species could be transplanted. But this was not effective.

Dr. A. B. Luckhardt of the department of physiology is skeptical as to any human success.

"We are handicapped in experiments with humans, because the glands available for such work are from other animals. The moment we introduce a gland of one species into a gland of another, we bring about a peculiar biological action."

Dr. Carl Moore, directing research along these lines in the zoological laboratories, is a pessimist.

"I don't say that gland transplanting never will be done effectively, but rather that it never has been accomplished," he said.

"It is perfectly true that a transplanted gland will live for a while, but it is equally true that it will not grow or renew its functions. There is not the proper blood circulation through the whole gland to feed it and keep it alive."

Archeologists believe the treasure was buried at the time when the duke of Alva, the Spanish "bloody" governor, imposed a capital levy on the inhabitants of the Netherlands, which was one of the causes of the Eighty Years' war.

Begun under William the Silent, it led to the emancipation of Holland from the Spanish yoke, and the establishment of the House of Orange as the Dutch dynasty.

Furnace Melts Metal; Harmless to Hand

East Pittsburgh.—N. A. Zeigler of the Westinghouse research staff has invented an induction vacuum furnace which is rather a paradoxical contrivance, for although it melts the hardest metal in a jiffy, it will not scorch a cigarette paper nor burn the hand.

Its walls are glass and its melting pot is a crucible surrounded by a coil of tubing. Into this coil is directed an electric current that reverses itself 30,000 times a second, inducing a sympathetic current in the iron, steel or copper that has been placed in the crucible.

FIND SALMON DOMAIN COVERS WIDE RANGE

Experts Study Habits of Popular Food Fish.

Anacortes, Wash.—When you eat salmon this summer you may wonder whence comes this food fish. It is still a question mark. Salmon life in the Pacific ocean is still a mystery.

How does the salmon fry find its way to the feeding grounds in the salt sea? Where does it learn to return again to the parent stream, or one contiguous thereto, as it has been proved many of them do? Where are these feeding grounds of the vast silver hordes that come up yearly in summer from their home in the deep? How far do they travel, going or coming? What do they live upon?

No one knows, exactly, but some facts have been ascertained.

The salmon domain is almost incalculable in its immensity. They range all the way from Monterey, Calif., as far northward as the Arctic circle and even as far easterly on the top of the world as the Mackenzie river on the American side and from Japan to the northernmost streams of Siberia on the Asiatic seaboard of the Pacific. It is generally believed that the young of salmon lay off the continental plateau to a depth of about 100 fathoms and find their feeding grounds there.

Food a Mystery.

Just what they feed on never has been ascertained, but the king and a few species of salmon when the old home movement is at its zenith—shortly before they reach the river mouths—will snap at a spoon troll with avidity. Trolling for these big fish is an industry along the coast from Seward, Alaska, to the Columbia river.

With the exception of those caught near the confluence of the rivers with salt water, salmon—like shad, herring, mackerel and other migratory fishes are never found at sea. They just vanish.

When salmon fry go to sea that is the last seen of them. But when the onshore invasion of mature salmon commence it begins to the westward along the Aleutian islands, because there they are found and netted early in May. Canning companies in operating floating canneries plan to leave port in time to reach the northern haunts of salmon and take some of the first comers. They are fat, heavy and well meated.

The large thirty-pound king salmon come first and are followed by the sockeye, or red salmon. Soon after they appear in Cook's inlet near Anchorage, then in Prince William sound off British Columbia. Along the coast from June to July, salmon appear in regular cycles of various species. In August, Puget sound, the Fraser river and other streams are filled with the rushing salmon trying to reach spawning grounds. The Columbia river is the last of the fishing streams to get salmon runs.

Check Their Return.

By tagging six or eight-inch salmon fry before releasing them from hatcheries the fisheries bureau has been able to check the return of many species of these fish. Even in midocean an occasional tagged salmon has been taken in herring or mackerel nets, but little light has been added to its life of three to four years' absence.

Most salmon experts believe the Alaska and west coast fish are endowed with a sense the human does not possess. Their theory is that when the off-shore movement commences salmon scent fresh water from afar and follow the scent until either they enter the stream of their nativity or one very close to it.

A distinct difference between the Atlantic and Pacific salmon is that the former after spawning in fresh water returns to the sea, while the Pacific salmon, after making arrangements for a myriad reproduction of its kind, dies. Once it leaves its feeding grounds in the salt water salmon takes no food, and in fact, it is believed to become incapable of eating. On rare occasions, male silver salmon will take a trout fly and steel head salmon will bite at salmon eggs in late winter.

Elaborate plans are being worked out along the Pacific coast fishing ports, sponsored by the fisheries bureau, for more accurate knowledge of salmon.

Moons Retain Secrets of Sun's Heat Changes

Berkeley, Calif.—If there are any variations in the heat of the sun, Jupiter's moons are not ready to tell scientists about it.

Dr. Joel Stebbins, director of the Washburn observatory at the University of Wisconsin, and Dr. T. S. Jacobsen, assistant at Lick observatory on Mount Hamilton, tried to find out by sneaking up on Jupiter's moons with long range and powerful telescopes at night, but they announced they learned nothing from the reflections.

They suggested trying again by catching the sun's rays as reflected from the planet Uranus, saying Uranus has a more uniform reflecting surface, slower motion across the sky and less shadow.

Daring Lady

New York.—Miss Katherine Locke of Youngstown, Ohio, back from Africa, is the first white woman to have visited the Glaoui of Marakesh in his 3,000-year-old home in the Atlas mountains. She motored across the Sahara and found that the hot sun restored the use of her lost voice.

SIAM A PARADISE FOR COLLECTORS

Country Abounds With Queer Fish and Snakes.

Washington.—Fish that climb and crawl on land, reptiles, birds, insects, mammals and plants, many of them new to science, are making Siam a collector's paradise for Dr. Hugh M. Smith, honorary curator of zoology of the National museum.

Doctor Smith, who formerly was United States comissioner of fisheries, is now director of fisheries for the Siamese government and has been able in the last few years to send many valuable natural history specimens to the Smithsonian institution, which supervises the museum.

His own house and garden in Bangkok have proved excellent places for collecting amphibians and reptiles. A tree near his veranda is the home of a green bamboo snake, and his pond is a resort for water snakes, which feed on the fish and amphibians that come there to breed. The house itself has its reptile invaders, little soft bodied lizards called "house geckos," which take up their abode wherever moths are attracted by lights.

Many of his specimens are drawn from the numerous odd forms of fish that thrive in Siam, where the dry season have forced them to adapt themselves to withstand its rigors. Some, as described by Doris M. Cochran, assistant curator of the division of reptiles and batrachians of the museum, spend as long as four months in damp soil.

As a result, fishing in Siam often resembles the old-fashioned method of placer mining, the popular "serpent heads" being dug out of dried-up marshes from a depth of two or three feet.

The climbing perch is described as the most remarkable of the fish in this class. It can climb steep canal banks with its tail and large pectoral fins and goes overland from one body of water to another, traveling as fast as a man walking slowly. This variety also is popular in the markets, being sold alive in moist baskets.

Bathing Costumes Now Worry Italian Police

Rome.—Just how far women bathers may go in exhibiting their legs, arms and necks this season in Italy is a difficult problem which has just been put up to the various prefects and police authorities of the country.

A decree has been issued to the prefects stating that "only bathing costumes which do not offend decency may be worn at seaside resorts." The order does not attempt to fix any rule of what constitutes decency, but leaves the matter to the local authorities, some of whom naturally will be more strict than others.

The regulation does, however, establish some very definite rules on social conduct at summer beaches.

Dancing in public in bathing costumes, bath robe or pajamas is forbidden by the degree, which states that "dancing is only allowed for persons completely dressed."

"Tenderfoot" Strikes Pay Dirt in Old Mines

Shoshone, Calif.—Henry von Pleikis, a Heidelberg student who arrived in this district a few months ago rating a "tenderfoot," now is credited locally with knowing something about mining.

On a stretch of white clay that had been the camping ground of borax miners for more than forty years, the young German took up claims which are declared to have assayed a high content of lead.

Old-time miners were amused at the German youth's belief he would find ore values in a flow of "white mud," but Montana mining interests have taken over the holdings at a reported price of $130,000.

The location is near Wingate Pass, in the Death Valley region, where half a century ago a furnace was operated and the community teemed with miners and geologists.

"Cherish" for "Obey" in Scotch Wedding Rites

Edinburgh, Scotland.—Women who marry in Scotland need no longer obey their husbands—at least as far as the marriage ceremony is concerned. That is the decision of the Episcopal church of Scotland which has agreed to substitute the word "cherish" for "obey" in the priest's addess to the bride. She will reply, "I will."

Nebraska School Uses Account Book 50 Years

Nebraska City, Neb.—A treasurer's account book which had been in use in one school district for 50 years was recently brought to the office of the county superintendent here. The first entry in the book was made in May, 1887, and the volume, neatly bound in leather, contains entries of every expenditure of the district since then. In comparing the teachers' salaries paid during the half century it was found that in 1877 the teacher was paid $40 a month; in 1880 the salary was reduced to $25, where it remained for several years. The present figure is $80.

"Old Ironsides" Regains Youth

Will Once More Sail High Seas, Stanch and Seaworthy.

Boston.—Shedding the decay of 132 years, Old Ironsides is growing young again.

As the days pass in the drydock at the Boston navy yard the old frigate feels new ribs forming in its massive frame, new strength growing in its ancient hull.

But renewing the youth of the Constitution is a herculean task. Lieut. John A. Lord, U. S. N., grizzled master builder of such steel superdreadnaughts as the New York and the Arizona and designer and builder of wooden craft, too, is surgeon in charge of the operation.

Lieutenant Lord says the task in hand is like no other ever undertaken in marine engineering. Seventy per cent of the ship must be replaced, including its most vital parts. Original methods had to be devised, for it had reached a state of almost complete decay.

Difficult Task.

Lord has put two years of planning into the work now being carried forward. All he had to begin with was a drydock. Wooden shipbuilding at the yard ended 50 years ago. An improvised shipyard had to be assembled, with shops, lumber, sawmills and planing machine. From the wooden shipyards of his home state, Maine, he assembled a small but expert force of workers. These were augmented with navy yard workers, specially qualified.

Some of the equipment is quite ancient as machinery goes. A futtock saw, brought in from Portsmouth, N. H., to saw out those crooked timbers which, scarfed together, make the ship's ribs, is seventy years old.

Where it lies in drydock now the dismantled hull of the famous fighting ship is almost lost behind a screen of scaffolding and bracing. A cradle had to be thrust tightly about her bottom to hold her firmly together—a new method.

Within the ship, too, a small forest of braces and shoring has sprung up between the four decks. As he clambered up and down ladders, through hatches and down into the bottommost part of the ship, Lieutenant Lord explained that all this was necessary. The danger of collapse has to be reckoned with in every step of the work, as decayed supporting timbers are removed and replaced by sturdy oaken beams. In the bow the sides are held together by a mass of steel cables.

Copper Replaces Iron.

The work is like reconstructing a worn-out four-story building in which the first floor must be torn out and repaired first.

In the bottom a new keelson was installed which with a sister keelson makes the ship's center-line longitudinal strength 90 per cent greater. New futtocks fashioned of live oak from Florida, kept for 73 years under water, are placed between the frame ribs before the old are removed. All is bolted together, with bar copper everywhere replacing iron. Where the new cresote-drenched "ceiling" or inner planking approaches the berth desk the old craft's lines are as fair and pretty as those of any maiden ship awaiting launching.

From Delaware have come great curved white oak roots and from West Virginia long, straight white oak timbers. With modern methods of preservation the rebuilt Constitution should have a longer life than it had in prospect when first built.

England has locked up Lord Nelson's flagship Victory in a drydock. But even after repairs it will never sail the high seas again.

"The Constitution," says Lieutenant Lord, "nearly as old and in a similar decayed condition, will be fully restored, permitting it to appear again on the high seas fully equipped and rigged stanch and seaworthy, in all its glory."

BIRDS AND WHALES SOON TO COME BEFORE LEAGUE

Probably Will Be Taken Under the Protection of the Geneva Body.

Geneva.—Birds and whales probably will be taken under the protection of the League of Nations.

As a matter of fact the league already has had a commission of experts at work for some time to see if an international convention cannot be launched relative to whales and other deep sea riches.

As regards the protection of birds, it is expected that the September assembly of the League of Nations will be asked to summon an international conference for the purpose of launching a new international bird convention to replace the 1902 Paris convention on the subject.

The migratory character both of birds and whales is such as to make any regulation relative to them necessarily of an international nature and hence within the scope of the league, while their economic value to the world as a whole is declared sufficiently great to justify the league's attention.

Both the convention on whales and the one on birds will have for their primary object the fixing of "open" seasons in such a manner as to relieve the world of any danger of the species becoming extinct.

The initiative for placing the protection of the migratory birds under the auspices of the league has been taken by the international committee on bird protection and various members of the league council have promised to support the resolution before the assembly authorizing the league to call an international conference for next year.

The necessity of protecting birds will be urged especially from the standpoint of agriculture, where they maintain a certain balance against the insect world, and also from the standpoint of game food.

Welsh Exhibit Oldest of Laws

Cardiff, Wales.—The National Library of Wales is exhibiting an unrivaled collection of manuscripts of the Laws of Hywel Dda, one of the greatest of medieval Welshmen, who 1,000 years ago peacefully united Wales and codified the laws and customs of its people.

The oldest existing manuscript of the laws was written on vellum some time about A. D. 1175-1200, in Latin, and is illustrated throughout by crude but graphic colored drawings depicting the king and his chief officers—the judge, the chief groom, the cook and others.

A little later, about A. D. 1200, comes the oldest manuscript of the laws in the Welsh language, known as the Llyvyr Du or Weun, or the Black Book of Chirk. This, too, is of vellum and is copied from an older Welsh manuscript no longer extant.

Army to Try Out New Powerful Explosive

Washington.—The region of Fort Humphrey, Va., will echo to the explosions of radium atomite, new explosive claimed to be more powerful than TNT, some time in August. According to the office of the chief of engineers of the War department here, Maj. William H. Lanagan of the board of engineer equipment, has requested such a demonstration.

A preliminary test of the explosive invented by Capt. H. R. Zimmer of Los Angeles, former army officer, was made at Pasadena by Lieut. Col. L. M. Adams of the California Institute of Technology. Lieutenant Colonel Adams reported to the chief of engineers, and the board, after examining his report, has decided that the new explosive "appears to have military value."

Henpecked Men Live Longer, Man's View

London.—Dr. C. W. Kimmins, formerly chief inspector of the education department of the London county council, in an address to women at Leeds told of his "investigations with a group of henpecked husbands."

"I never knew such a group of happy, joyous creatures in my life," he said, "and I was glad to learn afterward that henpecked husbands live much longer than those who are not henpecked, because they live much more sheltered lives."

Bed Offered for Rent on Part Time Basis

Budapest, Hungary.—"Half a bed to let by decent family. Terms moderate. Inspection invited. Address Mme. Andressy, 42 Sandor street, Budapest."

Thus read an advertisement in the newspaper Pesti Hirlap. In order to ascertain whether the advertisement was a joke or genuine the correspondent went to the address indicated. After climbing six flights of stairs he reached the flat where a kindly looking old woman opened the door.

"Do you see?" she said. "You can have this bed from 8 p. m. until 8 a. m. the following morning. Times are so hard in Hungary that some persons cannot afford to hire a room or even a bed for permanent use. When a tenant happens to work in the daytime he rents his bed during the day to one who works at night."

Stone Roads in Italy

Practically all highways in Italy are built of stone that is crushed by hand. All day long the peasant laborers sit in the shelter of their sunshades and make "little ones out of big ones." Although the method of road building is very primitive, the highways are excellent when completed.

Georgia's State Bird

After much excited balloting the brown thrush was selected as Georgia's state bird. The purple martin and red-headed woodpecker were close seconds. The brown thrasher was selected because of his qualities as song bird and permanent resident. The martin is a migrant and not fitted to be a year-round official bird. The woodpecker developed surprising strength particularly among the juvenile voters. They figured any bird as industrious as the woodpecker deserved reward. The brown thrasher is a member of the well-known thrush family, the mocking-bird subfamily.

Bad Management

Carmi Thompson, the political leader, was holding in Cleveland a kind of post-mortem on a political campaign that had failed.

"They lost through bad management!" he ended. "Their breaks were as bad as Mrs. Brown's.

"A visitor was ushered into Mrs. Brown's for an afternoon call by Bridget, and as she stood in the vestibule a voice said very softly from somewhere above:

"'Bridget, if that's Mrs. White I'm not at home.'

"The visitor started as if she had been stung. Then she raised her head sharply:

"'It is Mrs. White,' she shouted, 'and she's almighty glad to hear it.'"

Here's Speedy Relief for Tender, Aching, Swollen Feet

Your feet may be so swollen and inflamed that you think you can't go another step. Your shoes may feel as if they are cutting right into the flesh. You feel sick all over with the pain and torture, you'd give anything to get relief.

Two or three applications of Moone's Emerald Oil and in fifteen minutes the pain and soreness disappears. A few more applications at regular intervals and the swelling reduces.

And as for Soft Corns and Callouses a few applications each night at bed time and they just seem to shrivel right up and scale off.

No matter how discouraged you have been with powders, foot baths or other applications, if you have not tried Emerald Oil then you have something to learn.

It's a wonderful formula—this combination of essential oils with camphor and other antiseptics so marvelous that thousands of bottles are sold annually for reducing varicose or swollen veins.

HOSTS of the Newest Wonders of the Air, never seen before in the Northwest, will feature the gigantic program of the Minnesota State Fair & Northwest Livestock Show, Twin Cities, Sept. 1 to 8.

A mammoth U. S. Observation Balloon, 94 ft. long and 28 ft. wide, will be flown over the fair each day. It is of the type used by the U. S. Army, and has a basket capable of carrying six persons.

A driverless automobile, guided by radio control from an aeroplane 1,500 feet overhead, will circle the race track daily. This astounding feat by radio is only one of many such attractions being featured by the Fair.

All of the latest models of aeroplanes, 15 circus acts headed by Poodles Hanneford, three days of auto races, four days of harness races, and the world-famous Creatore's band, are other features.

The fireworks spectacle will be "A Night in Bagdad," the greatest spectacle ever built. Never has such a night program been planned.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Ole C. Stenmo and Randi Stenmo, his wife, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of February, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota on the 23rd day of February, 1926, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 187 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of Forty-six Dollars and eighty-two cents ($46.82), being the balance due and unpaid of the semi-annual installment of amortized principal and interest which became due and payable on the 9th day of February, 1927, and to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($62.50), which became due and payable on the 9th day of August, 1927, and the 9th day of February, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of One Thousand Nine Hundred Fifty-eight Dollars and forty cents ($1,958.40), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 9th day of February, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and One Hundred Seventy-one Dollars and eighty-two cents ($171.82) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $46.82 thereof from December 31st, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $62.50 thereof from August 9th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $62.50 thereof from February 9th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred Ninety-three Dollars and ninety-five cents ($2.193.95), including insurance premium of Five Dollars and forty cents ($5.40), which said mortgagee has been required to pay;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

> The Southwest Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼ of SW¼) of Section Fourteen (14); the South Half of the Southeast Quarter (S½ of SE¼) and the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼ of SW¼) of Section Fifteen (15), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West, containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the Government Survey thereof,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 15th day of September, 1928, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, including said insurance paid, as aforesaid, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

School Opens Next Tuesday

It has been recenly announced that our school was recognized as a fully accredited high school. We are about to open our school under this new promotion. Tuesday September 4 is opening day. We are seeking a large enrollment in our high school for the coming year to help us maintain the school on its new basis. We regret that we were not able to advise those who were interested about our promotion, sooner. It is understood that some of our high school people have registered at other schools. Under the circumstances this was justifiable, but now that our school offers coures with equal credit of any other high school in our own State we hope that those people will return to us.

Miss Viola Torblaa from Fosston, Minnesota will be the teacher in the high school department. She comes to us highly recommended. Miss Lorna Ulsness from Halliday, North Dakota will teach in the fifth and sixth grades and together with Miss Torblaa will have charge of the music classes.

Miss Ruth Swendby and Miss Dorothy Collins who were here last year will likly arrive tomorrow or Monday.

Supt. R. J. Vieths arrived here a week ago to make final arrangement for the coming school year. This will be the third year that Mr. Vieths is at the head of the local high school.

Wegge-Pearson

Miss Evelyn Wegge, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wegge of Holt, and Elmer J. Pearson, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Pearson of Argyle, Minnesota, were united in marriage Saturday, August 25th, the wedding taking place at Warren, Minn., Rev. S. W. Swenson performing the ceremony in the presense of Irene Wegge, sister of the bride and Albert Pearson brother of the groom.

The young couple have left on a short honeymoon, thru Duluth and the Great Lakes region, after which time they will be at home to their friends at Minot, North Dakota, where the groom is employed as Technician in the Public Health Laboratory.

Cow Drowned In Well

Joe Nelson lost one of his cows on Sunday. The cow had gotten out of the pasture and come up town to look around when she happened to walk into a shed part of the Guy Anderson barn where there is a twelve feet surface well with the top of it level with the ground into which she fell head first and was drowned.

The first new grain to be hauled into town was bought here on Saturday by the Red Lake Falls Milling Company elevator when Ludwig F. Larson sold a load of newly threshed rye. According to Mr. Sanoden, local buyer, the grain was of a good quality and the yeild per acre was also fair.

Mrs. G. O. Gregerson and baby from Chisholm are visiting with relatives here.

Mrs. Jacob Nelson has been on the sick list the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Hagen spent a few days at Grand Forks last week.

Mrs. Bentley Nelson and sons from Grand Forks visited with relatives here over the week end.

Mrs. R. L. Adams and son of Grand Forks spent last week at the R. A. Werner home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Sandberg motored to Thief River Saturday evening.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXXVI

GET RID OF THE BOARDERS: There is a short hay crop and prospects none too good for oats, barley and corn (July 1st). All kinds of feed will probably be high priced this coming winter. This fall will be a good time to dispose of unprofitable cows.

If the poorest producers of the average herd of the state were disposed of to extent of reducing the number of cows one-third, the remaining two-thirds, if given the same pasture and amount of feed, would produce even more than is now produced. So many bare pastures and many cows coming thru the winter badly run down in flesh is evidence that cows are not fed all they need. It means a shortage of feed for the number of cows that are kept.

More cows and more feed are needed rather than less to keep production up to consumption and to bring a little more income to more people, but in the face of a shortage of feed it is always good business to let poor cows go—never good ones, as good cows can always pay market price of feed.

Festival Was Big Success

One of the most pleasant social events of the summer wa. the Luther League Harvest Festival staged at the Hjalmar Johnson home on Sunday for the purpose of raising money for the church budget.

It was estimated that about three hundred people attended the festival, which was a big success. The weather was kind of unsettled during the day and no doubt kept many from coming there but, nevertheless over one hundred dollars were taken in for the church budget.

Much credit is due the several committees who arranged for the program, eats and other things which went to make the doings one long to be remembered.

The St. Hilaire Quartet rendered several numbers on the program.

Rev. Redal openned the big outdoor festival with services at eleven in the forenoon and in the afternoon Rev. Tjornham from Fergus Falls gave a very interesting talk.

Many people from neighboring town attended the doing and, left again saying they had enjoyed themselves very much.

A. L. Carlson, O. E. Sovde and A. Bennes motored over to Grand Forks Monday afternoon

Doings Of The 4- Club

The Holt Boys and Girls 4-H club held their Achievement Day here on Saturday, and a fair sized crowd watch them perform. At noon the club members and their parents enjoyed a delicious dinner together at the schoolhouse. Ice cream and coffee was furnished free by the Holt Commercial club.

The afternoon program consisted of instructive talks by out of town club leaders, showmanship and judging contests and a parade which were all held on main street.

Francis Faiman won the free trip to the State Fair, she showed the best calf. Boys and Girls its worth your time trying for.

The local club will have their next meeting at the schoolhouse here Friday evening, Sept. 28th, at 8 o'clock. The same program committee will make arrangements, namely, Eunice Paskewitz, Francis Faiman and Chas. Taggert. They expect to have a very good program lined up for their next meeting, at which time they will also elect new officer to run the club for next year.

The local club will meet once every month thru the winter in order to keep it going as a live and interesting organization.

The next meeting will be the first one of the 1929 season and, all the local boys and girls are asked to join and make the club a bigger and better one during the coming year.

Their motto is to make the best better.

Receives Recognition From German University

Mr. William E. Weiss.

The University of Cologne, Germany, has j[illegible] paid to Mr. William E. Weiss, of Wheeling, W. Va., one of the founders and General Manager of Sterling Products (Incorporated), and now Vice-President and General Manager of Drug Incorporated, an unusual distinction by bestowing unanimously upon him the title of Doctor Philosophiae Honoris Causa.

Mr. Weiss is the first and only American to be so honored by this world famous German institution. This mark of preferment came to Mr. Weiss in recognition of his efforts to further the industrial relations that have extended over more than a decade between the Directors and Scientific and Chemical staffs of German and American Pharmaceutical firms that are prominent in international industrial affairs.

During the past few years Mr. Weiss has been a frequent visitor to Europe and is a recognized link in strengthening commercial friendship between the old and new continents, a truth emphasized by the action at Cologne.

What Will you do

When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks. Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fretful, or restless. Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

While the foremost bandits halted Wade and Barker came hurrying up. Wade's head was bound up and he sat in his saddle with very apparent difficulty. Go Ahead would have judged from his appearance that Diego's bullet had done some execution. Parker showed no sign of injury, but he was a little behind Wade in reaching the crest because he had halted at the very last moment to get a better shot at Go Ahead.

Had Barker preceded Wade by even a moment Go Ahead's story would probably have ended then and there, for Barker would have paused to investigate. But Wade, burning with fever and maddened by pain, stopped for nothing. His eye caught sight of Stella's horse, which was still running northward, and with a yell he raced after it, blindly certain that Go Ahead and Stella had reached the end of the valley or had turned off into some intermediate gap that was invisible from where he stood.

His men followed him, and when Barker reached the crest he supposed that Wade had gone as he had for some good reason. So he followed. And for some moments the crest seemed deserted.

Not for long, however. Scarcely had the mass of the bandits reached the bottom of the draw when one of the laggers that inevitably adhere to any group of riders, and indeed to any group of men, came up the slope, crossed the crest and started downhill with every manifestation of hurry except speed. His eyes, fixed on his companions below, whose eyes in turn were fixed ahead, watching for traces of the fugitives, passed entirely over the ground close to his horse's hoofs and took no note whatever of a particular clump of tall grass a few feet wide that grew half a dozen paces to his left. He did not even look at it when his horse suddenly shied away from it. "Git up," he rasped, shaking his reins. "Dang you, git up!"

The horse obeyed, and the instant he did so the bunch of grass flew to one side, revealing Go Ahead's face, and the sand stretching from it erupted a Go Ahead sprang from it, ran a few feet forward and vaulted to the horse's scruppers, behind his rider.

The first thing the man knew was when, coincident with the shock, he felt a pistol jabbed into his ribs and heard Go Ahead's order, calm but with deadly emphasis, "Get back across the crest, quick, if you want to live."

The man did want to live, and he obeyed instantly. Few men would have hesitated to do so under the circumstances. His horse, roweled deep and hard, swung round and almost vaulted over the crest in half a dozen convulsive bounds, stopping only when he squarely struck the horse of a second laggard who was toiling up the slope, and sent its rider flying from the saddle.

Before Go Ahead's bandit could recover from the shock he felt himself tossed to the ground to join his fallen companion. An instant later both men, struggling upward, found themselves staring into Go Ahead's revolver. "Hands up, boys," said Go Ahead, blandly.

The two men obeyed promptly; there was nothing else that they could do. As they lifted their hands Go Ahead whistled and a moment later Stella came flying over the crest, gun in hand.

When she saw the two prisoners she whistled, too, then put up her pistol, and begun to dust the penetrating sand out of her clothes. "Well, for the love of Mike," she demanded, "were you born lucky or did you learn it in a correspondence school?"

Go Ahead grinned. "Both, I guess," he answered. "I thought I had one horse, but I didn't really hope for two. Just collect these chaps' guns, will you, Bob?"

Stella obeyed, willingly enough. She had seen the men's eyes quicken with recognition, and she wanted above all things to prevent their saying anything that would betray who she was. As she approached, she frowned at the two and shook her head slightly; then, an instant later as she took their guns, she muttered both a plea and a command: "Keep your mouths shut, and I'll help you." Then she went over and caught the still trembling horse that had been ridden by the second bandit.

Meanwhile Go Ahead was gesturing to the men. "Hit the trail you came by, boys," he ordered. "Go straight. I'll be right behind you in a minute."

The men faced about and started for the rear. As soon as they turned Go Ahead rose cautiously to the crest, mounting it till he could just see over it and scan the expanse of the valley.

Then he came back. "Your horse all right, Bob?" he asked.

Stella nodded. "Reckon so," she said. "He's shaken, but he can travel, I guess. See anything of the boys when you looked?"

"Not a thing. They've clean disappeared; turned off at the north end of the valley, probably. Let's go while the going is good."

A few bounds of the horses brought them close to the backs of the two prisoners, who were industriously plodding away. "Now, boys," said Go Ahead, "we've got a long walk before us, but I'll be as easy on you as I can. And the quicker you walk the sooner it'll be over and done with. See? Now get a move on, quick!" The last word came like a pistol shot.

The men "got a move on" instantly. They were riders, not foot travelers, but under Go Ahead's urge they hit and maintained a speed of which they would never have thought themselves capable. They knew that their fate lay in his hands. Up the slope and over the crest that Go Ahead indicated they hurried with scarcely a pause until they were well down on the other side.

Then Go Ahead shouted to slow them down, when they were reasonably out of earshot, in order to rest them and the horses, on which at any moment his and Bob's lives might once more depend, and also that he might talk to the boy at his side.

Long before he had become convinced that Bob had been a member of the bandit gang, but he was also convinced that the boy had definitely broken with it and would probably be willing to talk about it more or less freely. Go Ahead had no intention of breaking the pact that he had made with Fair through Jack Green, either in letter or in spirit, but he did want to know how things had gone at Robbers' Roost since Green had left a month or more before, and particularly he wanted information about his Cousin Stella.

So he began. "Bob," he asked, rather startlingly, "you know Fair's foster daughter, don't you?"

Stella jumped, far more noticeably than she had when the bullets had begun to whiz past her. "You mean Stella?" she gasped.

"Yes, of course. You must know her."

Stella gasped again, but not because of Go Ahead's assumption that she was familiar with the affairs of the Robbers' Roost gang. In fact, it never occurred to her that he was supposed not to know. It was merely the abruptness of the question that took her aback.

But she answered promptly; it never took Stella long to recover herself. "Yes, I know her," she admitted. "But I didn't know you did."

"I don't. But I'm interested in her all the same. I've heard a good deal about her, first and last, and I'd like to hear more. What sort of a girl is she?"

Scornfully Stella shrugged her shoulders. "Never thought of her as a girl," she sniffed. "She dresses like a boy and acts like a boy and swears like a boy. And she's a lot tougher than most boys." Out of the corners of her eyes Stella watched the effect of her words.

They were not what she had expected. Go Ahead did not look at all surprised or taken aback. "Poor child," he murmured. "Poor child."

Suddenly Stella found herself furiously angry. Like a little tigress she turned on Go Ahead. "You'd better not let her hear you call her that," she grated. "She's a darned lot better than your Eastern girls that can't do anything but flirt and polish their fingernails."

Stone Roads in Italy

Practically all highway in Italy are built of stone that is crushed by hand. All day long the peasant laborers sit in the shelter of their sun shades and make "little ones out of big ones." Although the method of road building is very primitive, the highways are excellent when completed.

THE GOLDEN HEART

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

MISS ORVILLA CRAMER sat in her high-backed chair and looked sharply at the two young women who were sitting at her feet. She had the air of a queen to whom homage was due and demanded. She was an austere old woman with a hooked nose and high forehead and her mouth closed in a straight, stubborn line. No one knew just how old Miss Orvilla was, nor did they even dare mention the passing years in her presence. She was very wealthy and had bought life rather than won it. No gentle method had she used in dealing with people. She paid as she went and demanded full return for her money. She got just what she paid for—no more and no less. As a young girl, however, she had loved one man and he, proving false to her, she had closed her heart to all softer emotions and looked with disfavor on all love affairs. Family ties meant nothing to her only as they added to the exalted opinion she had for herself. No one loved her, but she was so immensely wealthy that not one of her relatives dared to cross her. If one of her kin went astray the whole family trembled because her threat was if they displeased her her money would go to found a hospital for homeless cats. She was the bugbear of her relatives. Her nearbys and distant cousins even several times removed bowed before her august will. She had fairly spoiled the lives of three generations of her kin.

Today she had ordered into her presence these two young women, daughters of two of her cousins. The girls had come in fear and trembling for well they knew that Aunt Orvilla had something on her mind which was not going to be pleasant to hear. They had racked their brains in speculation and at the appointed time they had appeared in agony of spirit for fear they might do the wrong thing and so cut off their particular branch of the family of a share in the old woman's money.

Nowhere in all the world could a lovelier looking pair of girls be found than these cousins, Betty Walch and Janet Wales, as old Hannah, Miss Orvilla's maid, ushered them into the old woman's presence. Betty was all that her name might imply—plump, dimpled and with big blue innocent eyes. Her pretty head was a perfect mass of bobbed curls, which fairly rippled over her head in a riot of golden ringlets. She was dressed in a simple dress of blue linen, which seemed to exactly match her eyes. She was nineteen. Janet was of a different type. Her hair was a rich burnished red, which concealed depths that looked almost black at times. She was tall and stately and had the wonderful skin that goes with that particular shade of hair. She was even more beautiful than Betty, for her beauty commanded. Janet was twenty. The two girls were a perfect foil for each other.

As the two girls moved forward to the chair in which Miss Orvilla was seated the old woman raised her lorgnette and gave them a long and appraising stare. Then with a stately gesture she motioned for them to be seated on the little footstool at her feet.

"Ah!" she said in a biting voice, "so your parents thought best to let you come at my—" she paused a moment—"request." But both girls felt that she had intended saying, command instead. "You," she said, pointing her finger at Janet, "are all Cramer, and I hope you have a fine spirit and will appreciate what I am about to tell you. And you," she said, pointing to little Betty, who had grown white and pink by turns under the old woman's sharp glance, "are like your father's people—and not at all to my liking, I assure you. But no matter, you may overcome that if you obey me," and in a voice that was as cold as steel the old woman proceeded to unfold her plan.

She said she had picked the two girls as possessing all the good looks of the several branches of the family and if they would agree to her proposition and follow implicitly her direction and not cross her in any way she would divide her great wealth equally between them. As evidence of good faith the girls were to wear the rings she would presently place on their fingers, and she offered for their inspection two wonderful rings—one a large diamond and one a big black opal surrounded by diamonds.

"Now, girls," said Miss Orvilla, "I wish you to spend the greater part of your time in the house with me, so that I may have you under my constant supervision. I will clothe you and see that you have all that money can buy. I will restrict you in only one thing—you must neither of you ever marry. Men only bring unhappiness into a woman's life; be warned by me in time. Money is the only thing that can bring worth-while things. It will buy you all you want that is of any value. You can trust money; you can't trust men."

And so it was settled, Janet, being the older, was offered the choice of the two rings. She chose the big black opal. But when it came to Betty to take her ring she drew back and with a tremble in her voice asked to be allowed a week in which to make up her mind. When the week had passed and Betty was again ordered into Miss Orvilla's presence she burst into tears and confessed that she wanted to go home; that she could no longer live in the big, gloomy house without her dear mother and sisters, and that she had rather be poor all the days of her life and have a heart full of love than possess all the wealth in the world. With coldness and a fine display of scorn she was ordered from Miss Orvilla's presence with her ears smarting under the command to never show her face in that house again.

Janet under Miss Orvilla's tutelage grew haughty and even more cold and arrogant than the old woman herself. In fact, Miss Orvilla often caught her breath when she looked at Janet and wondered if her perfect pupil was not just a little too perfect. Would she some day turn on her and rend her? As time passed she grew almost afraid of the girl with the hard black eyes, and she felt herself growing strangely dissatisfied with her handiwork. She grew suspicious that Janet was only waiting. Time passed. News came that Betty had married a wonderfully promising young man and was happy and contented in her little new bungalow. This news was received with scorn by both Miss Orvilla and Janet.

Miss Orvilla became more and more restless under the constant companionship of Janet. She often caught a look in the girl's eyes that caused her to shudder. She felt more and more that Janet was getting impatient for the time when she, Orvilla, should quietly close her eyes and leave her in possession of all. It irked the old woman and as time passed hatred sprang up in her heart toward the girl, such as she had never known in all her life before. First, she hated the girl, and then, as her bodily strength failed and she became obliged to lie for hours and hours with nothing to do but think and think, she realized what a mess she had made of her whole life and what a curse money had been to her and how she had allowed it to spoil the lives of so many of her kin. Only one of the whole tribe had been strong-minded enough to take her own life in her hands and live it without thought of money, and that was little Betty. Miss Orvilla found herself thinking so much about the girl that she finally secretly sent for her to come. But Betty was so busy with her household cares and caring for the little new Betty, who was only just beginning to smile back into her mother's face that she could not come. Instead of this making Miss Orvilla angry, the old woman only smiled when she read the tender little note Betty sent, and when she did finally close her eyes upon this world and her will was read it was found she had done well by all her relatives, but best of all by Betty, whom she mentioned in her will as "the little girl with the golden heart who was wise enough to put love above riches."

Earliest Realty Deal Told of in Genesis

The first real estate transaction ever recorded is found in the book of Genesis. The story shows that the property had been appraised and about $220 paid over before witnesses.

The details of the transaction are found in chapter 23, the seventh to twenty-third verse, which reads as follows:

"After Sara's death Abraham came to the land of Canaan and asked to buy a burying place.

"And said to them: 'If it please your soul that I should bury my dead, hear me, and intercede for me to Ephron the son of Seor. That he may give me the double cave which he hath in the end of his field. For as much money as it is worth he shall give it me before you for a possession of a burying place. Ephron then offered the field for nothing, but Abraham insisted: I beseech thee to hear me. I will give money for the field.'

"And Ephron answered: 'My lord, hear me. The ground which thou desirest is worth 400 sicles of silver. This is the price between me and thee. But what is this? Bury thy dead.'

"And when Abraham heard this he weighed out the money that Ephron had asked in the hearing of the children of Heth, 400 sicles of silver of common current money.

"And the field that before was Ephron's wherein was the double cave looking toward Mambre, both it and the cave and all the trees thereof in all its limits round about was made sure to Abraham."

The constant reference to "in the presence of the people" and "in the sight of the children of Heth" and "in the hearing of the children of Heth," together with the statement that "the field was made sure to Abraham and the cave that was in it for a possession to bury in, by the children of Heth," verse 20, indicates that here is a real estate transaction with appraisal, witnesses and some safeguarding of title.

A "sicle" is obviously a "shekel," which was believed to be worth about 55 cents. This would make the price of the cave about $220. If, as some writers affirm, money was worth ten times as much then as now the price would be nearer $2,000.—New York Herald Tribune.

MANSION HAS SOLID GOLD BATH FIXTURES

Sir Dhunjibhoy's Palace More Elaborate Than King's.

Windsor, England.—The most costly residence in England is known here as "The Willows," but neighbors prefer to call it "The House of the Arabian Nights."

It is the residence of Sir Dhunjibhoy Bomanji, wealthy Bombay merchant. It stands within sight of the towers of Windsor castle, one of the homes of the king and queen of England, but it is said to be furnished more elaborately than even the royal home.

Every bedroom in Sir Dhunjibhoy's home is fitted with a marble wash basin, and every hydrant, bracket and hatrack is made of solid gold. In Sir Dhunjibhoy's own room the legs of the washstand are also of gold.

All the furniture is on a corresponding style of magnificence. The rooms are furnished according to various period, and the furniture consists entirely of rare antiques. Sir Dhunjibhoy's bedroom is finished in French style in the fashion of Louis XIV.

The house of the Indian millionaire is built in Tudor style. It is surrounded by beautiful gardens, dotted with marble statuary and fountains. One of the marble pieces, known as "Truth," attracts particular attention. It represents a nude woman holding aloft a mirror.

Sir Dhunjibhoy, in addition to being a connoisseur of solid gold and marble, is also a sportsman. He has a large stable of horses on his grounds, and to the rear of his gardens a miniature race track has been laid out.

With so magnificent a home, entertaining is second nature to the Bombay potentate and Lady Bomanji. Their guestrooms are almost always occupied, and Sir Dhunjibhoy has given several large functions which many British titled people attended.

Sir Dhunjibhoy Bomanji was knighted in 1922 for services rendered the British and Indian governments during the World war. He has now come to England to make his permanent residence here.

Doll Hospital Keeps Five of Family Busy

Louisville, Ky.—John Reccius' doll hospital here is a monument to the sympathy its founder has with the tragedies of childhood.

Skill and special "surgical" instruments bring life back into broken sawdust bodies at the Louisville Doll hospital, founded many years ago by Reccius and his brother, German toy dealers. From repairing the broken and imperfect dolls in the top shop the doll surgeons evolved their own technique and designed instruments without which many of their most critical operations would be impossible.

Three sons and a daughter-in-law are engaged with Reccius, the head surgeon, in treating the sawdust patients. Tiny teeth are replaced, broken ears and noses restored and new eyes exchanged for old in the doll sanitarium. Dolls come from as far away as California for treatment.

In spring and summer most of the cases are nursery casualties, but from October until Christmas old favorites are sent in to be rejuvenated for the holidays. Several extra hands are added to the hospital staff during the Christmas rush.

Installs Bathtub in Alaska Schoolhouse

Cordova, Alaska.—Chitina, a small town halfway up the "Iron Trail," claims the distinction of having the only schoolroom bathtub. It is a halfway point between savagery and civilization where the white man and the native Indian rub shoulders.

Miss Catherine Kirklin, teacher in the government school at Chitina, is responsible for the tub. She installed the bath in the classroom and she sees that it is used, although her ideas do not please the old Indian chiefs. Many a ring appears on the Chitina tub.

"I do not really believe that the Indians object to baths," Miss Kirklin said, "but conditions have been such for centuries that it was not practicable for them to wash and so they just forgot how."

Continues to Work With Artificial Skull

Toronto, Ont.—To be living and working without a skull after an electric current equivalent to 5,000 horse power passed through his body, is the experience of Norman Douglas Ellis, a young hydroelectric power employee of Toronto.

In May, 1926, while doing relief work at the Eugenia Falls power station, Ellis touched a live wire. He was suspended in mid-air and thought to be dead, but artificial respiration revived him. For six days he lay semiconscious and after eleven months necrosis forced surgeons to remove virtually his entire skull, which was replaced by skin grafts from the thigh. Mechanical ingenuity provided an artificial cap for Ellis' head, over which he wears a wig.

ENGLISH FIND WIFE STEALING EXPENSIVE

High Damages Awarded by Divorce Courts.

London.—The price of wives is advancing. Within the last few weeks London divorce courts have awarded damages to husbands against corespondents to the tune of $10,000 and $15,000, and lastly, a few days ago a husband was awarded $50,000.

The $50,000 went to George Edgar Ingman, an estate agent and surveyor of Worcester, who obtained a divorce from his wife, daughter of a wealthy man, on the ground of misconduct with Captain Neel Pearson, formerly of The Birches, Hagley, near Birmingham. Mr. Ingman announced in advance that he would not retain the award, but would use it as a fund for his daughter by the erring wife. A similar declaration was made by the husband who received the award of $10,000.

In 1905 Demetrius Sophocles Constantinidi received an award of $125,000 against a Doctor Lance in an English court. The $50,000 received by Mr. Ingman equaled any record made since then.

What Is a Wife Worth?

English judges have a wide latitude in addressing the jury in both civil and criminal cases. Suits for divorce are combined with suits against the corespondent for loss of the wife's services, under the English procedure. It is not unusual for a judge in summing up to remark, in effect, that after hearing the evidence the jury might conclude that the husband, instead of obtaining damages, should thank the corespondent for relieving him of a worthless wife, and the jury ordinarily reacts to the sentiments expressed by the judge because they heard the evidence when he did.

The general rule seems to be that the husband is entitled to damage, if the wife was a real helpmeet, but to refuse them if she was a nagger and a handicap instead of helpmeet. The corespondent is punished not for adultery but on the old theory that a wife is, or should be, useful around the house and in assisting her husband's work for their joint benefit. When the corespondent steals the wife he deprives the husband of her services, if any. Quite often the judge and jury cannot see that she was of any service, and then the jury awards very light damages, or none. In one case the jury awarded the husband a sixpence and in another he got a farthing. If those husbands felt spiteful toward their deserting wives they had the satisfaction of knowing that the jury had publicly branded the wives as worthless.

Extreme Feminists Object.

Extreme feminists are chafing over the awards against corespondents because they say that the award is based upon the fact that the wife is regarded by the law in such suits as a chattel, which is exactly true. If a man deprived another of a horse and the evidence showed that the horse was too vicious to be employed for any useful work and was an expense and a menace to the welfare of the rightful owner, the judge and jury would be inclined to disregard the real owner's valuation of the horse and award nominal damages for its loss. The comparison with a horse displeases the feminists, but only a very few of them have been heard complaining about the position in which women place themselves by breech of promise suits, and by suits on the part of childless women for alimony.

Lord Merrivale, in summing up in the Ingman case, said Mrs. Ingman daughter of wealth, had been a helpful wife, apparently, to her hard-working husband until the wealthy Captain Pearson came along and she went off with him. She had said that Captain Pearson could afford to spend $30,000 to $50,000 per year giving her a liberal allowance.

English judges and juries are equally vexed when the evidence makes clear that a rich man has lured away the wife of a poorer man by lavish offers of money. The juries are inclined to grant damages in such cases as punishment for the seducer, although the court solemnly warns the juries that they are to consider only the helpfulness, if any, of the wife to the husband.

Big Bald Knob Full of Caves Excites Texans

Fredericksburg, Texas.—A colossal bald knob, protruding above the surface of the earth, excites the awe and wonder of Texans and tourists from others states.

It is a single, dome-shaped piece of red granite, 400 feet high and covering a square mile near here. It is the result of some cataclysm in prehistoric times.

Although "Enchanted Rock," as it is known, has not been utilized commercially as have other near-by granite deposits, its environs intrigue adventurous explorers. Within it are deep caves, picturesque gateways, hanging gardens and jagged chasms.

Job for Pigeons

Ottawa, Ont.—The homing pigeon has been officially enrolled in Canada's peace-time air patrol. The department of national defense announces the establishment of a carrier-pigeon service as an auxiliary to the forest fire patrol and aerial photographic survey.

INDIANS USE SPEAR TO CATCH SALMON

Reap Food Supply During Fish Harvest Time.

Toppenish, Wash.—It is salmon time in the big rivers of the northwest states. Indians know it as the harvest time when they catch fat fish and preserve the fillets for winter.

Hour after hour Indian fishermen—from ten to twelve tribes—sit on the stone masonry of the Sunnyside irrigation dam, near here, spears poised, ready to lunge at large leaping chinook or cohoe salmon which are running up the Yakima river to spawn.

Tense, immovable as statues, they wait. Onlookers see the flashing back of the salmon leaping up the smooth waterfall. There is a lightning quick strike and the struggling silver beauty, safely speared, is drawn to land to be unjavelined and the spear is ready for another victim.

The best salmon spears are fitted with barbed hooks and the fish is gaffed, rather than speared. The hook comes off the end of the shaft and dangles on a cord tied to the pole. This, the Indians point out, prevents breakage of the shaft when a thirty or forty pound fish is taken.

Sometimes a dozen big salmon will be hooked by one Indian in a day. At other times days pass without a catch. But the redmen never complain about luck. They poise over the shimmering, tumbling water patiently waiting until fish do come within range.

This primitive life is re-enacted at a score of rapids and dams in other rivers of the Northwest.

On shore squaws and young folks from the tribes split the salmon, hanging the meat over lines or slender poles to sun dry. Before the fish season is passed northwest Indians will have filled many willow baskets with dried fish steaks, insuring them against hunger at winter's coming.

Only Indians from reservations may so fish in northwest streams, being permitted by treaty to do so.

7-Month-Old Alabama Baby Talks Fluently

Birmingham, Ala.—Birmingham is laying claim to possession of the prize infant prodigy—a seven-month-old baby who converses as fluently as a child of several years. When she was one week old she could pronounce words distinctly, and at three weeks she could pronounce a number of words, such as "daddy," "eat," "I want up," and "I want to get up."

The child is Yuvawn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Shotts. She was born November 23, 1927. One of the amazing things is that she has cried but twice since she was born—once immediately after her birth, and another time when she had an attack of colic.

Wylodin, her sister, now six years of age, is an accomplished musician. She has memorized pieces of music and can play more than 200 from sight reading at the piano.

Both children are normal and healthy. Both their parents are college graduates, readers and musicians.

U. S. Sets Standards for Wheat Middlings

Washington.—Official standards for purified middlings, semolina and farina have been promulgated by the Department of Agriculture.

The new definitions characterize purified middlings as the clean, sound, granular product obtained in the commercial process of milling wheat, and is that portion of the endosperm retained on 10 XX silk bolting cloth. It contains no more flour than is consistent with good commercial practice, nor more than 15 per cent of moisture.

Semolina is the purified middlings of durum wheat, and farina is the purified middlings of hard wheat other than durum.

Queen of Navy

Washington.—The queen of the navy is the battleship New Mexico. It has been awarded highest honors after competition in battleship efficiency, gunnery, engineering and communication. Now it may fly a pennant known as the "meat ball."

New York Grabs Lead

New York.—The Merchants' Association of New York notes that weather bureau records show that Chicago had an average wind velocity last year of 12 miles an hour while New York had 16.

Bears 200-Word Will Tattooed on His Back

London.—A 200-word will bequeathing large sums of money to several persons has been tattooed on the back of a man who walked into a tattooing establishment in Waterloo road.

He had the will written out on a piece of paper, and asked that it should be transferred to his back. He sat for five hours while the work was done and the will was duly witnessed.

"He was a Colonial, and about thirty years of age," George Burchett, the tattooist, said afterward.

"This is the first will I have ever tattooed during a long experience, and it was difficult, tricky work."

Kindness to a Dog Pays Old Prospector

Reno, Nev.—Kindness to a dog has apparently brought Jesse Swan, prospector, the gold for which he has long searched the sandy wastes and barren hills near Gerlack, in the extreme northwestern end of Nevada. Finding a half-starved and exhausted dog near his lonely cabin Swan nursed the animal back to health. A few days later the dog uncovered a rich gold float while digging in the sand. Swan traced the float to a ledge and has apparently made a rich strike. Scores of claims have been located in the vicinity and Swan has received several tempting offers for his holdings.

MAN KILLS SELF TO END HIS COWARDICE

Broods Over Fears and Commits Suicide.

New York.—Henry L. Druckliev was a lifelong coward. He brooded over his fears and came to the conclusion that the only brave thing to do was to kill himself. He did that with a pistol.

Druckliev was in the prime of life—forty-two, he carefully explained in a long note he left behind. He never was able to make himself a hero in his own eyes, he said.

"Although I have perhaps achieved more than the average person of my age," his farewell begins, "still what I have achieved is so very far from what I've wanted to achieve, that life is not worth living.

"This realization has come forcefully to me by several mistakes I have made in judgment in the last year or two, and at my age mistakes are very costly. When one is aware of the tendency toward certain mistakes, and makes them, then this shows his weakness is not being overcome.

"My great mistake and weakness was in trying to do too much at one time. I have been more or less a terrible coward. Hating cowardice, I have come to hate myself. I will do one brave act and that is to forever kill this cowardice."

Bandit Amuses Victim With Thrilling Yarns

Kansas City, Mo.—For an hour early one morning recently Paul F. Schwartz, manager of a Kansas City drug store, was the unwilling audience of a man who entertained him with tales of modern banditry while accomplices robbed the drug store safe of $370 in cash and three wrist watches.

Schwartz had closed the store and was on his way home when he was stopped by the bandit. Keys to the store were demanded, and when he produced them his captor placed them on the sidewalk and instructed him to keep walking. Schwartz said he saw another man pick up the keys and go in the direction of the drug store.

A block away his captor called a halt and suggested that they sit on the curbing for a while. To make conversation, the robber told Schwartz humorous and thrilling incidents of his career as a bandit.

After an hour a motor car passed and the driver called to the guard. After warning his victim to take things easy for a while, the guard joined the motorist and drove away.

Schwartz notified the police, and investigation at the store revealed that the combination of the safe had been worked.

The keys were left hanging in the locked door.

Hid in Ship Rigging to Capture Smugglers

New York.—By hiding at night in the rigging of his ship, the better to play detective, Capt. G. Y. Hudgins of the American Export line freighter Blue Triangle was responsible for the arrest of five members of his crew for robbery and smuggling when his ship docked here recently.

Two of the prisoners, Theodore Brewer, ship's carpenter, and Boatswain Babis Carlos, spent 15 days of the voyage in irons and face prosecution for the theft of bolts of silk from the cargo. Three Greek sailors are being held by the customs authorities on suspicion that they have been engaged in opium smuggling. A search of the vessel disclosed an undetermined quantity of opium, liquor and obscene pictures.

During the last few months thousands of dollars' worth of silk has been stolen from the ship's hold, according to Captain Hudgins, and hidden by members of the crew.

Horseshoe Brings No Luck to Holdup Man

New York.—The need of money to buy burglar tools with which to blow a safe was the reason given by Joseph Boru, forty years old, for his bold attempt to hold up Nellie Negri, cashier of the Automat restaurant recently.

Walking up to the cashier, Boru took the horseshoe from a newspaper and said: "I'll bust you over the head and kill you if you make an outcry." He reached across the counter and seized a package containing $120. Then he ran, followed by Miss Negri several bus girls, and 100 diners whose shouts attracted Patrolman Joseph O'Rourke, who captured him.

British Collectors Use Queer Methods

Collection agencies in London are even more "hard-boiled" than those in American cities. Not only do redheaded letters come through the mail to debtors, says "The Pathfinder," but when a man has been notified three times that his bill is due a collector in a red uniform calls on him. The bright clothes are to attract attention and embarrass the debtor.

A popular story has it that our word "dun" owes its origin to Joe Dun, famous bailiff in the reign of Henry VII. Dun was a proficient collector of rents, duties and general debts. He resorted to many ruses. He seems to have originated the idea of calling at debtors' houses in odd and colorful costumes to attract attention. Sometimes he would walk up and down in front of the poor wretch's house and broadcast the nature of the debt to the neighborhood. It is against the law in the United States to dun a person by postcard.

"Flying Scotsman" Train Has Nonstop Record

England's "Twentieth Century Limited," the "Flying Scotsman," has just begun making the longest nonstop run in the world—the 392 miles between London and Edinburgh.

Comfort, not speed, is the object, for the time remains at eight and a quarter hours. Heretofore there has been no way of changing engine crews without stopping the train, since it was held dangerous for two crews to occupy the cab at the same time.

Special locomotive tenders solve that problem. At the end of 200 miles a fresh driver and fireman emerge from the first coach, go through a covered corridor or gangway along the right side of the tender, and take over the engine. The men relieved go back the same way and finish the trip as passengers.

Getting Longer

E. T. Stotesbury, the Philadelphia financier, said in a discussion of modern fashions at a dinner at El Mirasol, his beautiful winter residence in Palm Beach:

"I heard a story the other day about a man who happened into the drawing-room as his daughter and some of her girl friends were talking fashions.

"'What's this? What's this?' the man said with a laugh. 'Surely I just overheard the remark that something's getting longer? Tell me—oh, tell me what is getting longer in the dresses of today?'

"'Shoulder straps, dad,' said his daughter."

The Easiest Way

President Lawrence Lowell of Harvard was condemning, at a dinner in New York, a novelist who by means of blatant press agent stunts had won popularity and wealth.

"The easiest way," said Doctor Lowell, "isn't always the noblest way. A preacher gazed at a young millionaire manufacturer and said:

"'He began as a bobbin boy, I suppose, and worked his way up step by step.'

"'Not at all,' another preacher answered. 'He began as a football star and married his boss' daughter.'"

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Ole C. Stenmo and Randi Stenmo, his wife, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of February, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota on the 23rd day of February, 1926, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 187 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of Forty-six Dollars and eighty-two cents ($46.82), being the balance due and unpaid of the semi-annual installment of amortized principal and interest which became due and payable on the 9th day of February, 1927, and to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($62.50), which became due and payable on the 9th day of August, 1927, and the 9th day of February, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of One Thousand Nine Hundred Fifty-eight Dollars and forty cents ($1,958.40), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 9th day of February, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and One Hundred Seventy-one Dollars and eighty-two cents ($171.82) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $46.82 thereof from December 31st, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $62.50 thereof from August 9th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $62.50 thereof from February 9th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred Ninety-three Dollars and ninety-five cents ($2,193.95), including insurance premium of Five Dollars and forty cents ($5.40), which said mortgagee has been required to pay;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The Southwest Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼ of SW¼) of Section Fourteen (14); the South Half of the Southeast Quarter (S½ of SE¼) and the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼ of SW¼) of Section Fifteen (15), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West, containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the Government Survey thereof,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 15th day of September, 1928, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, including said insurance paid, as aforesaid, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Dated August 2nd, 1928.

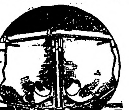
The Sediment Trap of the



MAYTAG Cast Aluminum Tub
Keeps the water clean

THE Maytag tub has a sediment trap which collects the loose dirt that is flushed from the clothes. It keeps the water clean, and also permits the tub to drain itself thoroughly without tipping the washer.

The effective shape of the Maytag tub promotes vigorous water action in every inch of the tub all the time, so that the washing is done by water action alone—an action that keeps the soap thoroughly mixed with the water and removes even stubborn edge dirt without hand-rubbing.

Wringing the clothes is easy and effective with the Maytag. The large, soft rolls of the new Roller Water Remover hug every fold, lump and seam, removing both soap and water evenly from all parts of a bulky garment or a thin handkerchief.

Phone for a Maytag. Do your next washing with it. Experience the thrill of a washing done in an hour or so, done with so little work that it is really fun, and sweetened by the sunlight of your own back yard. If it doesn't sell itself, don't keep it.

Campaign Started

Senator Schall speaking at the picnic of the postal workers at Red Lake Falls, Sunday, threw down the challenge of battle to Governor Christianson in their prospective fight for the senatorship two years from now.

The senator not only threw out a challenge, but threw off his coat and vest and snapped his suspenders and shed considerable perspiration.

He says the governor is backed by Backus, that the newspapers are controlled by Backus and that even the county fair boards are under the Backus influence, because they have not invited the senator to speak at the fairs.

The Big Three are no good and the state senate tried to hang the senion senator on a cottenwood tree, he said.

Magnus Johnson is on the Backus pay roll at $250 a month, the senator said, and his chief occupation is to make trouble for poor, ragged and blind Thomas Schall, he said.

It is rather unusual to have the campaign ef 1930 open up during the campaign of 1928, but Minnesota's blind senator is no stickler for precedents.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

On When Women Come Into Money.

As Aunt Emmy sipped her tea she heard the conversation drift to the Slade sisters. The fact that they had inherited a large fortune and would have to administer it themselves created considerable comment.

"My husband says old man Slade made a big mistake not putting it in trust for them," said Mrs. Burt. "He says women never should handle large sums of money because they are 'financially uneducated'—he really means 'dumb.'"

"All women aren't dumb about money matters, are they, Aunt Emmy?" exclaimed Miss Pringle.

"Of course not," Aunt Emmy agreed. "There are all sorts and kinds of women all the way from very prudent to very foolish."

"Well, anyway, an awful lot of women have been victimized in financial things—just look at all the widows that have been robbed," insisted Mrs. Burt.

"There won't be so much of that in the future as in the past," Aunt Emmy said. "Women have been easy to victimize because they knew so little about money affairs, but now they are realizing this danger more and more and are taking advantage of the financial advice departments their bankers have set up for them. One thing that has led to women's financial undoing is their natural love of pretty things. This trait often leads them into foolish investments and speculations to get money quickly. Once a woman sets her heart on a thing she can't wait until it is hers."

"But if women didn't buy things, there wouldn't be any business," spoke up Molly. "Women are the natural spenders of the family, Dad says."

"Yes, but they would have more to spend if they'd go a little slower," replied Aunt Emmy. "Every time I see a woman falling for some silly get-rich-quick scheme I think of the nice things she could buy with the money she is going to lose. If they'd go slower—they'd get farther."

"From what I know of the Slade girls," Molly began—but just then the Slade girls themselves came in.

"We're so sorry to be late," they apologized, "but we have been having our first lesson in finance down at the Trust Company. They are going to give us quite a lot of time and explain all the things we ought to know about money to keep us out of financial trouble."

"Well, my dears, you are going to the right school," said Aunt Emmy. "If every woman would do that there'd be less trouble and more pretty things for all of them."

WONDERS OF AIR AT STATE FAIR

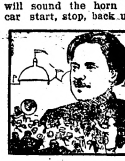
Observation Balloon, Auto Driven by Radio from Airplane, New Thrillers.

THE latest air thrillers will be headline attractions on the gigantic $150,000.00 entertainment program to be presented at the coming Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, Twin Cities, September 1 to 8.

It will be an amusement program replete with action, and will feature aviation, automobile racing, horse racing, band music, vaudeville, fireworks, and will be varied enough to please the most exacting fan.

"Air-minded" since 1910, the Minnesota State Fair has recruited its attractions from the four corners of the earth. Its program will provide thrills, chills, and maybe spills.

Foremost on the bill will be the first public demonstration in the country of an automobile driven by radio control from an airplane flying 1,500 feet overhead. Directing the driverless automobile around the track will be Miss Muriel Rudell, of Los Angeles, who will be in charge of the radio controls from her Ryan monoplane, a sister ship of the Spirit of St. Louis. By merely touching buttons on the radio cabinet which she carries in the airplane, Miss Rudell will sound the horn and make the car start, stop, back up, or make left or right turns, as she chooses. Though she is 1,500 feet up in the clouds, she will be in perfect command of the automobile at all times.



A captive observation balloon is another new and interesting attraction. This mammoth balloon, resembling a big sausage in appearance, is of the type used by the U. S. Government during the World War. It is 94 feet long and 28 feet in diameter, and has a basket suspended underneath that carries five passengers and a pilot.

Giuseppe Creatore and his world-famous band of 44 pieces will furnish the musical treat on the week's program. Creatore, who ranks with Sousa as one of the world's leading bandmaster's, will bring his internationally-known band to the State Fair for a seven-day engagement. In addition, twelve other bands and orchestras have been engaged.

"Poodles" Hanneford, world's greatest clown rider, and his daring horse-back troupe, will headline the stellar circus program of 15 wonderful acts to be presented in front of the grandstand. Other high spots will include Dr. Carver's diving horse; Graham in his death dive; Ies Ghezzis, direct from London; the nine Allisons; and Evans and Perez.

More than 250 horses have been entered in the twelve harness and nine running horse events on the four-day racing card.

Kings of the dirt track auto racing world will vie with each other for fame and fortune on three days of the Fair, the opening and closing Saturdays, and Wednesday. Two dozen daredevils, headed by the one and only Sig Haugdahl, dirt track champion of the world, will be seen in action.

"A Night in Bagdad" is the fireworks spectacle, featured in front of the grandstand each evening.

Hunting Season Soon

Sportsmen throughout the state are looking forward with a great deal of anticipation to the opening of the small game season in Minnesota on Sunday, September 16, when undoubtedly thousands of hunters will seek the haunts of the duck.

The law provides for an open season on ring necked pheasants this fall. The season for hunting partride or ruffed grouse will remain definitely closed this year under a proclamation of May 10 1927, issued by Governor Christianson, it has been pointed out by the state game and fish department.

Many inquiries have been addressed to the department on the subject and many are under the impression that the will be open. Mhe governor's order, however, which also prohiqits the taking of upland plover and woodcock, is effective until the close of the 1929 legislature.

Go Ahead glanced at the angry youngster and laughed delightedly. "I beg your and her pardons, Bob," he said. "I hadn't the least intention of offending you or her. I was only thinking how much she'd lost."

"Humph. Ever think how much she's had?" Stella's anger was fading but it was not yet gone.

"Eh? . . . By George, that's an idea. No, I hadn't thought of that. Now that you suggest it, I guess she's had a lot of things that a lot of girls would give a lot to have had. I don't doubt that she's enjoyed her life. She must have enjoyed it if she didn't hate it."

"What do you mean?"

"Well, she's led a boy's life, as you said. Some girls like that just as most boys do. But those that don't like it usually hate it, especially when they begin to be grown up. Stella's eighteen, isn't she?"

"Maybe."

"Well, we're all Father Adam's children when we're young, boys and girls alike. We all like to run and shout and kick our legs. But after a while we begin to change, and part of us discover that they're Eve's daughters. Then they want another life, unless, as I say, they're really boys at heart. Then they love it. If Stella does—"

"She does."

"That's what I understood. That's why I said 'poor child.' You see, Bob, we can't stay eighteen or twenty-one forever. We grow up, and these man-girls have a dreadful time when they have to shift their views. I guess Adam was a hunter and a farmer all his life, and his sons take after him. But I'll bet that Eve got mighty tired of the hunting game sooner or later and longed for a home where she could bring up little Cain and Abel; and her daughters sooner or later take after her—thank God."

"I don't know what your driving at." Stella's tones were cold.

"No? I thought you would. Stella will get tired of the life she's leading. Probably she'll realize all in a minute that she's sick to death of it and that she wants to lead a real girl's life. And then, when she tries to lead it, she's very likely to discover that she isn't fitted for it. She won't want to go back to the old life and she won't be satisfied with the new one. Of course, it might be different if she met some one whom she loved and who really loved her—like you—"

"Like me!" An emotion that might have been rage shook Stella from head to foot. "Me love Stella Fair? Me! You—you—you— Oh!—" But she choked and became inarticulate.

"Good Heavens!" Go Ahead stared in utter astonishment. "What the devil! Look here, old man, you must have misunderstood me. Forget it; I'm liable to shoot off my mouth too much when I get somebody at my mercy." Go Ahead reached out his arm, as a touch of his bridle sent his horse crushing against Stella's and passed it over her shoulders. "There, there, there, boy. Don't hold it against me, whatever it was. I like you. I never met a boy I liked so much at such short acquaintance." With a final pat he started to withdraw his arm.

But Stella went with it. Instinctively she swayed toward him, turning in her saddle as she did so, buried her hot face on his shoulder, and burst into a storm of sobs.

Luckily the horses moved together for a few strides, then drew apart very slowly, giving Stella time to regain her seat. Go Ahead let her go smilingly.

"You poor kid," he said. "You've had a dreadful day, haven't you?"

Stella straightened up like a steel spring that had been bent.

"Dreadful?" she cried. "Wh-what do you mean? This has been the most wonderful day in all my life." Unmistakably she meant it.

Go Ahead gasped. He did not understand. Even if he had had the key he might not have understood. But he did understand that the boy was hysterical and needed to be quieted down.

So he shifted his ground. "Well," he asked, "aren't you going to tell me any more about Stella?"

Stella told. But what she told was not what she would have told ten minutes before. Her mood had shifted utterly. No longer did she try to shock Go Ahead by tales of Stella's toughness, nor to astonish him by magnifying her courage and skill. Instead she racked her brain to recall things that brought out the feminine side of her character.

And Go Ahead ate up all she said. "She's got a mighty loyal friend in you, Bob," he said, at last. "I like what you've told me, and I like the way you've told it. Now tell me something about yourself. You've left the band for good and all, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, what are you going to do?"

Stella had been wondering at the back of her head about that very thing. Already she had made up her mind that Go Ahead was altogether different from any other man she had ever known and that she would go East with him. Sooner or later, too, she would of course confess her identity. But she was not quite ready to do this yet; for a time at least she wanted to keep her secret—her vivid imagination conjuring up many possibilities that would be exciting and would open the way to no end of fun. So she countered.

"Humph!" she answered. "I haven't made up my mind, quite. Where're you heading for now? This is the way to Loboville."

"That's what I figured it out to be. I'm going to take my prisoners in and turn them over to the sheriff."

"What! Why! Good gracious!" Stella swore her big oath. "Don't you know that Barker's the sheriff and that he's the man you—"

With a Final Pat He Started to Withdraw His Arm.

Go Ahead's eyes twinkled. "Sure I know it," he answered. "And I'm having a lot of fun trying to imagine what he'll look like when I turn his own men over to him."

Stella nearly shouted with glee. "Ohhhh!" she cried. "Won't it be great to see his face?"

Go Ahead turned in his saddle and regarded the girl gravely. "I hadn't exactly calculated on taking you with me," he said. "I'm told that there's a good place called Bridget's in Loboville where you might wait for me—"

Instantly Stella exploded in the language that she had heard about her all her life, and demanded furiously, "I want to know what you've seen me do today to make you think that I'm that sort of a four-flusher?"

"I don't—"

"Yes, you do! And I want to know why. I want to know quick, too."

Go Ahead threw up his hands. "I apologize," he said humbly. "You're true blue and all right, Bob. I never doubted it for a minute. I just felt somehow that I oughtn't to let a kid like you risk himself, especially when the cards were stacked against him. Forgive me." He held out his hand.

Willingly Stella grasped it. Tears, theretofore practically unknown to her, welled to her eyes, and she strove desperately to wink them back. "I couldn't stand having you think I was a da-da-d—n coward," she gulped.

Go Ahead's own eyes were a little misty. "You needn't ever worry about that, Bob," he said. "Coward would be the very last thing I'd ever think of calling you. Here,"—impulsively he burst out with what he had intended especially to keep secret—"I'll tell you something. I'm a cousin of Stella Fair's, and I'm out here to take her East with me. But I've got to get her away from Robbers' Roost—or wait till Fair sends her to me at Bridget's—"

"Bridget's!" This was Green's plan; Stella knew nothing of it.

"Yes, I don't know how long it'll all take—not long, I guess. And I'd be mighty glad if you could stick around till I get her and then go East with me and her. You—you'll be a big man some day if you'll come."

Stella bowed her head over her horse's neck. "No," she murmured, "I'll never be a big man. But I'll stick around till you're ready, all the same."

SHARES GOLD HILL WTH HONEST MAN

Prospector Kept Find Secret for 24 Years.

Summitville, Colo.—For 24 years Jack Pickens kept secret the location of a "peak of gold" in the San Juan mountains until he could find a financial backer whom he would trust to help him open the treasure vault locked by nature.

Today Pickens and Judge Jesse C. Wiley, the honest man whom the prospector found after a search of a quarter of a century, are sharing equally the fortune Pickens discovered.

While prospecting over the hills about the Little Annie mine in 1904 Pickens stumbled on a protruding bowlder. He tapped the rock with his hammer. A piece broke off, revealing a layer of almost solid gold. Another blow dislodged more gold-lined slabs.

Beneath the surface of that bowlder, the prospector concluded, lay a peak of gold. Determining to keep the discovery a secret, Pickens also resolved to stay near his potential fortune. He obtained a job with a small force of miners at the Little Annie and then began his quiet hunt for an honest man with enough money to exploit the "strike."

Several times the owners of the Little Annie mine started tunnels toward the golden peak, and Pickens held his breath. He was greatly relieved as each of these projects was abandoned, one within eighty feet of his hidden treasure.

Finally the prospector met the man whom he could trust. He and Judge Wiley formed a partnership, obtained long-time leases on 40 mining claims, including the golden peak, and within six weeks realized $114,000 from the ore taken off only that part of the bowlder showing above the grass.

Since then half a million dollars has been hauled away and yellow metal worth many times that amount still is in sight.

Pickens has a wife and thirteen children with whom to share the fortune.

Borax Found Deadly to Mosquito Larvae

Ithaca, N. Y.—Borax has had another use added to the long list of things it is good for by Prof. Robert Matheson and E. H. Hinman of Cornell university. They have discovered that a concentration of one and one-half parts in a thousand of water is very quickly fatal to the larvae, or "wigglers," of mosquitoes that breed in rainwater barrels, cisterns and other exposed reservoirs. The borax seems to hold its larva-killing properties for a long time; one experiment ran from July 25 to September 7 of last year without any signs of weakening at the end.

The two entomologists add, however, that borax should be used only where its possible effects on other animals and on plant life will be of no consequence. They are of the opinion that a cheap form of the chemical can be successfully marketed for mosquito-fighting purposes.

In the course of their experiments they raised large numbers of mosquito larvae, which had to be fed artificially. They state that they found common compressed yeast, such as goes into the collegiate "double malted," very good wiggler food.

Sore-Throat Epidemic Teaches Pasteurization

Washington.—The epidemic of septic sore throat which raged in a small Massachusetts town, where over an eighth of the entire population suffered from the disease, is one more good argument in favor of pasteurization, according to the United States public health service. The infection has been traced to a single cow that had mastitis, a disease of the udders. As soon as the milk was pasteurized, no more cases were reported. Pasteurization would have prevented the entire outbreak.

Nearly every community, large or small, that has provided for pasteurization of its milk supply has been driven to this measure by just such epidemics of milk-borne diseases. Apparently communities, like human beings, refuse to profit by each other's experiences.

Dies in Coffin

Budapest.—For years Victor Kassau, actor, slept in a coffin, fearing death was approaching. He has just been found dead in it.

Ex-Kaiser Nears End of Wood-Chopping Job

Doorn, Holland.—Former Emperor William II of Germany has practically completed his woodman's task on his own estate. The imperial wood chopper must go elsewhere if he wants to take his favorite exercise of felling, sawing or chopping wood.

In his labors on the Hohenzollern estate, now covering a period of about eight years, the ex-kaiser was careful to remove only dead trees or such as hampered others in their growth or destroyed the symmetry of his park. It takes half an hour at a brisk pace to walk around the whole estate, which is inclosed by a high wire fence surmounted by barbed wire.

ALASKA FARM LIFE BEGINS NEW PHASE

Bachelor Owner and One-Crop System Passing.

Seattle, Wash.—Touring southeastern Alaska for an inspection of natural resources, Secretary of Agriculture Jardine will find farm life of the Far North in the midst of a colorful transition.

The "bachelor farmer," whose pioneer struggles are written into the agricultural history of every frontier, is slowly passing from the land he cleared of timber and is being replaced by men with families. Where his shack stood the new farmer is building houses and barns and his one-crop system of farming, is giving way to diversified activities, including the production of live stock.

Needing little and obtaining that principally from the forests, the early settler lived under conditions impossible for a man with a family. He planted his wheat or potatoes in the spring, left during the summer months to earn a "grubstake" and returned in the fall to harvest a crop that had received no attention.

More Dairy Farms.

Long-required diversified farming is coming in with the families. The small dairy farm grows more common and many vegetables are grown. In the region near Fairbanks the bachelor still predominates, and since the area is adapted to wheat and potatoes, it may take longer to introduce diversified systems.

Southeastern Alaska is rough, rugged and covered with timber. Comparatively little land in this region is available for cultivation. The rich farms are in the great Tanana valley, which, with the Yukon and Susitna valleys, has the essentials to make it eventually the granary of Alaska, in the fertile Matanuska valley and contiguous territory.

The secretary's plan to visit the southeastern section was motivated by his desire to see at close range the infant forest industry, other natural resources and the possibilities for preservation of wild life.

This newest Alaskan industry has none of the stampede characteristics of earlier enterprises. The gold rush brought rapid but short-lived growth in many places, but the paper-making industry is expected to be permanent. Scientifically developed, costly newsprint plants, with strict government supervision of natural resources, have been planned with a view to encouraging prosperous cities and towns.

Will Build Mills.

Water-power rights for construction of mills at Ketchikan, the secretary's first stop in Alaska, and at Juneau have been granted by the government, and two companies are making preliminary investigation for actual construction work.

The United States will be paid for the timber as it is cut, and cutting will be done in accordance with forestry principles. The southern coast is covered with thick forests, and 95 per cent of the timber is understood to be excellent for the manufacture of paper.

Church Leases Farm to Pay Off Its Debt

Rapid City, S. D.—A four-hundred-acre farm on the old Sioux reservation is expected to pay the debt of the Rapid City Episcopal church in four years. The Men's club of the church, which has 80 members, has advanced $800, rented a farm near Waste, a little town 40 miles east of Rapid City, bought the necessary farm equipment and planted 100 acres in flax and 100 acres in wheat. Next year the whole 400 acres will be farmed.

The farm is seven miles from Waste, pronounced "Washti" and meaning in the Sioux language "good," and is the center of a farming country that never has known a crop failure in the 20 years of its cultivation. After the opening of the Indian reservation, the country between the Missouri river and the Black hills was a free cattle range until the building of the Chicago & North Western railway from Pierre to Rapid City in 1907 made it available to settlers.

High Price of Brides Worries Syrian Youth

Damascus, Syria.—The high price of brides is beginning to worry young and marriageable men in the East.

A mass meeting held here recently elected a committee to seek a modification of the custom requiring the man who would marry to pay over a handsome sum of money to the father of the girl of his choice. The western custom is more to the liking of the eastern swain.

The men working for the reform say that they are not impelled by selfish motives, but are interested in the welfare of the state; marriages, they say, are on the decrease owing to the greed of parents who have been raising prices in the marriage markets.

Golf by Wireless

New York.—Teams of the Honolulu and New York Rotary clubs are to play golf by wireless. The winner will be the team which gives par the worst walloping on a home course.

Times Change

New York.—Pawnee Bill is in town with a grievance. Cowboys are now tea-tipplers and wear wrist watches instead of six-shooters.

STUDY OLD BONES AS CLEW TO MAN

Scientists Examine Relics of Old Bison Hunt.

Washington.—Relics of a buffalo hunt held by primitive men near Folsom, N. M., thousands of years before white men came to America continue to puzzle and attract scientists. In response to a telegram from Folsom received by the Smithsonian institution, reporting new discoveries of stone arrows points and fossil bison bones, Neil Judd, a Smithsonian anthropologist, with other scientists, has set out for the scene of the excavations to examine the remarkable evidence.

The excavations are being conducted by the Colorado Museum of Natural History and the American Museum of Natural History.

The stone arrow-heads used in the hunt have been found close to bones of bison supposed to have become extinct in America long before men appeared on this continent. If the stone weapons were shot at this living game, as the evidence indicates, the conclusion of some scientists is that men must have inhabited America at least 25,000 years, possibly even several hundred thousand years. No evidence has ever been discovered in this country to show that the types of bison found with the arrow points have lived in America in recent times.

Expedition Seeks Pygmy Bears in Eastern Oregon

Walla Walla, Wash.—To obtain living specimens of a 40-pound lava bear, known here as the sand lapper, and which lives in the ancient lava flows of eastern Oregon, a scientific expedition headed by University of Washington professors has left here for that region.

The diminutive bear is a species of grizzly ten times dwarfed and believed to be the remnant of the sun bear, thought to be extinct. At least three specimens have been killed during the last ten years. These were about 30 inches long and 18 inches high. Seven Devils country, where the bears have been seen, is a wild, barren and forbidding region, where lava and eruptions left grotesque formations. It is a safe refuge for the pygmy bears. Several thousand dollars is the price set for a pair brought out alive.

Inland Seas in Sahara Considered by France

Paris.—France is seriously considering the creation of inland seas in the Sahara desert in an effort to change the climate of northern Africa. The cabinet is expected to decide in September upon a project to do this which was submitted by Dwight Braman, a New York engineer.

The plan calls for the cutting of three ship canals 40 feet deep and 200 feet wide from the Mediterranean sea at Gabes to three dry saline lake beds called shotts. It was estimated that the waters of the sea by this means would flood some 10,000 square miles, reaching from Gabes westward. The effect would be to alter climatic conditions by increasing rainfall.

The canals would also afford a water route of about 250 miles for seagoing ships through a part of Tunis and deep into Algeria.

Old Ideas Must Go

Neosho, Mo.—Old-fashioned ideas in Neosho have got to go, if they have to be pulled out by the roots. At least that seems to be the decree of a group of the town's citizens, who, wearing masks, uprooted several concrete posts and severed the iron chains that composed the "hitching rack" on the courthouse square.

Time to Quit

Kansas City.—Harried police gave up pursuit of seven steers when a bovine planted its feet on the running board of a patrol car and mooed loudly into the officers' faces.

New Bootlegging

New York.—There's bootlegging in polygamy in Turkey. So says Halide Edibe Hanum, feminist exiled from home, who is now visiting us.

Venice Opens Museum to Honor Marco Polo

Venice, Italy.—The memory of Marco Polo, Venetian explorer, is honored by the city of Venice with a remarkable oriental museum named after him and recently opened. A valuable collection of oriental suits of armor, swords, knives, porcelain, kimonos, screens, paintings, tapestries and other works draws students from all parts of the world.

The collection, representing the life work of the late Conte di Barda, son of the duke of Parma and member of the Austrian branch of the Bourbon family, was seized during the World war as part of the Austrian reparations payment.

NURSES know, and doctors have declared there's nothing quite like Bayer Aspirin for all sorts of aches and pains, but be sure it is genuine Bayer; that name must be on the package, and on every tablet. Bayer is genuine, and the word genuine—in red—is on every box. You can't go wrong if you will just look at the box:

Very Awkward

The well-known actress rushed into her press agent's office, holding the evening paper in her outstretched arms.

"I am ruined!" she cried. "Ruined! Look at this!"

"What is it? Another scandalous story about you?" asked the press agent.

"Worse than that," was the reply. "I signed a testimonial stating that I always smoked Mildwhiff cigarettes because they never bothered my throat; and I signed another testimonial that I always use Lymphatic lozengers to protect my throat after smoking; and here they are both on the same page!"

Suspension Bridge Action

The action of the suspension bridge is that of a rope spanning between supports; for any load it finds the appropriate curve of equilibrium and is stable in that position. But as the adjustment to varying position of load results from change of curve, the roadway hung from the cable distorts—that is, the bridge is very flexible. It therefore may swing.

Man-Made Seas

If the Boulder dam of the Colorado river is ever completed as designed it will have a capacity of 26,000,000 acre feet of water. Some of the other great constructions of this character created storage as follows: Gatun dam, 4,410,000; Assouan dam, 1,865,000; Elephant Butte dam, 2,368,000, and Almanor dam, 1,318,000.

For Business Purpose

Commerical paper is a general name for checks, drafts, notes, bills of lading, bills of exchange, warehouse receipts, treasury warrants, orders for delivery of goods, certificates of stocks and bonds, etc., and is sometimes applied to contracts and agreements.

Good Use

Editor—I can't understand where you get all the paper to write your poetry on when there is such a scarcity of the material.

Poet—Oh, I use the backs of all the bills I receive.

In Luck

"Many young men are going around without hats."

"I've noticed that. I won't be conspicuous when I leave mine at the cleaner's."

His Interpretation

"For two cents I'd tell you what I thought of you!"

"Well, at that, you expect a rather large price for your information, do you not?"

To have lived is to have suffered.

"WORTH WEIGHT IN GOLD"

Verdict of Woman Who Tried Pinkham's Compound

Tully, N. Y.—"It hurt me to walk or sit down without help and I felt sick and weak. My mother-in-law took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she induced me to take it. I am now on the fourth bottle and have also used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. The medicines that will do for me what the Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash have done are certainly worth their weight in gold. I think I have given them a fair trial and I expect to take two more bottles of the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Charles Morgan, R. F. D. 1, Tully, N. Y.

Seven "Affairs" for Each Mate

Survey Shows That Males Are Less Fickle Than Other Sex.

New York.—The average married person, whether or not happily mated, has seven love affairs, according to returns gathered from 200 men and women.

Other conclusions from the survey follow:

Women are slightly more fickle than men.

Most of the attachments precede that which finally leads them to the altar, although being wed does not deter a large minority from romancing outside the home.

These facts are presented in a report of an investigation into human relationship by the bureau of social hygiene of New York City. The research work, pursued in a scientific spirit, covered four years. The report of the findings has been revealed for the first time.

Wives Seek Solace.

One hundred men accounted for 681 love affairs and 100 women for 677, but three of the latter said they had never loved any man. Twenty-nine of the 100 husbands let their affections stray from the family circle and 41 of the wives found solace in the arms of other men.

"Two hundred men and women chosen for the research were almost all college bred or of college grade," the report says. "They came from New York city and its environs. A third of the men were in professional life, a tenth were engineers, a little more than a quarter were in business. Half of the men had incomes under $5,000 a year."

Their ages ranged from twenty-three to fifty-nine. The majority were between thirty and forty and had been married from five to fifteen years. The subjects were considered representative of their class in any large city. "They are a widow's mite of facts got under carefully arranged scientific conditions, but a mite is worth dropping in an empty box," the authors explain.

Each of the 200 men and women received cards on which were typewritten questions. There were more than forty cards with nearly 400 questions. The examiners asked that the questions be talked out in a very free, informal manner. One of the cards invariably wore out sooner than the others. It was known as the "Love Affairs Card." The one for the women asked them to give a list of all the boys with whom they had been in love, either before or after their own marriage, and to give information about their own age, at the time of the love affair; whether the boy was older or younger; the color of his eyes and hair; whether he was short or tall, thin, plump or fat; if he resembled the girl's father or brother in disposition and appearance, and the extent of their "spooning."

Gives Fair Index.

"The 200 men and women provide us with a pretty good index of the ages at which human beings are most likely to fall in love," says the article. "The men began to show amatory enthusiasm sooner than the women. Up to fifteen their average was somewhat ahead. The women reach the peak of their love affairs earlier than the men. The field of greatest activity runs from sixteen to twenty. The men reach the peak between twenty-one and twenty-two. After the peak the men go down more slowly than the women. There is a slight rebirth of love making at about thirty, then another sag.

"With the forties comes another peak in the love affairs of the women. Through the thirties the women show a little more activity than the men, and in the next decade they definitely outdistance them. The women show no interest in younger men until the thirties. One man ran up a total of 27 love affairs, against one unhappy marriage.

"The women had more affairs that ended because they fell in love with somebody else, because of family interference, because of the death of the loved one, or because one or both of the lovers were already married. The love affairs of the men terminated because of separation, dissatisfaction with the women, and a feeling of inferiority."

The directors of the bureau of social hygiene include John D. Rockefeller, Jr., chairman; Charles O. Heydt, secretary and treasurer; Dr. Katherine B. Davis and Raymond B. Fosdick with Dr. Abraham Flexner as associate.

French Students Drop German for English

Paris.—German is steadily losing its place in the schools of France.

More than half the pupils in the lycees, or high schools, took German before the war. Now only three in ten choose it as the one modern language that is obligatory in the lycees and colleges.

English has grown in favor because it is reputed to be easier than German and because it has acquired greater prestige. Nearly four in ten choose it.

The diminishing interest in German is regretted by leaders of many sorts. Military men strongly favor German because it is the language of France's formidable neighbor.

All Melons in Hawaii Wear Fancy Nightcaps

Honolulu.—Even Huckleberry Finn wouldn't have recognized a watermelon patch in Hawaii.

The melons, enjoyed nearly the year around here, are raised chiefly by Japanese. To protect them from the Mediterranean fruit fly, which, having laid its eggs, becomes a grandmother many times over in almost a single night, the farmers keep the melons tied in paper sacks.

Marked with the fantastic characters that give the date and directions for picking, the melons resemble a field of Japanese lanterns.

Camp Life Too Tame for N. Y. Parson's Son

New York.—Richard Milton Potter, son of the Universalist pastor, Charles Francis Potter, returned of his own accord to the Potter home, after an absence of four days. Young Potter seemed quite surprised that his father should have been so alarmed over his absence.

The young man related a series of adventures of hitch hiking and working his way home from the Adirondack camp of his family to the winter residence. He said he worked on farms and had outlasted two men pitching hay. With pride he told of leaving the camp with only a small amount of change and had arrived home with over $10 and his board and lodging.

Richard explained that the effeminacy of camp life was too much for him, besides "the women would talk their heads off."

Dedicate Home in Sea to Fishermen's Pastor

Star Island, Maine.—Ten miles out to sea there was an impressive scene when the Tuck parsonage was formally dedicated. Prominent Unitarian clergymen were among those in attendance.

The Tuck house is constructed of island stone in style harmonious with the old stone meeting house of Gosport, which is 128 years old. The building is in memory of John Tuck, who years ago ministered to the fisher folk. He dwelt in one of the former buildings on the site, and his remains rest only a few feet away, surrounded by an impressive granite obelisk.

Curiously enough, in this spot fine sand is washed up by the tides from no one knows where, for the Isles of Shoals belie their name and are a mass of rocks pushed up out of the sea. When the sand supply is cleaned out of this pocket, the tide in a few days renews it again.

Sparrows, Songbirds, Increase in Midwest

Washington.—The feeling that English sparrows are disappearing in this country is without justification, according to the United States bureau of biological survey. While there has been a decrease of these birds in the last few years, so that they are no longer the pest they were forty or fifty years after their first importation, nature seems to be setting a balance in regard to them. In the West and Middle West they are still apparently on the increase.

American songbirds are in no danger of extinction, like their relatives among the game birds. For the most part they are not in a precarious position, officials of the bureau report.

The Weaker Sex?

Queer Aerial Cargoes

Airplanes have often flown queer cargoes, ranging from an African lion to a grand piano, but in their regular daily travels the cross-channel planes, linking England with France, Germany and other continental countries, regularly get unusual mixtures of freight. On one recent trip a big aerial freighter carried a package of diamonds valued at $60,000, half a ton of gold and 500 one-day-old chickens.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Makes It Tender

The sweet young thing turned to a polite young man who was showing her through the factory and said, "What is that big thing over there?"

"That is a locomotive boiler."

"Why do they boil the locomotives?"

"To make the locomotive tender." And the polite young man continued to look straight ahead.

No Phone Service for Channel Isles

It is impossible to telephone from England to the Channel Islands—Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney and Sark. They have always been in a state of splendid telephonic isolation in spite of the fact that telephone conversations between that country and the United States and other distant countries are going on every day.

This "discovery" was made by a reporter who had an urgent message to convey to Jersey. "We have no telephonic communication at all with the Channel Islands, and we never have had," explained a post office official. "It is possible that lines to Jersey and other places may be a development of the future, but we have none at present." Jersey has a population of 49,494 and Guernsey 40,120.

Automatic Power

A power station run without the aid of human hands is now being constructed in Sweden at Surahammar in the province of Vestmanland by the Swedish General Electric company of Vesteras. Automatic devices will enable the engineers at the control station, located far from the plant, to gauge the speed of the engines and the high-water level at the power station as well as detect any possible faults with the motors. The plant is entirely self-regulating, so that the turbines adjust themselves automatically to the flow of water.

Planting in Memory

The memorial tree idea that has been taken up throughout the country under the leadership of the American Tree association lends itself admirably to the Road of Remembrance plan. This should be kept in mind by every tree planter, for if the tree is a memorial tree or the road is a Road of Remembrance, the planting must be of such character that those for whom the trees are planted would be proud of the new beauty given to the world.

FIND UNKNOWN LETTER OF WASHINGTON'S IN LONDON

Interesting Missive Discovered in Attic of Old Boarding House Near British Museum.

London.—After lying neglected for years, covered with dust, in the attic of an old London boarding house in the neighborhood of the British museum, a hitherto unknown letter of George Washington has been discovered here.

Yellow with age and worn almost through at the creases, the strong handwriting of the first American President and his famous signature are still clearly decipherable.

Addressed to Major Ewan and dated Georgetown, Oct. 4, 1781, the letter reads:

"Sir: With a mixture of great surprise and astonishment I have read with attention the sentiments you have submited to my perusal.

"Be assured, Sir, no occasion in the course of this war has given me more painful sensation than your information of there being such ideas existing in the army as you have expressed and which I may view with abhorrence and reprehend with severity. For the present the communication of them will rest in my own bosom unless some further agitation of the matter shall make a disclosure. I am much at loss to conceive what part of my conduct could have given encouragement to an address which to me seems big with the greatest mischief that can befall my country. If I am not deceived in the knowledge of myself you could not have found a person to whom your schemes are more disagreeable.

"At the same time in justice to my own feelings I must add that no man possesses a more serious wish to see ample justice done to the army than I do; and as far as my power and influence in a constitutional way extend they shall be employed to the utmost of my ability to effect it. Should there be any occasion let me conjure you then, if you have any regard for your country, concern for yourself, or respect for me, to banish these thoughts from your mind; and never communicate as from yourself or any one else a sentiment of the like nature.

"I have acquainted Gen. Braddock with the gist of your letter. Yrs. in sorrow. G. Washington."

The letter is going to America, where it will be placed on exhibition temporarily at various museums of history. It will probably be offered for sale later, either to the government, historical societies, or private individuals.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Ole C. Stenmo and Randi Stenmo, his wife, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of February, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota on the 23rd day of February, 1926, at eight o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 187 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of Forty-six Dollars and eighty-two cents ($46.82), being the balance due and unpaid of the semi-annual installment of amortized principal and interest which became due and payable on the 9th day of February, 1927, and to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Sixty-two Dollars and fifty cents ($62.50), which became due and payable on the 9th day of August, 1927, and the 9th day of February, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of One Thousand Nine Hundred Fifty-eight Dollars and forty cents ($1,958.40), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 9th day of February, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and One Hundred Seventy-one Dollars and eighty-two cents ($171.82) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $46.82 thereof from December 31st, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, interest on $62.50 thereof from August 9th, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $62.50 thereof from February 9th, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred Ninety-three Dollars and ninety-five cents ($2,193.95), including insurance premium of Five Dollars and forty cents ($5.40), which said mortgagee has been required to pay;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The Southwest Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼ of SW¼) of Section Fourteen (14); the South Half of the Southeast Quarter (S½ of SE¼) and the Southeast Quarter of the Southwest Quarter (SE¼ of SW¼) of Section Fifteen (15), in Township One Hundred Fifty-six (156) North, of Range Forty-two (42) West, containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the Government Survey thereof,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 15th day of September, 1928, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, including said insurance paid, as aforesaid; and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Dated August 2nd, 1928.

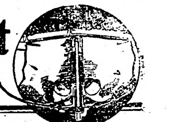
The Sediment Trap of the MAYTAG Cast Aluminum Tub



Keeps the water clean

Good Housekeeping Institute

THE Maytag tub has a sediment trap which collects the loose dirt that is flushed from the clothes. It keeps the water clean, and also permits the tub to drain itself thoroughly without tipping the washer.

The effective shape of the Maytag tub promotes vigorous water action in every inch of the tub all the time, so that the washing is done by water action alone—an action that keeps the soap thoroughly mixed with the water and removes even stubborn edge dirt without hand-rubbing.

Wringing the clothes is easy and effective with the Maytag. The large, soft rolls of the new Roller Water Remover hug every fold, lump and seam, removing both soap and water evenly from all parts of a bulky garment or a thin handkerchief.

Phone for a Maytag. Do your next washing with it. Experience the thrill of a washing done in an hour or so, done with so little work that it is really fun, and sweetened by the sunlight of your own back yard. If it doesn't sell itself, don't keep it.

FREE DUCK HUNTING

There will be no charge made this season for the privilege of shooting waterfowl on Thief Lake, in eastern Marshall county, according to Game Wardens Milton Forder and son A. E., of Middle Rivver, who visited this section the forepart of the week.

For the past few year a small charge has been made for the shooting privilege there, and a number of sportsmen who thot the charge unjust were frequently faced with a shotgun in the hands of those policing the property there.

Incidentally, while here the wardens took into custody a pair of young men of the east of Stephen neighborhood who had been unable to resist the temptation to bag a few ducks prior to the opening of the season Sept. 16th. The young fellows were brought before Justice Hunter Tuesday evening, and the judge, being kindly disposed that evening, let the offenders off with a minimum fine, which amounted to $11 each, including costs.

Heavy rains during the late summer, coupled with the fact that there is considerable uncut grain in the neighborhood, has brought large numbers of ducks here to enjoy the excellent feed. In some sections of North Dakota, it is said that they have become so plentyful that they are materially damaging crops, and orders have been issued, according to reports, that they may be killed there at will.

OBITUARY

Guriana Nasheim Nelson was born Nov. 11, 1861 at Storoien, Bergen Stift, Norway. Shortly after being baptized by Rev. Daa she came to this country with her parents and settled in Decorah, Iowa. After a few years residence at that place they removed to Washington Prairie and settled on a farm at that place. There she was confirmed by Rev. V. Koren.

On the first day of June 1879 she was united in marriage with Jacob Nelson by Rev. A. Stube which ceremnny was observed in the Bikanu Church. For a few years the young couple made their home in that vicinity, but finally moved to Fertile, Minn., where they enjoyed a lenghty stay of about twenty-six years.

Upon the expiration of these years they removed here to Holt which home they have enjoyed the past fourteen years. On September 3 she departed from her home into eternity amid the bereavement of her husband, children and sister. Death came as a relief in consideration of the fact that she has been ailing and in poor healt for a long period of time. Before her death she said she had found peace with God and so we hope she passed into her heavenly rest with a sigh of relief. At the time of her death she was 66 years, 9 months and 22 days old.

The deceased one is survived by her husband, Jacob Nelson and eight children, namely: Mrs. John Hagberg of Holt; Oscar Nelson of Hartline, Wash., Mrs. R. L. Adams of Grand Forks, Joseph Nelson of Holt, Mrs. R. A. Werner of Holt, Bentley and Edwin Nelson of Grand Forks and Mrs. R. A. Holmgren of Glyndon. She also leaves to mourn her loss a sister, Mrs. E. Engebretson of Fertile, Minn., and a half brother, John Thompson of Montana, and also sixteen grandchildren and four great-grandchildren, a number of distant relatives and a host of friends. May God send his comfort into the hearts of the husband who has lost a faithful wife to the children who have lost a loving mother and the sister who has lost a friend and companion.

"A prescious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.
God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon his love had given
And tho the body slumbers here
The soul maybe safe in heaven."

OBITUARY

Mrs. Gjertrud Sagmoen, wife of B. P. Sagmoen was called to her eternal rest at 7:15 p. m. last Friday, following a five months illness with cancer of the liver and other internal complications. She had been seeking medical advice at Warren and Thief River Falls and for six weeks was confined to the Thief River Falls hospital, but came home a week prior to her death. Death came very peaceful, and in the midst of her sorrowing husband and several of the children.

Mrs. Sagmoen was born at Tryssel, Norway on Oct. 29, 1859, was married to Sagmoen when 20 years old and emigrated to America a few years latter, coming first to Alexandria where they spent a few years before coming here where they homesteaded a farm five miles north of Rosewood. At the farm they stayed for almost 25 years before going to Rosewood to spend their advanced age, and where Sagmoen has been engaged in the blacksmith trade. They have been residents of Rosewood for 15 years.

To mourn besides the husband are nine children, Mrs. Ida Edrickson of Sanborn, N. D., Peder Sagmoen and Mrs. Martin Furan of Slayton, Mrs. Severt Benson and Isabel Sagmoen of Thief River Falls, Henry Sagmoen of Grand Canyon, Ariz., John and Chas Sagmoen of Rosewood and Rudolph Sagmoen of Thief River Falls. There are also three sisters and one brother in Norway, and 22 grandchildren.

The funeral was held Tuesday at the Rindal church and cemetery, Rev. E. L. Tungseth from Thief River preaching the funeral rites.

Mrs. Sagmoen was an example of true and worthy womanhood, a loving wife and a kind noble mother. She has a host of friends who will deeply miss her departure and who share the grief of the bereaved husband and children.

Card of Thanks

We wish to extend our most heartfelt thanks to Rev. Redal and Rev. Raaum for the comforting words spoken at the services of our dear wife and mother, for the lovely songs rendered; to all neighbors and friends for their acts of kindness; to those who decorated the church, and those who contributed the beautiful flowers. We thank you all.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXXVI

THE FAIRS; Prof. T. L. Haecker, the father of co-operative creameries in Minnesota, tells that his interest in dairying was first aroused thru seening a herd of Jersey cows being driven past his father's farm on the way to a county fair.

Agricultural Fairs, whether local, county, or state, have great educational value to those who would learn. A thing is good or bad largely by comparison and too often we are satisfied with what is comparatively poor because we have not learned to know that which is better. Agricultural Fairs generally bring out the best in the community and in the county and in the state and it is time very well spent to attend them.

In sections where there are no co-operative creameries, farmers are generally satisfied with from 4 to 7 and sometimes 10 cents a pound less for butterfat than farmers receive who have co-operative creameries. Thep have never made comparison. So it is with many things of the average farm They are not what they should be thru lack of comparison. The Fairs give the best opportunity ror comparison. We shall discuss a comparison of cows in our next lesson.

The Easiest Way to Keep in Style

By MAE MARTIN

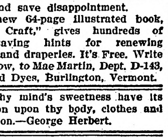
No woman would wear dresses, or blouses, or stockings of a color that's decidedly out of style or faded, if all of us knew how easy it is to make things fresh, crisp and stylish by the quick magic of home tinting or dyeing.

Anybody can tint or dye successfully with true, fadeless Diamond Dyes. Tinting with them is as easy as bluing, and dyeing takes just a little longer. New, stylish colors appear like magic, right over the old, faded colors. Diamond Dyes never spot, streak or run. They are real dyes, like those used when the cloth was made. Insist on them and save disappointment.

My new 64-page illustrated book, "Color Craft," gives hundreds of money-saving hints for renewing clothes and draperies. It's Free. Write for it now, to Mae Martin, Dept. D-143, Diamond Dyes, Burlington, Vermont.

Let thy mind's sweetness have its operation upon thy body, clothes and habitation.—George Herbert.



OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

To be ready for the worst requires considerable strength of mind.

It May Be Urgent

When your Children Cry for It

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it; some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

CHAPTER VIII

The chase by the bandits had followed an irregular course, leading at first southwest, then west, then south, with the result that some two hours after Go Ahead and Stella had shaken off their pursuers they found themselves at the crest of the last swell of the series that rose to the hills behind them.

Here in the scant shadow of two or three mesquite bushes that helped to hide them from possible foes Go Ahead halted his party, ostensibly to give the prisoners a rest but actually to give Barker as much time as possible to get back to town.

"I'd like to surprise J. B. as much as I can, Bob," he explained, "and I can't do it if I get to his town first, for somebody's sure to tell him I'm there before I see him. 'Rush a man off his feet' is a pretty good rule to go by. So we'll wait and let him get in if he's going to do it."

Stella wrinkled her brows doubtfully. "What makes you think he's going there today?" she asked. "More likely he's still hunting for you, and he wouldn't expect you at Loboville. He'd know I'd warn you away from there, and he'd look somewhere else."

"That's the way I figured it out. Barker's likely to send his men back to his ranch with orders to watch out for us and send him word—"

"He can telephone. He's got a phone at the ranch."

"All right! To telephone him it we show up there. Then he'd arrange with Wade to scour the hills to the north for us, and he'd probably go back to Loboville to fix things there. It's a gamble what he'll do; but shucks, life's full of gambles."

Stella admitted it and relapsed into silence. She was rather tired, not so much from the work she had done, though she had been up nearly all night before, as from the nervous strain of the day.

Go Ahead, however, knew nothing of the gun and whisky running and did not realize how tired she must be. So he harked back to the old subject and asked for further information about Stella.

"Is Stella pretty?" he asked.

Stella frowned. "Oh, she's got the usual number of teeth, and she's got good hair—if she'd let it grow," she answered. "But she won't let it grow—or she can't. She— Oh, she just looks like a lanky boy. You'd never think that she was a girl."

Unreservedly Go Ahead laughed. "Oh, wouldn't I, though," he retorted. "No girl in boys' clothes could ever get by my eagle eyes. You wait and see."

Stella sniffed. "All right," she promised. "I'll wait and see!" Then her strong white teeth clicked sharply. Go Ahead's boast settled it, she told herself. Not for the world would she tell him who she was until she had taught him a lesson.

A moment later she looked up to the arch of the sky. "Most time to go, isn't it?" she asked.

"High time," Go Ahead got to his feet. "Come on, boys," he called to his prisoners. "I know it's tough, but cheer up; in a couple of hours you'll be resting peacefully in a nice cool jail in charge of Sheriff Barker."

The two men, who had been sluggishly rising, straightened up as if galvanized. "You goin' to turn us over to Jim Barker?" demanded one whom Go Ahead had heard the other call "Hen."

"That's the idea. Sorry if it doesn't suit you. . . . Hold on! Maybe I've got the name wrong." Go Ahead turned to Stella. "Didn't you say the Loboville sheriff's name was Barker?" he asked.

Stella nodded.

"Thought so. . . . Yes, Barker's the man. "Got any objections?" Go Ahead looked at "Hen."

That individual, a lean and lanky fellow, nodded frowningly. "Yes, I've got objections," he rasped. Hen was quick to catch on and to play up to Stella—as he thought. "I object to the whole d—n thing and to Jim Barker in particular. You ain't got any right to hold us up this way, an'—"

"Tut, tut, tut! Tell it to Barker; and the faster you hop along the quicker you can tell him. March!"

Go Ahead watched them go with a twinkle in his eye. "That'll help square you with Barker, Bob," he suggested as he mounted his horse.

The rest of the ride was silent. The two prisoners hurried along with a briskness that equaled that of the first half mile after Go Ahead had captured them; Go Ahead himself was planning well in advance, and Stella was immersed in her own thoughts—which were decidedly confused.

And so they came to Loboville.

Few people were visible, but among those that were Go Ahead, watching keenly, spied black Caesar hurrying away toward the other end of the street.

At the same moment Stella plucked Go Ahead by the arm. "That's Jim Barker's office close to the courthouse," she explained, excitedly, "and that's Barker, just getting off his horse."

Coincidentally the two prisoners recognized Barker and almost ran toward him.

Go Ahead and Stella followed swiftly.

Go Ahead nodded. "Howdy!" he said. "I suppose this is Sheriff Barker, isn't it? Glad to meet you, sheriff. Hoped I'd find you here. I've brought along a couple of bandits that I cut out of Fair's gang this noon. Bob tells me that the horses they were riding belonged to you. So I brought them in as horse thieves. Glad to turn them and the horses over to you."

Barker gasped. Almost literally he had been swept off his feet. That the man who had so humiliated him only a few hours before, the man whom he and his men had been chasing and trying to kill, should walk serenely into the very center of his web, bringing with him the girl over whom the entire war had originated, was really incredible. And that this man should bring in two of his own ranch hands as prisoners and two of his own horses and should turn them all over to him with such a speech was an actual nightmare. He did not know what to answer.

Meanwhile a crowd had been gathering with extraordinary rapidity. And the very large part of it that had heard Go Ahead's speech was sufficiently informed as to the conditions to realize that the smiling young man on the horse was making a monkey of the sheriff, and they were listening eagerly for the answer. More than half the crowd consisted of the sheriff's friends and would stand up for him if necessary; but even these were snickering inwardly, behind their poker faces.

Barker knew all this. He knew that he ought to answer quickly and sharply, that he ought to crush this impudent young puncher who was devilling him. But somehow he felt peculiarly helpless—not exactly afraid but bewildered.

Briefly, Go Ahead had his goat—and had it unmistakably.

Waveringly he raised his eyes, and, over the heads of the closely contiguous crowd, he saw Captain Carter, of the United States troops, loafing along the street toward him.

That settled it. Barker could do dirty work in the presence of his own men; he could even attempt it in the presence of men whom he could intimidate into keeping still; but he could not risk it in the presence of the regulars. Besides, he had had more than one taste of Go Ahead's methods, and he judged that that young man, and Stella, too, were dangerous, albeit they stood looking at him so smilingly.

So he threw up his hands—metaphorically. At the two bandits he glared, then at the horses. "Hanged if they ain't my horses," he choked, though desperately striving to speak naturally. "Where'd you catch these d—n scoundrels?"

Go Ahead did not hasten to reply. Deliberately he dismounted, while Barker stood waiting. Then—

"Oh, back in the hills to the north," he answered, carelessly. "They and some other bandits were chasing me and Bob. And, do you know, sheriff, these fellows had the nerve to say they were acting by your orders."

Hats Resemble Houses

In the Hawaiian islands, long before the inhabitants took the trouble to clothe themselves, they built grass houses, and at the present time the characteristic Hawaiian hat is remarkably like the hut.

The turbans of the dignitaries of the Eastern church are still of the shape of those worn by the high priests among the Jews of olden times, and they are extraordinarily like the characteristic domes that surmount mosques. Again, it is pointed out, the high pointed spires of Gothic churches were cotemporaneous with the high horn-like headdress known as the hennin. It is believed, too, that like results may be found after a comparison of other styles of architecture with the headgear of the period wherein they flourished.—Washington Star.

LIBBIE'S WINNING WAY

(©, by D. J. Walsh.)

Mrs. Carson walked the length of her cozy, pretty apartment and back again. The whole place was in perfect order. There was nothing to do until it was time to make her cup of tea and plate of toast for supper.

Mrs. Carson was a thin woman with sharp, dark eyes, little patches of carmine on her cheeks, and a tightly shut mouth. Her expression was one of deliberate and extreme dissatisfaction with life.

"Oh, dear," she said to herself. "I'm tired of reading and crocheting and sewing. I'd like some company. I believe some one is coming now!"

Footsteps were on the stairs. They mounted to the tiny hall, and there came a sound of knocking, not on Mrs. Carson's door, but on the door of Libbie Sisson who lived in the other apartment. The door opened and pleasant voices came through the partition, Libbie's and another's.

"It's Annie Spicer!" Mrs. Carson drew a quick breath. "The idea of her going there! She hasn't been to see me in weeks. Everybody goes right past my door to that woman's!" She felt that she hated Libbie Sisson.

There were sounds of a lively good time going on beyond the partition—laughter, the creaking of rocking-chairs, and rapid conversation.

"Annie never laughs when she comes here," she thought. "She's as glum as a—as I am. I wonder what people go to Libbie Sisson's for. I don't like her, but then I've never spoken a dozen words to her although we are neighbors."

Mrs. Carson opened her work-basket and took out a bit of sewing, but instead of working she began to puzzle over the fact that Annie Spicer had gone past her door to enter Libbie Sisson's.

Yet Libbie Sisson was poor. She had nursed sick people until she became too stout and too lame to go out to work any longer, and now she was subsisting on the income from her small savings. She had never been of great importance in the community, and yet she had many friends. Some one was always creaking up the stairs to her humble door. Evenings usually several women, young as well as old, came to sit about her coal stove. Mrs. Carson could hear them enjoying each other's society long after she had crept, lonely, to bed.

It was unaccountable. Mrs. Carson knew more people than Libbie Sisson did, she had a nice home, a better apartment, pretty furniture, everything necessary for her comfort and well-being. She was a widow without children, but, then, so was Libbie. Besides, she had been a Hyde; the Hyde name always stood for influence. One might well be proud of being a Hyde. Mrs. Carson was proud, perhaps too proud.

A lonelier woman never lived than Mrs. Carson. She had everything but friends, and somehow she could not make a friend, much less keep one. It was singular. She could not understand it. She had sought many times for the cause, as she was seeking now, but she had never found it because she had never sought in the right place.

"I'd like to know what Libbie Sisson's secret is," she thought. "I believe I'll try to find out. And whatever it is I'll use it."

An hour later when Annie Spicer had gone past her door again, laughing a good-by, Mrs. Carson put aside the work she had held in her hands without making a stitch. She straightened her dress and hair and went across the tiny hall to the oposite door and knocked.

Libbie Sisson opened the door, looking her surprise as she saw who was there. She was a large woman with a red and white face, a lovable mouth and sweet eyes.

"Why, it's Mrs. Carson!" she exclaimed. "Come in, do."

Mrs. Carson entered. She sat down in one of the rocking chairs she had heard creak. She noticed that the coal stove needed dusting, that there were a few scraps on the worn and ugly ingrain carpet, that the whole room was carelessly kept and quite unlike her own immaculate and beautiful apartment. Yet somehow it conveyed an impression of homelikeness that hers did not. She did not know that it was the cordial, loving personality of Libbie Sisson warming all like a cheery fire.

"I'm real glad you've come in," said Libbie, taking another rocker opposite her visitor's. She reached for the poker. "Is it warm enough here for you? I suspect my fire got down while Annie was in; we sort of forgot it. And that reminds me. I want you to have some of my sugared popcorn."

She sprang up and got a bowl of the crisp, white flakes. Mrs. Carson had to accept it. She had to taste—and then she wanted to eat. She was ashamed of herself to eat Libbie's sugared popcorn, but she was impelled to do so, by the eager hospitality in her hostess' face. She could see that she would grieve unless she did her best to empty the bowl.

"And now I just want to know if you know about Winny Peck?" Libbie said. "She's got twins! Come last night. I'm going to pack a basket and take to her this evening. Poor child! Just as if it wasn't bad enough to have twins when you have a husband, but when you haven't a husband—"

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Carson. "No husband!"

"Yes, sir. Poor Will Peck went and got killed not a month ago. And I don't know whether he left a life insurance or not. She'll need a lot of looking after this winter. We'll all have to help. Maybe you'd like to go along with me this evening and see the twins, Mrs. Carson? I do love little babies. Oh, dear! I wish I wasn't so lame and I'd go right there and take care of her for nothing. But, land, I'm not a mite of good any more."

"Why, yes, I don't know—but what—I can go with you," Mrs. Carson reluctantly agreed.

The invitation had been a good deal like the popcorn, impossible to decline.

"On the way back," said Libbie thoughtfully, "we might stop in and see Aunt Hannah Peabody. I'm just hungrying for one of her good stories. My, she's got the cutest wit! I always go to her to get chirked up when I'm blue. Did you ever hear tell of the woman who had her kitchen floorboards laid loose so she could take 'em up and clean both sides? It was that same woman who hunted flyspecks with a hairpin and scrubbed the outside of her house once a month with soap and brush. One time she was dusting off her roof when the ladder fell so she couldn't get down. She had to sit astride the ridge-pole a good while before she could make anybody hear her. But it didn't teach her anything, dear me, no. That same afternoon she scrubbed the pig till she scrubbed the hide off him in spots."

Libbie talked on gayly, merrily, with deep enjoyment at what she had to tell, and yet without a bit of malice. And Mrs. Carson listened until gradually her hard cold face relaxed into a smile. She was so charming that Libbie's tea-kettle was boiling on the back of the stove before she knew it.

"Stay and have a bite with me," Libbie urged. She whisked into a little cupboard and began to set forth things on a small table drawn close to the fire. As Mrs. Carson arose, she pressed her back into the chair. "No I shan't hear to your going. Your children won't cry." She laughed at her joke. "Soon as we've eaten we'll start right out."

Mrs. Carson stayed. The tea was hot and strong, and the bread and loaf cake made by an expert hand. There was a treat of conserve and some thin slices of head cheese. Mrs. Carson ate more than she ever ate for supper.

After supper Mrs. Carson packed a basket for the poor little mother who had lost her protector. She put into it the best of everything she had in her apartment, towels, fine soap, jelly and a knit wool jacket for the invalid's shoulders. And down at the bottom she put a ten-dollar bill.

Somehow she felt happier than she had felt in years as she performed this kindly service.

"That Libbie Sisson's got a way with her," she thought. "She certainly has got a way with her."

But it did not occur to her that same friendly way of Libbie's was the secret she had gone to discover.

Most Men of Genius Careless About Dress

Like many other poets, John Keats was not particular about the appearance of his attire when in public, but there was one time when he was invariably spic-and-span. That was when he had an exceptionally fine piece of work before him. Before sitting down to it Keats carefully bathed, brushed his hair, tied his shoe strings in precise bows, cleaned his nails, and in every way made his person as neat as possible. Yet, on the other hand, a recent inquiry by the Mentor Magazine revealed that some writers could not think of a thing with their shoes on and did their best when being as untidy as they dared. Doctor Johnson found difficulty in composing if he wore a stiff shirt, and at a farmhouse where Oliver Goldsmith used to lodge they told how the author used to drift into the kitchen "quite loosely attired," and, standing in a daze for a while with his back to the fire, would suddenly dash to his study and jot down a line.

Keen Eyesight of Birds

Birds have exceptionally keen eyesight and the additional faculty of seeing an approaching person while apparently intent on feeding. Small birds will instantly discover a hawk, although it is so high as to be merely a speck to the human vision. The mystery is explained by the fact that the bird's eyes do not co-operate but each can focus on a different object at the same time.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

By the Hair

Four-year-old Dick told the following at the dinner table: "Me and Jerry were sitting on the sidewalk and here come a horse clopping down the street. The vestibule man caught him and held him by his hair." The mother learned later that a horse was galloping down the street and a vegetable man caught the horse and held to its mane.

London Streets

Many attempts have been made to trace the origin of the name of Piccadilly; probably one of the most ingenious connects it with the making of glass in that part of London. "Piccadil" is, it seems, old French for the slag which results from glass making, and which may have been used for the foundation of the famous road way

Birds Kill Rattler in Pitched Battle

Miller, S. D.—After battling 20 minutes with two pheasants, a cock and a hen, a rattlesnake was killed near a highway, from which a farmer's wife in her car watched the fray.

Attracted by a repeated swooping of the birds, the woman stopped her car and saw the rattler strike many times at the pheasants, who had no difficulty in keeping out of his reach. As he struck at one bird the other would dive down and give him a vicious peck until at length he was dispatched.

GENTLE YEGGMEN HAVE NICE TIME

Fare Sumptuously and Are Kind to Watchman.

Chicago.—Kindly and considerate cracksmen blew two safes in a large grocery establishment here and escaped with several thousand dollars loot. Before they departed the five yeggs, who had captured the watchman and joked with him while they worked, regaled themselves with a repast of roast chicken and iced milk and fed their captive from the refrigerators of the store.

The burglars were in the place from ten o'clock Saturday night until 5:45 a. m. Sunday. They went boldly about their hours of work, smoking expensive cigars taken from the company's stock.

Thirty minutes after they had departed, Charles Putnam, the sixty-year-old watchman whom they had treated so considerately, loosed his bonds.

Putnam told the police two of the men came up to him from behind as he was emptying a waste basket about 10 p. m., Saturday. They pushed revolvers into his ribs.

"Be quiet and you won't be hurt," they warned him and led him to a spot on a balcony where they told him to sit in a chair. Putnam took an upright chair.

"Here, old man, take this rocker," one of the two who guarded him said in a kindly voice. "You're going to be here a long time and you might as well be comfortable."

From time to time his two captors went to the company's ice box and got him chicken sandwiches and orangeade. At last the five had what they called a "corking" breakfast of chicken and milk, and before they left they tied him and propped some linen under his head for a pillow. He said he never got a chance to get a square look at any one of the men.

Child "Dead" Three Hours Revived by Heroic Means

Alexandria Bay, N. Y.—After being "dead" for three hours, according to all the rules of medical science, three-year-old Helen Poole of Grenadier Island is alive and well.

The child fell from the pier at the summer home of Charles A. Duke of Duke Center, Pa., into the St. Lawrence river near here. Her head struck when she fell and she floated on the river for three hours until rescued by her father. When the child did not appear for dinner a search was started and she was found floating face upward a half mile from the island. Artificial respiration was applied and she soon recovered.

A Canadian physician explained that the child's lungs were inflated when she fell and that the blow on her head had temporarily suspended all bodily functions. The inflated lungs kept her floating and the cessation of breathing prevented her from drawing water into her lungs, which would have caused her to drown. He pointed out that the child had been, to all intent and purpose, "dead" during the three hours she had been in the water.

Opens Door, Finds Full-Grown Bear on the Stairs

Winnipeg. — Hearing the familiar "scratch, scratch," on the back of her cabin in a pretty glade near Osaquan, west of Fort William, Ont., Mrs. L. H. Durfey, backwoods pioneer, went to the door to admit, as she thought, one of her husky sled dogs.

When she opened the door, however, she met a full-grown cinnamon bear. Both seemed surprised. Mr. Bruin retreated a few steps and surveyed the woman coolly. Mrs. Durfey returned his gaze as frigidly. But not for long. The bear had a good pelt, she remembered. To think was to act. Seizing a 30.30 caliber carbine, Mrs. Durfey plugged the bear squarely between the eyes. One shot killed him.

Mrs. Durfey is an expert huntress.

BANKER RIDES TO OFFICE IN PLANE

Puts Interest in Aviation Into Practice.

New York.—Richard F. Hoyt, junior member of the firm of Hayden, Stone & Company, investment bankers, is putting his reputation as one of the leading business advocates of commercial aviation in this country into actual practice by using a plane to commute between his Marian (Mass.) summer home and his Broad street office. The East river provides a convenient landing place at this end of the journey.

The plane, a Loening amphibian "air yacht," equipped with a Wright "cyclone" 525-horse power air-cooled motor, has a luxurious cabin upholstered in broadcloth and saddle leather. Concealed lockers hold equipment for lunches and card games, permitting the banker to have breakfast en route to the office and relaxation with cards on the journey home.

Windows are of unbreakable glass, while an engine muffler insures sufficient quietness for conversation. The plane has a cruising speed of 100 miles per hour and top speed of 130, with quick take-off, considering the load, on either land or water.

Mr. Hoyt, known as a sportsman as well as a successful business man, is active in the management of several airplane manufacturing and operating corporations. He is chairman of the board of the Pan-American Airways, now operating between Key West, Havana and Santiago de Cuba and which recently was awarded the government mail contract for routes to Colon, Porto Rico and Trinidad. He is also chairman of the boards of the Wright Aeronautical corporation of Paterson, N. J., and of the Keystone Aircraft corporation of Bristol, Pa.

Tars Best Marksmen, Marines Are Second

New York.—Sailors are more expert in the use of firearms than are members of the other two branches of the military service, according to the proprietor of a shooting gallery at Coney Island, who has had 25 years' experience at his rendezvous.

Marines are next in proficiency, being little above the ordinary marksman, and last is the soldier, who, according to the proprietor, is a very poor shot.

The reason given for the bad marksmanship of the average soldier is lack of practice. A sailor, though he does not receive as much training in the use of firearms while in the service, passes his shore leave in amusement parks, devoting much time shooting clay pigeons.

Being more permanently situated and, therefore, having more liberty, the soldier makes friends in the neighborhood adjacent to his post, or amuses himself in other ways, not depending on amusement parks for entertainment.

The training received on the rifle range by a peacetime soldier is compulsory and of short duration. Therefore, it is sooner forgotten than the instruction fostered by sportsmanship.

Eighty per cent of the civilians that frequent shooting galleries are good shots.

Europe Is Reducing Plane Motor's Power

Paris.—The power of airship engines is being reduced sharply by European manufacturers, inspired by the success of the 200-horse power motors that brought Lindbergh, Chamberlin, Byrd and others across the Atlantic.

Most of the engines at last year's aeronautical exhibition in France were 400 and 500 horse power and up. This year the majority develop less than 300 horse power. There are several engines in light planes that develop no more than many automobile motors.

The baby engine of the show comes from Germany and develops only 20 horse power. The plane has room for two passengers and flies 25 miles on a gallon of gasoline.

$11 Per Capita Spent on U. S. Roads in Year

Washington.—America's road-building program this year involves an estimated total of $1,360,025,776, or about $11 for every man, woman and child in the population of some 120,000,000.

"This program," according to the American Automobile association, "means that at the close of 1928 the surfaced highways of the nation will total more than 600,000 miles and the federal-aid system, comprising 185,000 miles of important interstate trunk lines, will be near the stage of two-thirds completed."

JUDGE BY DAY AND MAGICIAN BY NIGHT

Jurist Spends Spare Time Mystifying Friends.

Eagle River, Wis.—Here's a judge who likes to cast aside the somber robes of the bench and put on the magician's shiny frock coat, who likes to lay aside the periwig to don the high silk hat from whence rabbits are pulled, who would lay down the gavel to take up the ventriloquist's dummy.

He has a room in the basement of his home equipped as a theater, with stage, footlights and many accessories peculiar to his art. There he sometimes entertains friends, sometimes practices new things to amuse himself and neighbors.

Lays Off the Wine.

The judge doesn't let the magic go so far as to try to turn water into wine in that basement. No, sir, he sees plenty of "cases" of that kind of "black art" in his courtroom.

And in the courtroom the judge was never before so severe with a prisoner that he forces him to be "the kind gentleman down in front who has lent us the derby," into which the eggs are broken. The judge wouldn't jeopardize the dignity of the court in that way or by suddenly jerking a rabbit from under the bench.

He wouldn't—maybe couldn't—show any of the prisoners before his daytime stage, the bench, the card tricks that all magicians know.

But he might, some day, using his knowledge of ventriloquism, make his voice come from behind the prisoners to say:

"You're guilt as —— thirty days."

Now, you take Judge R. A. Richards of Sparta, county judge of Monroe county; he likes to make bets with the weather man.

He has gained considerable reputation as a weather prophet. Judge Richards has made a special study of weather conditions and his friends claim he can tell almost to the quarter of an hour when it's going to rain next. He is in good standing with the court attaches on his ability to tell whether they should borrow his umbrella or wear their rubbers.

He has his own system, his own basis for prognostication as a side line to promulgation of decrees.

Got a War Voice.

Judge Richards should know how to bark his commands to prisoners in no certain terms. He's been on the county bench 13 years. He was previously a National Guard officer and was commanding general of the One Hundred Ninety-second Infantry brigade in the Ninety-sixth division during the World war.

Then, of course, there are the judges who golf. Two of the state's "head men" in this business of judging are golfers of some ability, and those who wield the mashie as well as the gavel are too numerous to mention. The two Supreme court justices who are divot diggers as well as decree dispensers are M. J. Rosenberry and Walter Q. Owen.

Couple Wed 90 Years and Not a Single Spat

Vrbitza, Yugo-Slavia.—The oldest married couple in the Balkans and probably in the whole world do not recall a single quarrel in their 90 years of wedded life.

Dimitrije Filipovitch is at least one hundred and ten years old and his wife, Zivana, is one hundred and seven. They may be older, for it is established that Dimitrije was "over twenty" when Prince Milosh abdicated in 1839. If he were then only twenty-one he would now be one hundred and ten.

All their lives they have lived by farming their 30 acres of land, and now they are surrounded by a colony of descendants to the fourth generation. They live in this little village, near the health resort of Arandjevlovatz.

Dimitrije walks slowly, but without a stick, and still talks of the many princes and kings under whose rule he has lived and of the many wars for liberty he has witnessed. One of his sons and several grandsons were killed during the World war fighting for Serbia.

Century Old Snapping Turtle Caught by Dog

Saranac Lake, N. Y.—A record size snapping turtle, weighing more than 20 pounds, was captured recently at the camp of Mrs. A. J. Campbell on lower Saranac lake. Midget, her pet water spaniel, discovered the big snapper in shallow water. The dog was believed to have launched an attack.

Hearing the turmoil, campers rushed out to find the turtle close to camp, with the dog circling about him. Tracks of the turtle leading from the water were plainly visible, but whether the dog was chasing the turtle or turtle chasing the dog is now among the unsolved mysteries of Saranac region. Old-timers believe the turtle is a century or more old.

Very Obliging

New York.—Patrolman Mackin of the motor cycle squad is obliging. "Officer," said Mrs. Anne Sanford, "please pace me and tell me how fast I'm going. My speedometer isn't working." When the pacing was finished the officer handed out a ticket. Mrs. Sanford was fined $25.

MAKES $10,000 IN ONE FISH CATCH

Fisherman Seines 20,000 Bushels of Herring.

West Southport, Maine.—Residents along the Sheepscot river are willing to concede all deserved fishing honors to the Brule river in Wisconsin. Still, they say, fishing can't be so bad on the Sheepscot when a man can go out and get 20,000 bushels of fish in one haul.

Something about the feed the Sheepscot supplies; something about its cold, clear waters; something about the countless little tributaries or deep coves gashing its shore line seems to appeal particularly to all schooling fish.

"I advised a man to try his luck at Maddocks cover, near West Southport, last August," explains Luther Maddocks, dean of the Maine fishing industry. "He watched until he saw the herring school swim in and then closed the mouth of the cove with a drop net. He took out 20,000 bushels of sardine herring, which he sold right there to the sardine carriers for 50 cents a bushel or a total of $10,000.

"Another man at Cosy harbor, opening into the Sheepscot, made $8,000 in seining herring in six weeks.

"This year the season is starting late, just as it did a year ago, but it looks as if big catches will be made in the Sheepscot during August, September and October. And current prices are 60 cents a bushel. The fish are measured right on the spot in dories. A full dory holds 50 bushels."

South Wind Is Blamed for Crying of Babies

Paris.—Mothers, take heed—it is the south wind that causes babies to cry, in the opinion of eminent physicians of the French Academy of Medicine.

It is a scientific fact, assert two doctors of Lyons, M. Charpentier and M. Mouriquand, who reported their observations to the academy. Babies are not at fault when they start to yell about tea time, they declared. It is because the south wind drys out the air and affects the infants.

The doctors explained that adults do not notice this pathological effect because they are stronger and their bodies remedy matters automatically. As babies cannot talk, they just yowl until the wind subsides or there is a change in the weather. Some even run up a fairly high temperature.

The doctors suggested a cure in the form of electric fans blowing on blocks of ice. This would restore moisture to the atmosphere and lower the temperature.

Engineers Study Flood Records Back to 1000 B. C.

Washington.—Records of floods and rains at Rome, Italy, dating back to 1000 B. C., are to be studied by army engineers in connection with flood control on the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers for the protection of Pittsburgh as well as work on the Mississippi.

Maj. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, chief of engineers, has just returned from an inspection trip in the Pittsburgh and Buffalo districts, where he visited some of the sites proposed for reservoirs. He said he was much impressed with the improvements he found in some of these sites.

The possibility of turning the water of the upper Allegheny into Lake Erie instead of letting it flow down the Ohio is considered by the engineers.

"The Maiden's Prayer" Proves Indestructible

London.—Demonstrating a type of phonograph record just introduced into England, a demonstrator flung the record onto the floor and danced on the disk. Next he beat it with a wooden stick, then he poured kerosene on it and applied a match. Finally, the record was placed on the phonograph and an unblemished reproduction of "The Maiden's Prayer" issued from the horn. The record is of a new composition material.

Likes the "Eats"

New York.—For real eats Clinton, Iowa, is heartily indorsed by Mrs. James J. Walker, wife of the mayor. Back from her first visit to the old farm in 17 years, she said she never had such a good meal in her life and never expects another like it unless the 52 relatives get together again.

After Thirty Years

New York.—Having struggled thirty years for an education, Mrs. Bessie Bodyfield, forty-five, mother of three children, is on the way home to Edgemont, Colo., a master of arts of teachers' college, Columbia university.

Will Tattooed on Back Records Briton's Gifts

London.—A 200-word will bequeathing large sums of money to several people has been tattooed on the back of a man who walked into a tattooing establishment in Waterloo road.

He had the will written out on a piece of paper and asked that it be transferred to his back. He sat for five hours while the work was done, and the will was duly witnessed.

Ghost City Seems to Be Suspended in Air

The silent city of Alaska, the famous mirage which appears occasionally above the great Muir glacier, was observed again recently by tourists from the deck of the steamship Aleutian. The phantom of the air looked very much like an ancient fortified city, with spires and towers, hanging some distance above the glacier. The singular phenomenon is believed to be caused by the distortion of icy pinnacles and peaks.

The appearance of the Alaska mirage is always preceded by the forming of a stock of mist along the horizon where probably two air currents meet, due to condensation of atmospheric moisture by the chill of the sea. The mist soon apparently dissolves and the magic picture begins to lift itself up in the distance, with all the formations, like a motion picture film being focused on the screen.

Once last season the phantom reversed and the strange image appeared upside down, the tips of the towers and the minarets looking as if they were dipping into the sea.

There are a lot of unsafe bridges on the road to prosperity.

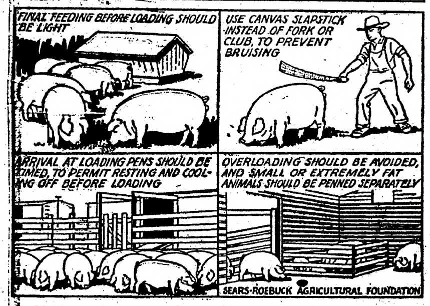
How to Reduce Live Stock Shipping Losses



FINAL FEEDING BEFORE LOADING SHOULD BE LIGHT
USE CANVAS SLAPSTICK INSTEAD OF FORK OR CLUB, TO PREVENT BRUISING
ARRIVAL AT LOADING PENS SHOULD BE TIMED, TO PERMIT RESTING AND COOLING OFF BEFORE LOADING
OVERLOADING SHOULD BE AVOIDED, AND SMALL OR EXTREMELY FAT ANIMALS SHOULD BE PENNED SEPARATELY
SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

The loss suffered by producers, shippers and packers through deaths, cripples and bruised flesh in shipping live stock to market probably reaches $15,000,000 a year, states the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. This sum is equal to about half the value of all the hogs on farms in Ohio, South Dakota, or Kansas, on January 1, 1928, and is nearly as large as the value of all the hogs in Texas on that date. Much of this loss is avoidable. Some progress has been made in reducing it in recent years, but it remains large.

In each of the last several years, railroads paid live stock loss claims aggregating over two million dollars. In many cases, these claims are settled on a 50-50 basis, so that the actual loss would be still larger. In addition, there is a huge aggregate of small losses of one or two head of hogs or lambs, or a crippled steer or cow in a car on which no claim is paid. Records show that the death loss of hogs averages about one head out of every 500 marketed. With nearly 48,000,000 head sold in the last year, the "deadage" would be nearly 100,000 head. Dead live stock brings about 1 to 2 cents a pound and cripples sell at a discount of 2 to 3 cents below animals in sound condition.

The loss through bruised flesh includes about 5,000,000 pounds of pork and 4,000,000 pounds of beef tanked every year, about 5,000,000 pounds of pork and 2,500,00 pounds of beef sold as trimmings at a lower price, and the loss due to reduction of grade on hams and other cuts because of their bruised condition. Prices paid for live stock take into account the average loss the packer can expect through bruising, so that most of it comes out of the farmer's pocket.

Measures to prevent these losses begin at the farm, the Foundation continues. The last feed before loading should be light. Excitement or overexertion in moving to the loading pens should be avoided. Prod poles, pitchforks, clubs and whips should be tabooed, and slap sticks, consisting of a piece of heavy canvas on a short handle, used instead. Arrival at loading pens should be timed to permit resting and cooling off before loading. Cars should be inspected for projecting nails, loose boards, holes, or defective door fastenings. The car should be bedded with sand, sawdust or cinders, with straw or shavings added in winter to prevent hogs from piling up and causing losses through smothering.

In hot weather, hog cars should be thoroughly wet down when loaded and the railroad should drench the hogs at every available point, being careful to avoid throwing water directly upon them after they have become overheated. Four to six burlap bags of ice which will drip over the hogs should be hung in the car. Overloading should be avoided, especially in hot weather. Small, weak, extremely fat, or inactive or crippled animals are the classes most likely to be lost in shipping and should be penned separately. Vicious or unruly animals should be tied.

Part of the responsibility in the reduction of shipping losses must be borne by the railroads. Having chutes and other equipment at loading points in good condition, pens free from mud and with shelter from sun or storms, facilities for feeding, watering and sprinkling, careful handling of brakes to avoid bumping and piling up of live stock in the cars, prompt movement on the roads and avoidance of delays in delivering cars from the terminal yards to the unloading docks are measures which help to minimize live stock losses.

BANKER-FARMER MOVEMENT GROWS

Funds Supplied by Banking Organizations in Many States to Finance Studies and Contests.

The nationwide movement being conducted by county and state bankers' associations and the American Bankers Association in co-operation with the state agricultural colleges and county agents for the purpose of bringing about both local and national solutions for farm economic problems has shown notable results during the past year. A review of these activities in the Bulletin of the Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association, summarizes some of the chief points as follows:.

In Missouri a meeting was held at the College of Agriculture at which the bankers again appropriated $1,600 for boys' and girls' club work. Saline county bankers have raised $500 to stimulate beef calf clubs and report definite results obtained in getting farmers to lime their soil and grow alfalfa. County "key bankers" to promote banker support of farm betterment projects are being appointed and another Short Course in Agriculture for bankers is being planned.

In Kansas no less than fifteen counties are reported by the Extension Service as engaged in definite banker-farmer work. County key bankers attended four district conferences during the year.

The Louisiana bankers' agricultural committee met at the College of Agriculture in connection with a bankers' farm course. The bankers are thoroughly aroused to the wisdom of tick eradication and are co-operating to that end. County key bankers are being selected and county meetings with bankers throughout the state will be arranged.

Results Shown

In Kentucky key bankers have been appointed in each county with the result that the bankers of the state are co-operating with the College of Agriculture more specifically than any other group of business men. Some of the fruits of this co-operation is demonstrated by the fact that the number of dairy cattle in the state has increased seven per cent and the production per cow twelve per cent. Three counties in the state have eliminated all scrub bulls.

In North Carolina the oustanding accomplishments have been the honoring of "Class A Farmers," that is, those attaining a degree of proficiency in a well balanced and sound system of farming as indicated by a score card prepared by the College of Agriculture and the Bankers Short Course given there. Future plans provide for the continuation of the county key banker system and the arrangement of county banker-farmer tours.

In Virginia $15,000 has been raised by subscription for boys' and girls' club work, largely from bankers. A group meeting was held at the College of Agriculture with two hundred bankers in attendance. The Committee on Agriculture of the State Bankers Association voted to continue and check up on the county key banker work.

The reports from New York on the activities for the past year included the distribution of 20,000 short form farm credit statements prepared co-operatively by the agricultural college and bankers. The bankers' agricultural committee also arranged to send suggestions to the banks of the state to aid in financing purchase of dairy cattle to replace those lost by the tuberculin test.

Bankers' Farm Schools

Bankers' Farm Schools or "Short Courses" continued popular during the year. Several colleges held such courses under the auspices of the state bankers' agricultural committees and are repeating them this year.

"Minimum of Talk—Maximum of Demonstration" was the character of program put on by the Kansas Agricultural College for the second Bankers' Farm School in April. Four representatives were invited from each of twenty counties, consisting of the county key banker, the county agent, the secretary of the county bankers association, and the president of the farm bureau. Proper farm methods were brought out by demonstrations, then tours were made to farms whose owners had followed the practices and methods outlined by the college to illustrate the lessons. Emphasis was placed on the important part bankers can play in developing agriculture.

In South Dakota specific plans for the ensuing year are the appointment of county key bankers, co-operation in boys' and girls' club projects and group meetings of county agents and key bankers. In Minnesota the county key bankers system is to be continued with special emphasis on bringing the county agent and key banker into closer co-operation.

At a banker meeting at the North Dakota Agricultural College it was decided that the key banker organization would be completed and in order to acquaint the bankers with agricultural needs county bankers' meetings were planned during the year.

At a conference held at Montana State College it was reported that county key bankers had co-operated in arranging for a livestock special train which ran for seventeen days, made twenty-nine stops and came in contact with 22,000 people; that bankers had assisted in six district conferences that led to the formation of a state agricultural program, and that twenty-eight counties reported definite work under the leadership of the county key bankers such as assisting in the purchase of purebred livestock and loans to club members.

Other States in Line

Idaho College of Agriculture was the scene of a special meeting attended by thirty-five bankers and college representatives. The conference voted to join the key banker ranks.

In Oregon the first banker-farmer short course was held in January with a good attendance and marked enthusiasm. A meeting of the state bankers Agricultural Committee held in conjunction with the course voted approval of the banker-farmer contest sponsored by Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association, and appointed a committee to confer with college authorities on methods to prevent spread of contagion in dairy cattle.

California held twenty-two successful county tours during the year and as a result it is planned to extend the tours to every county in the state and also to arrange a state-wide tour. The county key bankers played a big part in pushing this work. At an Arizona College of Agriculture meeting of bankers county key bankers were appointed and plans made for community conferences of bankers, farmers and others where local agricultural needs will be discussed.

In New Mexico bankers and county agents met at Clovis as a step in the plan to acquaint bankers in different sections of the state with agricultural conditions and to bring about greater co-operation between them and the county agents. At the Colorado College of Agriculture plans were formulated to select county key bankers, to follow up work with key bankers and county agents and for chairman of the state bankers' committee to attend and address group meetings.

In Nebraska four "farm outlook" meetings were held, largely attended by bankers. Sixty-nine county key bankers were appointed during the year and follow-up work between them and county agents is to be pushed.

For Iowa effective co-operation is reported between bankers and the Extension Service of the state college in their farm bureau programs Every third farmer in the state is a member of the bureau. The key banker system is to be continued and special emphasis is to be placed on team work between county agents and key bankers.

Director D. H. Otis of the Agricultural Commission American Bankers Association attended many of the meetings.

A Marvelous New MAYTAG Feature—

The Soft-Roller Water Remover
For homes without electricity, the Maytag is available with in-built gasoline motor.

PHONE
for a Maytag. Use it for a washing without cost or obligation. See how the sturdy, roomy, cast-aluminum tub keeps the water hot for an entire washing; how it does a big washing in an hour or so without hand-rubbing anything. If it doesn't sell itself, don't keep it.

THE large soft rolls of the New Maytag Roller Water Remover hug every seam, fold, and lump in the clothes, removing both soap and water evenly from all parts of the garment. This results in quicker, more even drying on the line, and no yellow spots. Buttons, buckles, snaps or an ornament go through safely. Then, too, there is a safety feed, an automatic tension adjustment, a drain-board which reverses itself and an instant safety release.

The Roller Water Remover is compact, all metal and all gears are thoroughly enclosed. It swings and locks in seven different positions. Can you imagine anything more complete and convenient? Do you wonder that it has been a sensation?

Albert Klungness was unintentionally left out of the June Honor Roll. He had 239 pounds of butterfat. In one way I feel bad over missing a name and on the other hand it does me good, for this reason that when a patron tells me that his name was left out I know that the Honor Roll list is being read.

It is very seldom that the first five names on the list happen to be the same ones two consecutive months. Such is the case this month, nevertheless, not one of them appear in the same rank, either higher or lower. Knute Nelson beats Steinhauer to it for first place and that is with only two pounds of butterfat more. Voth came up a peg since last list and so did Borsheim. Moberg dropped down two steps yet he remains as number 5 in this list.

Of late our Land O' Lakes quality cream has been somewhat irregular. One cream day we will have 75 per cent of it and the very next cream day hardly 50 per cent with no noticeable change in weather. The reason for this, to a large degree must be that some of the patrons are to busy with other work and very likely overlooked the care of cream. It is very plain to see that there are times during the year when the farmers have more work then they really can take care of and that time seems to be moreso when threshing and haying comes almost at the same time, like it has this year.

I want to urge upon you the necessity of delivering quality cream, not only now and then but try and do it the year around. We have patrons that cannot understand why they are not getting an X. Sometimes the patron is not to blame when weed flavors and thunder storms might cause his cream to be a lower grade but ordinarily you will find the trouble right at home. One of the main causes is neglecting your separator, that is, in washing it twice a day when in use. Sometimes you may think that this is not important, yet if you were to open your separator bowl in the morning, that had not been washed since separating the milk the evening before you would say that the looks and smell of it would not be what you had expected, especially in warm weather. Hot water and sunshine is what cleans and sterilizes your separator bowl as well as all utensils in which your milk and cream comes in contact with.

We now have some very good pamphlets on quality cream and it can be produced. We will be glad to give some for the asking. It does not hurt any of us to brush up on ourselves accasionally which in return will more then compensate us.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXXVI

JUDGING DAIRY COWS: As to whether a cow is capable of producing 100 or 200 or 300 or more pounds of butterfat a year can be judged very largely by he type. Good draft horses show what they are in their build. Good dairy cows show in their build also the work they are capable of doing, but it takes a trained and experienced eye to see it. Cows being the greatest producers of wealth where there are co-operative creameries, should be studied more than they are to judge their production.

Agricultural Fairs where dairy cows are exhibited afford a very good opportunity for a study of dairy type. Competent judges are always willing and anxious to explain the reasons for placing cows 1st, 2nd, 3rd, etc. Cows are judged from two standpoints—from the standpoint of the breed to which they belong, and from the standpoint of dairy production. Each dairy breed association has a standard as to what constitutes the most desirable type of that particular breed.

"Gate of the Gods"

It is the idea of the Chaldean and Platonic philosophers that the "gate of the gods" was located in Capricornus, says Nature Magazine. Through this gate souls released by death returned to heaven, while through the "gate of men" in the constellation of Cancer, souls descended from heaven in the bodies of men. The positions of these two "gates" correspond to the positions of the two solstices, winter and summer respectively.

Catalina Island Yields Many Ancient Treasures

Avalon, Santa Catalina Island, Cal.—An attempt to follow ancient trails to the long-lost island temple of Chinigchinich, the Sun God, has resulted instead in the discovery of the burial place of a small Indian princess of 3,000 years ago and evidence indicating that child sacrifices were made in wholesale fashion by tribes of the Channel Islands, off the coast of California.

Within a stone urn weighing 134 pounds and fashioned skillfully as though by modern tools was found the skeleton of an Indian girl between five and seven years. Her hands apparently had clutched the rim of an urn, whose rich ornamentation of wampum bespeaks her royal lineage.

In a circle with the urn as a center were counted by Prof. Ralph Glidden, curator of the Catalina museum of Channel Island Indians, the skeletons of 64 children buried in tiers four deep with small heads touching each other.

Beneath them was the skeleton of a seven-foot man. A spear blade still was fixed in the ribs.

The sand within the funeral urn had the appearance of ground crystal—apparently, according to the discoverer, a sacred sand used in the burial of Indian royalty—and was far different from that which had sifted over the graves of the other children.

These finds as well as a wealth of obsidian knives, spear points and arrow heads and hundreds of other articles of wampum-inlaid stone and bone have provided material over which Glidden has puzzled since he discovered them.

One thin piece of slate he believes to be a stone map, holes having been drilled to indicate trails to the four main burying grounds on Santa Catalina Island.

"It is plausible," Glidden said, "that the strange child burial within the urn and those surrounding it were the result of a natural death of a little girl of high rank and the slaying of 64 attendants and playmates with her. Or they all may have been killed in some religious ceremonial rite.

"It is even possible the princess may have been given some potion and buried alive. The way the small hands clutched the outer rim of the bowl makes this a possibility."

Wampum inlaid in four broken circles on the rim of the urn with "gates" leading to the four points of the compass lead Glidden to believe the burial place may be near the site of the temple of Chinigchinich.

Butter Stored for Winter

The Department of Agriculture says that for butter, to be stored for winter use, pasteurized sweet cream should be used, churned at a low temperature and the butter washed so that it will be firm and waxy. Rolls or prints of butter should be wrapped in parchment butter paper, placed in a stone crock, and covered with strong brine. Butter should be stored in as cool a place as is available and in a place free from odors likely to be absorbed by the butter.

Popular trio—three meals a day.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Up to this moment the two captives had kept silence. They had realized that they were mere pawns in the game, not supposed to act of their own initiative. However, they did not know what Barker wanted them to say. But when he denounced them they imagined he was playing a part and became suddenly eager to follow his lead. Consequently, when Go Ahead shifted his attack and centered attention on them with such bewildering suddenness, they burst into clamorous speech.

"We didn't!" they cried. "He's a liar, Jim. We never named your name."

A roar of laughter swept the crowd—chiefly from Barker's own adherents. Under its impact his always swarthy face grew actually black with anger. Toward the men he sprang.

But Go Ahead stepped in his way. "Hold on, sheriff," he protested. "I'm not questioning the right of a man to beat his own dog, and if these men told the truth when they said they were yours, go ahead. But if they lied—" Go Ahead paused suggestively.

"Lied? Of course they lied! I never saw them before." Barker was on the defensive—though he could not imagine how he had got there.

"Then I don't think you've got any right to manhandle them."

Barker squirmed. He felt confusedly that there was something wrong in Go Ahead's argument, but for the life of him he could not find the error. Incontinently he surrendered.

Around he looked, then called to one of his deputies, who was pressing toward him. "Hey, Miller," he ordered. "Take these horsethieves and lock them up."

Then, as the deputy caught hold of the bewildered men, Barker turned to Go Ahead. "Come into the office, will you?" he invited. "I'd like to get this story straight."

But Go Ahead shook his head. "Thanks," he said. "I'll drop in later. Just now Bob and I want to get something to eat. We're hungry. Guess we'll go to Bridget's and get some grub and a room."

"A room!" Barker's eyes bulged. Was it possible that this man had not yet discovered Bob's sex?

Go Ahead did not understand. With some perplexity he answered. "Why, yes," he said. "Bridget has rooms, hasn't she?"

"Yes. But you—you—you—" Barker broke off. He had meant to say—"Ain't married yet, are you?" but he caught himself just in time. Abruptly he realized that Stella did not look like a girl to anyone present except himself and to two or three others who knew the facts. He also realized that for him to recognize Fair's daughter would be to supply another thread for the web of evidence that seemed to be closing about him.

"Oh, sure, you can get rooms there," he agreed, hastily. "Drop in at the office any time when you get ready."

Go Ahead turned away, passing through the throng that opened for him and Bob. On its outskirts he brushed against Caesar, who, with the rest, was apparently looking on. Go Ahead stopped and looked at the negro as if the latter had asked him something.

"Haven't got time to talk horses now, boy," he said loudly. "If you've got any bring three or four around to Bridget's after dinner tonight." Then he walked on.

CHAPTER IX

Bridget's was built on the "system of units" plan. Originally a good-sized adobe building, it had been supplemented by frame and even by galvanized iron additions until it had taken on a nondescript, not to say heterogeneous, aspect.

When Go Ahead saw it he grinned. "Did somebody build it from the correspondence school directions in the Women's Home Chronicle telling how to build a house out of a soap box and a tin can?" he asked.

Stella's eyes widened. "Why!" she exclaimed, "I never thought of it in that way before; but that's just what it does look like." Then her innate loyalty to her friends got the better of her sense of humor. "I don't care," she protested, "it's clean, and the eats are good, and Bridget's a good sort. She's been mighty good to me, and I'm mighty fond of her."

"Good boy! Stand up for your friends. I hope she's got a room for us."

"I'll go in and see." Coloring faintly, Stella scurried around the side of the house, darted into the adobe section, from which appetizing odors were floating out upon the air, and precipitated herself into the arms of a comfortable looking Irish woman who was cooking at the stove. "Oh, Bridget, Bridget!" she cried. "I'm so glad to see you."

"Arrah! And is it yourself, mavourneen?" Bridget's arms closed about the slim form of the girl. "Sure, it's the long time since you've been in, so it is. . . . Ah! You needn't be tryin' to explain at all. It's meself that knows what's been goin' on. . . . Why, why, darlin'! What's after being the matter with ye?"

Stella was sobbing on the woman's motherly shoulders. "Oh, oh, Bridget!" she gulped. "I'm so miserable and so happy and so—so—"

"Whist, whist, child! That's enough for one bit. . . . Who is he, darlint?"

"He?" Stella tore herself free.

"Sure! Sure it's a man in it, there is. Whativer else should a girl be happy and miserable all at once for?"

Stella drew herself up. "You're all wrong, Bridget," she said, coldly. "I'm not a girl. I'm a man and—"

"Not a girl? Arrah! Ain't ye now? Think of that!"

"No, I'm not." Stella stamped her foot. "I'm a man—or a boy, anyway. And I'm going to stay one. I—I—Oh! Why won't the men let me alone?"

"Come Into the Office, Will You?" He Invited.

"God knows, dearie. But I'm thinkin' maybe it's just because they are men—the poor omadhouns. Who's been troublin' ye now? Barker?"

"No! Yes! Oh, it's too long to tell now. But Wade and Barker trapped me at the J. B. ranch this morning. And if Go Ahead hadn't come a—"

"Who come along?"

"Go Ahead. My cousin from the East. Dad sent for him—"

"Sure an' I know. Fair sent me word about him a month ago. It's a fine mouthfillin' name he's got. But I suppose he got it because he was most unlike it. Likely he turned out to be a lah-de-dah dude." The Irish woman dropped her eyelids to hide the twinkle.

"Dude! Dude!" Stella laughed scornfully. "Well, if you'd seen the way he handled Wade and Barker this morning and Barker again just now—Oh! I wish I had time to tell you all about him, but it would take me a week. But he's a real man and—and he's nice, too."

Bridget shrugged her mighty shoulders. "An' wouldn't anybody be nice to a pretty girl cousin the first time he sees her?" she scoffed.

"But I'm not pretty. And he doesn't dream that I'm a girl—and I'm not. I won't be a girl! And he mustn't know it if I am."

Bridget stood back and ran a shrewd, appraising eye over Stella's face and figure. "I'm thinkin' maybe it's right you are," she conceded. "It's a lot more like a rowdy boy than a girl you're lookin' right now. But in three months belike—or maybe in less— Well! It's not sayin', I am. An' as for pretty—but no matter about that. Where is this buckaroo of yours?"

"Out in front. He's looking for me—the Stella me, you know; and he doesn't know he's found me. He's come here to wait for word from dad where he's to meet me. But—but"—the girl's face crimsoned—"he says he wants a room—a room—for us, and—"

"And why not—"

"Bridget!"

Quills Long in Use

Quills are supposed to have been used for writing pens in the Fifth century, though the conjecture rests mainly on an anecdote of Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, who, being so illiterate that he could not write even the initials of his own name, was provided with a plate of gold through which the letters were cut, and, this being placed on the paper when his signature was required, he traced the letters with a quill. The date of the earliest certain account of the modern writing pen is 636. The next notice occurs in the latter part of the same century, in a Latin sonnet to a pen by Aldhelm, a Saxon author. Steel pens were first made by Wise in England, in 1803.

ALWAYS SOMETHING BETTER

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

"HURRY, Roberta," urged Rob's stepmother. "It's almost train time."

"If I don't get this dress finished in time for the party tonight I'll hang that old uncle of yours, Fanny." Rob put her sewing down reluctantly. "I'll wear my blue linen. Jen said her cousin was coming down early."

"Well, even if you should miss the party it couldn't be helped. Just remember that line up there on the wall."

"Rob's eye caught the line, a little framed motto:

"Nothing passes me by in life but to give place to something better."

Those words had been cited to her with each girlish hope she had ever had defeated. To Rob nothing could be better than going to Jen's party that she was giving for her wealthy cousin, Jerry Hodges.

When she passed Jen's house they were stringing Japanese lanterns across the lawn. Rob was fairly tingling with anticipation when she found that something was wrong with one of the tires. Rob had never been intimately acquainted with automobiles. Their car was a very recent addition to the family's few possessions. The Dicksons had lived in an apartment until last year, when immediately after Rob's graduation they had come to live on a farm for the sake of Fanny's health.

Rob was very near to bursting into tears when a car appeared over the hill. It was a long car, glistening in the summer sun—yellow as a canary. Rob gulped against her tears and signaled it frantically. But, like a startled bird, it shot by. All that Rob received was a cold, indifferent stare from its lone occupant.

"Nothing," she affirmed dramatically to a red robin on a bush across the fence, "passes me by in life but to give place to something better!"

Another car was coming down the slope. Rob made no effort to signal it. She got squarely in its way.

"Could you tell me what to do first?" she asked when it stopped with a squealing of brakes.

"One usually gets out his jack first," informed the stranger, eyeing her prostrate tire. "We'll use mine—I keep it handy!" He got out, dragging a batch of tools with him. His clothes were dusty; his car, a high-powered roadster, was mud-spattered.

"I've got to meet a train in Whitley," Rob explained, "and this is my first tire trouble."

"Like sorrow, though it comes to all."

His voice, she noted, was full and low—like Doctor Dan's. His eyes were tired, though Rob saw that they brightened when he looked at her. She was glad she had worn the blue linen. The sun was merciless, but she looked as cool as a blue stretch of April sky. She stood watching him as he attacked the wheel. His shoulders were broad, his neck tanned to a red brown.

"When is your train due?" he asked.

"At 2:30. There's only one each way a day, and they're usually late."

He looked at his watch. "You've got time, even if it isn't. One hates to miss a train, though. Nothing makes me madder."

"Unless it is to have to meet one when you don't want to!" said Rob vehemently. "When you have to leave the dress you are making over to wear to the one party, perhaps, of your life—to go and meet your stepmother's uncle."

The man worked in silence for a minute; then he looked up at her. Rob noticed then that he was young.

"Why the 'perhaps—the one party, perhaps, of your life?'"

Rob flushed. She had not known men were so perceptive. She felt that he almost read her dreams about Jerry Hodges. (She and Jen had talked from the depths of their girlish hearts. "Jerry is crazy over your type, Rob!" Jen had said. Wasn't that seed enough to grow dreams from?"

"This uncle," Rob evaded, "is dropping out of the sky. Fanny, my stepmother, never saw him before. It isn't even like having a rich relative come—you could afford to break your neck then! But this Jimmie Ladd is poor—Fanny says the Ladds were always camping on the poorhouse grounds awaiting their turn to go in!"

He chuckled at her joke. "But you didn't tell me about the party—that's what I'm interested in!"

"It's just a party one of my neighbors is giving. They have a beautiful place, and Jen always gives the darlingest parties!"

"But that 'perhaps'—what kind of a fellow is he?"

Rob giggled. "If you've got to know, he is Jen's cousin who's coming from Fort Slater today!"

The young man took the extra off the rack, placing the old one on in its stead. His face was hot and the perspiration dripped from his brows.

"Oh, I hate for you to do this!" cried Rob. "Can't I help?"

"You are helping. Nothing warms a man's heart—or cools it—like the little confidences of a woman!"

Again Rob flushed. (Her loquacity was a family joke.)

"Well, she's on!" he announced suddenly, and looked at his watch. "Fifteen minutes—you ought to make it!"

"I can't thank you enough!" cried Rob, gratefully. She sprang into her car and started the engine. He smiled, taking off his hat to her as she shot the car forward. Funny, thought Rob, how a stranger would take such an interest in a country party!

Rob reached the station three minutes before the train arrived. But Fanny's uncle did not come. The telegram to Fanny had read:

"Will be in Whitley Wednesday, 9th. Bill Streeter told me your whereabouts."

Bill Streeter, Jen's star admirer, had recently gone to Nevada, from which place the message came. Well, this was Wednesday, 9th, but he did not come. Rob turned away from the station with a shrug—her way of dismissing uninvited stepuncles!

Going home Rob's thoughts were on the young man who had worked on her car. His voice, his kind brown eyes with the lines of weariness about them. She would never forget him—even if she should meet Jen's cousin.

Nearing Jen's she saw that a long car, glistening in the summer sun—yellow as a canary—stood at the gate. Jen, on the lawn, with a tall, slim stranger, signaled frantically for Rob to stop. But, like a startled bird, Rob shot by. At home Fanny met her.

"I'm not going to the party tonight, Fanny."

Fanny's mouth fell open at this startling news.

"I forgot to tell you," Rob added, "that your uncle didn't come. Now, isn't that like—"

"S-sh!" warned Fanny. "He's already here—his car's at the back, and he's lying down on the couch to rest. I didn't remember how old Jimmie was—but he was the last of Grandma Ladd's family."

"And you're not going to the party, Rob? Come and tell me about it! said a voice—full and low, like Doctor Dan's.

Rob's face went white.

"Roberta Dickson, you got too hot!" scolded Fanny.

Rob heard him spring from the couch and cross to the door.

"Come on in here, Rob, and be a sport!" He took her by the arm.

"Why didn't you tell me—save me a trip to town?" she bantered.

"Oh, it's a shame the way I talked to you!' She hid her face and wept.

"What on earth, Roberta, have you done?" exclaimed Fanny.

"Not a thing, Famy dear!" assured Jimmie Ladd. "You run along and leave her to me. . . . Don't cry, Rob! I'm the happiest fellow in the world—since you're not going to the party to meet Jen's cousin! Look; do you know who this is?"

He held before her a snapshot of her own self, taken at Jen's.

"Bill Streeter gave me that—and I came all the way from Nevada because of it." He wanted to add: "And, although I am a Ladd, I am clear across the continent from the poorhouse!" but he saved that for a later surprise and contented himself with coaxing a smile into Rob's blushing face.

Community in Sicily Unchanged by Time

Sicily for ages has been the meeting place and battleground of the races that contributed to civilize the West. It was on this island that the Greeks measured their strength against Phoenicia. Here Carthage fought her first duel against Rome. The ancients are gone, even their descendants are no more—except one colony which still survives.

Remotely situated on a high plain, isolated in the mountains, is a little Albanian community which has preserved its earliest traditions. Rarely marrying outside their own settlement, these people have maintained their racial characteristics and are pure-blooded descendants of the ancient Greeks. Piano dei Greci, as the little town is called, may be reached by motor car from Palermo. The distance is not great, but the road is very bad and at times the ascent is steep.

Surrounded by islanders, all of whom are Sicilians, speaking the language of Italy and in religion Roman Catholics, these people have their own language, which closely resembles the ancient Greek, and in religion cling to the Greek Orthodox church. They are a proud, fair-skinned people, many with blond hair and blue eyes. I have seen among them some of the prettiest children I have observed anywhere in Italy.

On fete days the women don a curious garb, wearing brightly colored gowns. The belts, which constitute the most conspicuous part of their attire, are heirlooms of solid gold or silver and represent the dowry which goes with an unmarried girl and is cherished during her married life as one of her dearest possessions. The gowns, also worn as wedding dresses, are made of costly silks, beautifully embroidered. Adorned with antique jewelry, they represent small fortunes and are handed down from one generation to another.—From "Seeing Italy," by E. M. Newman.

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helps Her So Much

Cleveland, Ohio.—"I sure recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman in the condition I was in. I was so weak and run-down that I could hardly stand up. I could not eat and was full of misery. A friend living on Arcade Avenue told me about this medicine and after taking ten bottles my weakness and nervousness are all gone. I feel like living again. I am still taking it until I feel strong like before. You may use this letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. ELIZABETH TOSO, 14913 Hale Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

PARIS IS ALARMED FOR FASHION TRADE

Style Fixers Realize They Must Please America.

Paris.—There must be a new method established in the creation of French styles for the United States and South America.

That is the opinion of M. Rene Herbst, president of the Society of Modern Decorators, who is spreading propaganda for the creation of special establishments throughout the world for the presentation of French models.

He is not alone in his belief, and the French style-fixers are ready to contribute a fund of several million francs to protect their interests abroad. They have been considerably alarmed, they admit, during the last few years by the tendency of American dressmakers, milliners, and interior decorators to take the French motifs and adapt them to the particular needs of their own country.

During the winter, several groups of French business men are to visit the principal cities of both the Americas. They are to study American methods and American needs. Whether they will be able to meet both without ruining their own artistic pride, according to one prominent French writer, is the question that is worrying them most.

"But we are losing several million francs of commerce every year simply because do not give exactly what the clients want," is the argument behind the new movement. "We are too proud of our own ideas, and unless we grant some leeway to the creative genius of other nations, France's luxury trade is certain to suffer seriously during the next few years."

One-Way Traffic Plan Is Failure in London

London.—One-way traffic may be all right for American cities, but in London it has been tried and found wanting. Two committees on the traffic of London, the police committee and the streets committee have both reported that the one-way street system is "not suitable" for London.

A three months' trial period has just ended, during which certain heavily traveled streets have carried traffic in one direction only. After weighing the results of the experiment, it was decided that the one-way system slowed up London traffic instead of increasing its speed.

The peculiar arrangement of London is blamed for the inability to apply the one-way system. Whereas most American cities are laid out more or less on the gridiron system, London is a maze of twisting streets, more like a series of concentric circles connected by spokes with the Thames as diameter than anything else. The failure of the one-way plan leaves London authorities up against the question once again of trying to find some solution for untangling the most complicated traffic in the world.

Turpentine Soaked Girl Burns Self to Death

New York.—Apparently disappointed in love, Miss Louisa Amelia de Hostos, thirty-eight years old, set herself afire in her upper west side apartment and died at Harlem hospital. Miss de Hostos, said by a friend to be the daughter of Eugenia de Hostos, a Porto Rican educator for whom a monument has been erected in San Juan, came to New York to seek a career as an author. At the hospital it was said she had saturated her clothing with turpentine and, after climbing into the bathtub, had applied a match.

Quits Sea for Cabbage

New York.—After 28 years at sea Capt. Sir James Charles, commander of the Aquitania, is on his last voyage. He is retiring to grow cabbage, he says.

Squash Played 2,000 Years Ago in Yucatan

New Orleans.—Evidence that a game similar to squash was played by natives of Yucatan 2,000 years ago was found by a Tulane university expedition, which returned from an exploring trip through Central America and Mexico.

Dr. Frans Blom of the department of middle-American research of Tulane, who headed the expedition, said he found courts upon which the game had been played by the ancient Mayan tribes. The courts still were in excellent repair, he said, and there could be no mistake about what they were used for.

The game apparently had been played with rubber balls which had been knocked back and forth across the court with something similar to rackets. Heretofore, Doctor Blom explained, it had been thought such games had not been played in that section earlier than 1,000 or 1,200 years ago.

PHANTOM ISLE STILL MYSTERY OF TROPICS

Sailors Tell of Paradise of South Pacific.

New York.—For nearly eighty years sea captains have talked of the existence of a "lost" island somewhere in the south Pacific, a lonely paradise of green palms, gleaming beaches of powdered coral and blue lagoons, all guarded by a ring of saw-toothed reefs over which the tortured sea boils in sheets of foam.

Passing ships have reported it lying low in the turquoise sea like an emerald, but when the hydrographers have tried to locate and chart it they have found nothing but the empty ocean.

Some persons have regarded it as a myth, others as one of the strange phantoms of the sea, while the more practical ones have declared it to have been one of the floating islands not uncommon in tropical waters. A few believe it to be so low lying in the sea that it is easy to miss.

Reported in 1859.

It was first reported in 1859, and one year later the United States corvette Levant dropped out of sight forever on her way from Hilo to Panama. There was some reason to suppose that she went to look for the island, for, while the corvette was in port at Honolulu in June, 1860, Lieutenant Stout, her executive officer, expressed great interest in the island and talked with several merchant captains about its probable location.

The Levant was heading southeast when she left Hilo and sailing a course which, if continued, would take her across the equator and into the latitude of the mysterious island.

Basis for Tale.

It was partly around the Levant that Edward Everett Hale wove his imaginary tale of "The Man Without a Country," in which he prophetically wrote of the foundering of the warship, but fixed the date nearly three years later than her actual disappearance, naming the time of Nolan's death on the Levant, after fifty years of voyaging and transfers from ship to ship, as May 11, 1863, in latitude 2 degrees 11 minutes south and longitude 131 west, somewhere near 1,500 to 2,000 miles southeast of Honolulu.

On that date the Levant had in all probability been lying at the bottom of the sea for nearly three years, as she left Hilo in August, 1860, and vanished.

No vessel ever spoke to her at sea after she disappeared into the regions of the trade winds. While at Honolulu, Lieutenant Stout, with much pride, showed to his ship's visitors the stateroom Phillip Nolan was supposed to have occupied.

Fires Forest to Kill Girl Who Jilted Him

Toronto, Ont.—The story of an Indian who set fire to a forest in which the maid who jilted him had fled with his rival, came from the north woods recently.

Capt. Roy Maxwell, director of the provincial air service, told the story in describing the work of his department, part of which was to aid the royal Canadian mounted police in capturing the smitten Indian.

The Indian had been singing love songs to a girl of his race. She jilted him and fled with another suitor into the woods. Following them, the rejected suitor waited until the couple entered a forest area in the Lake Savant region. Then he methodically set to work to fire the whole area. A forest ranger surprised him at the task and extinguished the several fires the Indian had set. The brave escaped.

Enlisting the aid of the air service, the royal Canadian mounted flew into the wilderness to the Indian's camp and arrested him.

Volunteers Replace Professional Models

Paris.—Professional artist models are dying out as a class in this citadel of art. Never before have there been so many artists in Paris, so many schools and so many galleries; but models, particularly women, are a vanishing race.

With a few rare exceptions, the professionals have been replaced by an anonymous crowd of out-of-work manikins from dressmaking establishments, chorus girls and, above all, by disinterested persons devoted to the cause of art.

Art is so much the fashion that painters and sculptors often find their choice of models limited only by the list of their acquaintances. Many American girls, well educated, of good families, consider it an honor to pose in the studios of Montparnasse and Montmartre.

Dig Up Ruined City

Gibraltar.—A group of archeologists have obtained financial backing for a plan to excavate the ancient city of Cartela. Interest in the project was first touched last year when a Spaniard accidentally discovered a Roman sarcophagus and other evidence of ancient habitation.

Hens Not Wanted

Atlantic City, N. J.—"Visitors to this resort do not come here to hear cackling hens and crowing roosters," asserted Recorder Corio in imposing a fine upon a citizen who had started a small poultry yard within the limits of the city.

REAL LUXURY FOR THE BRITISH TAR

New Battleship Nelson Has Even a Soda Fountain.

London.—H. M. S. Nelson, the newest addition to the British navy, is equipped with a soda fountain. Aside from the armament, she has many other points of interest which would surprise the tars who sailed the seven seas 100 years ago.

In her domestic arrangements the Nelson sets a new standard. When going to sea she takes along 1,600 gallons of rum, 150,000 pounds of flour, 42,000 pounds of sugar, 7,000 pounds of tea, 43,000 tins of condensed milk, 20,000 pounds of frozen meat, 40,000 pounds of vegetables, 5,000 pounds of tobacco and 10,000 pounds of soap. In addition she carries large quantities of fresh meat and other consumable stores.

The catering department of the Nelson is equal in its equipment and organization to that of a first-class hotel. The men's meals are prepared by a staff of expert cooks in kitchens that have all sorts of modern electrical appliances. In the bakery all the work is done by machinery and the food is not handled.

The mess decks where the crew live are lighted by scuttles instead of artificial light, which is used in most warships. Every section of the crew has its own bathrooms.

There are comfortable recreation rooms supplied with papers and magazines for the use of the men who are off duty and there is a well-stocked general shop at which the men buy whatever they need. Moving picture entertainments are provided for them and there is a fairly large chapel.

Modest English Maiden Heiress to $100,000,000

London.—Gladys Yule, twenty-four, the shy and little-known daughter of Sir David Yule, a merchant of Calcutta, is expected to become the richest heiress in the United Kingdom through the death of her father recently. His estate is estimated at $100,000,000.

Miss Yule and her mother, Lady Yule, the only daughter of the late Andrew Yule of Calcutta, live in the cathedral town of St. Albans. She is known to be fond of hunting and visited northern Alaska and the Klondike with her mother.

Sir David controlled 80 companies, most of which he had built up himself. He was a Scotchman, born in Edinburgh. He worked in his offices in his shirt sleeves and disliked being regarded as a millionaire. He frequently bestowed as much as $250,000 at a time on various charities, always with the understanding that his identity be not disclosed.

Nebraska University to Display Fossils

Lincoln, Neb.—At the University of Nebraska a setting is being created for the display of fossils of elephants, tortoises and armadilloes many millions of years old. These were found at Niobrara in the valley of the Platte river in western Nebraska. Because of the soft sandstone in that region, parts of the bones were left visible—a circumstance facilitating the task of collecting them.

The bones vary in size from the skull of a mammoth to the skeleton of a shrew, the smallest of mammals. The elephant serves as the keynote for the entire exhibit, ten different kinds of elephants having been found in Nebraska.

Last Indian Rodeo Staged by Old Chief

Falls City, Neb.—An eighty-year old Indian chieftain has seen his last rodeo swing into progress with hundreds of Indians from eight tribes participating.

For nearly a score of years Chief White Cloud has conducted his annual "educational rodeo." He has taken pride in the claim that "his show" is the only one truly characterizing the Indians of America before the advent of white settlers.

But the old chief brought together his rodeo equipment for the last time this year. He doesn't know how long ago he passed the eighty mark, but he is satisfied he will not continue his enterprise another season.

Stimulated by White Cloud's announcement that he is through with the rodeo business, the affair this year was one of the old Indian's greatest. From Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska members of the various tribes assembled to take part in the last "true rodeo."

Hundreds of Indian warriors with their squaws and their papooses assembled to don their war paint, lose every possible vestige of civilization and take a whole-hearted part in the celebration of Chief White Cloud's retirement.

Boxwood Shrub Sells for Neat Little Sum

More than a century and a half ago a tiny boxwood was planted on the grounds of King George's tavern near Tripoli, Pa. After having grown through all that time into a sturdy and imposing shrub, it was purchased recently by Robert P. Hutchinson, president of the Bethlehem Steel Fabricators, and removed by motor truck to his spacious estate, "Kendridge," at Macada, Pa., where it is one of countless choice specimens of trees and shrubs.

The plant stands 13 feet high and has a circumference of 66 feet. To remove it required a week's careful work. The load, including soil, when the transfer was made, was about 25 tons. It is said that the financial consideration was close to $400.

Copping

Little Anne with her father, mother and small brother, Dick, drew up to a gas station on one of their travels. Against one wall on a chair tipped back lounged a policeman half asleep.

Dick immediately asked, "Anne, what's he doin'?"

Anne thought for a moment, then answered, "Don't you know what he's doin'?"

On receiving a negative reply from Dick, she continued in a voice so full of scorn that it nearly wilted her small brother with his youthful ignorance, "Can't you see? He's busy copping!"

ATWATER KENT RADIO

Of course you're going to hear Hoover and Smith

THANKS to radio, they expect to talk directly to every voter in the United States. Where is the family that can afford to be without a good radio set in this most interesting of Presidential years?

When Smith and Hoover go on the air, you can count on Atwater Kent Radio. Its reliability, its power, its range, its simplicity of operation, as well as its clear tone, have made it the leader everywhere. It comes from the largest radio factory, where workmanship is never slighted. It is not an experiment. You don't have to take it on faith. It is the fruit of twenty-six years' manufacturing experience—six years of radio.

Nearly 1,700,000 owners know that the name Atwater Kent on radio means the same thing as "sterling" on silver.

Whether or not your home is equipped with electricity, there is an up-to-date Atwater Kent model to carry on the Atwater Kent tradition of giving the finest reception at the lowest price.

The Atwater Kent electric sets require no batteries. A cord from the compact, satin-finished cabinet plugs into any convenient lamp socket and the current costs only about as much as the lighting of one 40-watt lamp.

MODEL 40 A. C. set. For 110-120 volt, 50-60 cycle alternating current. Requires six A. C. tubes and one rectifying tube, $77. Also Model 42, with automatic voltage regulator, $86, and Model 44, an extra-powerful "distance" set, $106.

The Atwater Kent battery sets have won their reputation for fine performance in 1,400,000 homes—and now both models are again improved for 1929.

From the orange orchards of Southern California to the potato fields of Maine, Atwater Kent Radio is far and away the preferred choice of rural families. The nearest Atwater Kent dealer will gladly show you why, and will advise you in your selection of the model best suited to your needs.

Campaign year! You'll need good radio as you never did before!

BATTERY SETS $49—$68

Solid mahogany cabinets. Panels satin-finished in gold. Model 48, $49; Model 49, extra-powerful, $68. Prices do not include tubes or batteries.

Smaller Pig Crop Will Increase Farm Earnings

While farmers will have fewer hogs to sell in the coming year than in the last one, prices are likely to be enough higher to bring an increase in total returns, says the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. This conclusion is based on a study of the record for the last six years in which the smaller the number marketed, the larger the amount received.

In the hog year ending October 31, 1924, for example, 52,876,000 head were sold to packers for slaughter under federal inspection for which they paid $897,000,000. Two years later, in the 1925-1926 hog year, only 40,812,000 head were sold but packers paid $1,019,000,000 for them. Twenty-three per cent fewer hogs sold for 33 per cent more money. In 1926-1927, slaughter increased to 43,080,000 head and cost to packers fell to $1,061,000,000. An additional increase in marketing occurred in the present hog year and total live cost diminished further.

Seven per cent fewer pigs were raised in the spring of 1928 than in the spring of 1927, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. The reduction, which amounts to about 4,000,000 head in the entire country and to over 3,000,000 head in the corn belt states, will cause a decrease in market receipts in the fall and winter of 1928-1929. In addition, farmers' plans indicate a decrease of 7 to 15 per cent in the 1928 fall pig crop which will determine the market supply in the spring and summer of 1929. These reductions are due to low prices for hogs and the unfavorable ratio between prices of hogs and corn in the past year.

Hog prices abroad have been quite unprofitable in relation to feed costs since early in 1927. Production is being curtailed and foreign demand for American hog products probably will increase during the coming year. In fact, some increase in exports of hog products has occurred already, although foreign hog markets are still heavily supplied.

With fewer hogs to be fattened and indications of an increased corn crop, the ratio between prices of hogs and of corn is likely to become profitable for feeders during the coming year. If so, farmers will be tempted to increase their herds once more. The experience of the last half dozen years shows, however, that such a procedure is likely to reduce not only prices but the total income from hogs. It may make the hog market of 1930 repeat the events of 1927.

If a small pig crop sells for more than a large crop, then a small crop is the sort to raise, the Foundation points out. This tendency is not the fault of the market machinery, but is due to the inelasticity of demand. A disproportionate decline in prices is necessary in order to bring about enough increase in consumption to use up the larger amount of product.

GAS TAX AMENDMENT WILL HELP ALL THE COUNTIES

Every county in the state will receive a substantial sum from the proceeds of the gosoline tax to aid in the development of the secondary roads if Amendment No. 1 passes, members of the committee urging its passage pointed out this week.

The amendment would take a third of the proceeds from the tax out of the trunk highway fund and place it in the state road and bridge fund, from which it would be distributed out to 87 counties for use on local or secondary roads that are not included in the trunk highway system.

What this means to the individual counties was suggested by reference to the gasoline tax figures for 1927. One third of the gasoline tax for 1927 amounted in round figures $1,800,000. Had the proposed amendment been in effect that year, each county would have received under the laws governing distribution of the road and bridge fund not less than $18,000 from the gasoline tax for its secondary roads and might have received as much as $54,000.

If the amendment passes, the amount available for distribution to the counties for local roads will be approximately twice that which the state now apportions out to the counties from the state road and bridge fund. The one mill tax now bring in about $2,000,000, which is distributed out to the counties, each receiving not less than 1 per cent and not more than 3 per cent of the fund.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXXIX

DAIRY TYPE: A simple rule for judging the production of a dairy cow may be stated in two questions—first, how much feed will the cow consume, and—second, what will she do with her feed—make milk or meat? A cow cannot do both at the same time profitably. A cow with a tendency to fatten up generally dries up at the same time.

Make no mistake. A cow that is a big producer must be a big feeder and this shows in a broad, strong muzzle and a deep, wide barrel—in other words, great capacity. Good digestion and assimilation is indicated by a soft pliable skin.

Dairy temperament, or a tendedcy to convert feed into milk rather than meat, is indicated by a prominent spinal column pr back bone, and a wedge shape rather than a blocky form. It is indicated by a refined yet vigorous and alert make-up. The production of 30 to 60 pounds of milk a day is big work and requires vitality and nerve force.

LUTHER LEAGUE CONVENTION SATURDAY AND SUNDAY

Luther Leaguers and friends from the Thief River Falls and Crookston circuits of the Norwegian Lutheran church will meet at Thief River Falls, Saturday and Sunday evenings, Sept. 29th and 30th in joint convention.

Saturday evening representatives from the two circuits will give the keynote of the meeting.

The Sunday program will open with Rev. M. Notvedt, professor at Concordia College, Moorhead, delivering the sermon Sunday morning, assisted by Rev. Axel Shefveland of Thief River Falls. The convention rally begins at 2:30 in the afternoon. Rev. H. L. Glenn of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., will deliver the principal address.

In the evening will be the grand choral concert by the choirs of the two districts under the direction of Rev. A.L. Swenson of Baudette.

The Holt Senior choir will sing in this program.

The two districts will meet in business sessions immediately following the close of the Saturday evening session. Each congregation is entitled to two delegates. There are about sixty congregations in the two circuits. Rev. O. G. Birkeland of Roseau is president of the Thief River Falls circuit, and Rev. Strand of Warren heads the Crookston circuit.

NORTHWEST SCHOOL OPENS MONDAY, OCTOBER 1

The fall term at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston will open Monday, October 1, with the larges enrollment in the history of the institution. According to E. R. Clark, acting registrar, all dormitories will be taxed to capacity.

Faculty members are arriving for the first faculty meeting of the year which will be held Saturday, September 29. Superintendent A. A. Dowell announces two new staff members: S. A. Anderson, a graduate of the University of Illinois, who will replace Howard C. Rutt; and John W. Mliner, from the University of Minnesota, who will teach courses formerly offered by A. H. Larson, now on leave for graduate study.

The year's activities open with the faculty party at the Superintendent's residence on Saturday evening. Monday, October 1, is given over to registration. Dormitories will be ready for the students early that day, and the first meal in the dining hall will be served at noon. Classes begin at 8:15 on Tuesday. Students have already enrolled from every county in northwestern Minnesota with a number from outside points.

Soldiers Must Save

All Peruvian soldiers are required by a new decree of the war ministry to maintain a savings account, into which each puts S.50, the equivalent of 20 cents United States currency, weekly. This is one-fifth their pay. Cadets must deposit half this amount. All money saved is turned over to the soldier when he quits the service.

MOST people know this absolute antidote for pain, but are you careful to say Bayer when you buy it? And do you always give a glance to see Bayer on the box—and the word genuine printed in red? It isn't the genuine Bayer Aspirin without it! A drugstore always has Bayer, with the proven directions tucked in every box:

Bayer-Tablets of Aspirin

ST. LOUIS IS PAYING ITS DEBT TO LINDY

Building Municipal Airport at Cost of $2,000,000.

St. Louis.—St. Louis has begun to liquidate its debt of gratitude to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, which largely will be repaid with the completion of the new $2,000,000 municipal airport.

Hardly had the ink dried on the tabulation sheets of the recent vote on airport bonds before construction work had begun. The favorable vote of nearly 5 to 1 was a tribute to the aviation activities of Lindbergh, whose epochal flight to Paris was financed by St. Louisans.

The airdrome will be the equal of any in the world, its builders claim. The field contains 603 acres—more than a square mile—and will have a passenger terminal of proportions that a year ago would have astounded the most air-minded of voters.

The passenger station will have waiting rooms, a safe, roof garden and a shed [illegible] feet wide where planes will take on and discharge passengers. High above it will rise a control tower, office of the field dispatcher. There also will be offices for flying field executives.

Hangars, machine shops and buildings for radio and photographic work will be other structures in connection with the airdrome. Two airplane manufacturing companies already are building factories on the field.

The low purchase price of land, adjacent to the Lambert-St. Louis field, which is the nucleus of the new airport, will permit more than $1,500,000 of the $2,000,000 to be spent on runways and buildings.

There will be four runways, almost a mile long and 200 yards wide. They will permit planes of any size to land or take off from any of the eight points of the compass.

Besides accommodations for commercial companies there will be hangars and machine shops for the reserve officers corps flying squadron and the naval reserve flying squadron.

Arrests Himself 108th Time for Intoxication

Orange, N. J.—Nicholas Verkovitz, forty-eight years old, who is one of the best carpenters in the Oranges and a Russian nobleman on the side, ran his string of arrests for intoxicants up to 108 the other day.

The Romanoff, as his papers are said to prove him to be, is now an American citizen. He always calls on himself as a citizen to arrest himself as a law violator when he drinks too much. On this occasion, as usual, he took himself in his own custody to the Orange police headquarters and there surrendered his prisoner, preferring against him a well-founded charge of intoxication.

The one-time aristocrat appeared in court as a combined plaintiff and defendent, testifying against the accused, but at the same time asking for leniency on his behalf and suggested that he be paroled in his own custody. But the court held that 108 times were too many.

"Thirty days in jail," said Judge Davis. "That is what I promised you the last time you were here."

New Heart Remedy

Paris.—A new drug for treating affections of the heart has been obtained from a common African plant of the order of the milkweed by a French chemist, Rene Hamet. It is a glucoside to which the name uzarine has been given.

"Tough Racket"

New York.—Mrs. Edith M. Baker thirty-five, widow, is engaged in a "tough racket." That's what she calls taxi driving, her occupation. She does it to keep her sixteen-year-old boy in school.

Ancient Stone Lion Still Rules Babylon

Babylon, Mesopotamia.—The Lion of Babylon still broods over the ruins of the once mighty city. Carved solidly in stone and resting heavily on its haunches, the beast gazes impassively on the remnants of the dead metropolis.

Members of the Field museum-Oxford university joint expedition visited the ruins at the conclusion of their season's work of excavating the neighboring city of Kish, near the Euphrates. Kish was the first city founded after the biblical flood, ancient inscriptions declare.

Near the lion is the great pyramid mound in Borsippa, in a suburb of Babylon. With its seven stages, this is said to be one of the possible sites of the tower of Babel mentioned in Genesis.

Also close to the ponderous leonine figure are the ruins of El-Kasr, said to have been the palace of Nebuchadnezzar, ruler when Babylon was at the summit of its glory.

Beneath the figure of the lion lies a human shape, whether man or woman no one knows, and none can tell the significance of the two except to suggest that the Lion of Babylon is crushing the rest of mankind.

CAMEL PROFITABLE FOR NEW YORK ZOO

Carries Children and Has Earned Much Money.

New York.—Mogul, the white dromedary camel (camelus dromedarius), who is eight years old and weighs 1,600 pounds, is the only self-supporting member of the Bronx Zoological garden family. Few of the thousands of rare animals in the zoo contribute much else besides their presence to their board and lodging. This camel is a grand mogul of finance as well as in name.

The method Mogul employs in earning his fodder is to play taxi for the thousands of little children who daily come to the zoological park.

His keeper used to allow the little tots to climb up and take rides at will, but demands for a camel walk with Mogul became so great that park officials had to devise some means of dispensing the shaggy fellow's popularity.

Carries Six Youngsters.

Mogul carries six kiddies at a time on the two-sided Irish jaunting seat which was rigged up to fit his single dromedary hump. The charge is ten cents and hundreds ride weekly. Mogul operates from May to September, resting on Mondays. The other seven months he vacations in the antelope house.

The sway-backed giant has had an unique military career in the antipodes. Several years ago, before coming to New York, he was honorably discharged from the British army. He was in the Anzac transportation forces over the desert lands of Australia. Mogul, however, is a native of northern Africa.

William T. Cully, Mogul's keeper, said that his charge in three years had earned between three and five thousand dollars for the zoo. He cost $1,000, and seems to have paid for himself several times over.

Goes Without Water.

Mogul is a vegetarian, and, in true camel fashion, has been known to stay off the water wagon for eight days running. His two toenails on each foot have to be manicured about once a month by the keeper. This leisurely camel has an amiable disposition and plods about all day, chewing his cud and occasionally giving vent to his camel chuckle, which sounds like some one gurgling water.

At night, after a profitable day, Mogul doubles his legs under his haunches and retires comfortably on his nature provided, skin padded shock absorbers.

Mogul has proven a good investment, and a considerable clientele patronize his cantering delights when their parents bring them to the zoo. Alice, the aged elephant, was his only rival until she was retired from passenger service two years ago.

Small Tennessee Farm Makes Profit on Sheep

Alamo, Tenn. — Eth Humphreys, farmer, $500 richer this year from the sale of wool and lambs, has aroused the interest of his neighbors with the declaration that a profitable sheep-raising business may be started on Tennessee farms for an initial outlay less than $300.

Speaking of his own experience, Humphreys recalls that with very little investment he has built up a business in which the value of half the lambs he raises is equal to the cost of keeping the entire flock. He attributes his success to careful selection of stock and the provision of suitable grazing and housing. Registered rams and high-grade ewes were the nucleus of his flock.

About twenty ewes and one sire, he says, is best for the small farmer who starts a sheep-raising enterprise. Greater profits will be shown, he believes, if the farmer raises his own feed, or at least most of it.

Bird in London Zoo Contracts Tea Habit

London.—Americans know how universal is the tea habit in England—that every one, from plasterer to prime minister, from charwoman to chess champion, takes time out every day for tea. The custom is now spreading to animals. Family pets, cats, dogs, parrots and canaries, are often given tea instead of water.

London's champion animal tea drinker is said to be a bird at the zoo—a rare species called the touraco or plantain eater. This touraco, that has been christened Doctor Johnson, insists on tea with every meal, and has given up water entirely.

Donates Sum to Paint Farmhouses of Sweden

Stockholm.—A donation of $1,500 worth of red paint has just been received by the Lapland Local Geography society. The anonymous donor has specified that the paint be used to coat the farmhouses along the Torne river valley in northernmost Sweden so that they may contrast gayly with the drab homesteads in Finland across the border. The society has accepted the gift and distributed it among the settlers who are now busy painting the towns red.

Convicts Inventor

New York. — John Weisinger invented a device which records the speed of an automobile by perforations on paper. He was testing it when arrested for speeding, and the invention, introduced as evidence, caused his conviction.

FARMERS ARE BUSY UP IN NEW ENGLAND

Get Tourists' Money by Roadside Enterprise.

Portland, Maine.—The New England farmer, long hiding his gift for advertising, has kicked over the well-known bucket and set his light on the highway. There it shines in fantastic fashion, illuminating a new order of agriculture.

Its outward garb is an elaborate system of signs, picturesque placards and posters, that swamp the road-weary traveler. They fairly shriek the excellence of roadside comestibles. Artistic, grotesque or merely present, they strive for a common end—assiduous harvesting of the tourist crop.

And the avidity with which the rural Easterner attends to business attests the efficacy of his art as an advertiser. From dawn until long after dark, hands that once steadied the plow handle cut eager circles with the handle of a gas pump. Voices that once cajoled the sweat-flecked and recalcitrant steed now vent their persuasive power on the stranger who seeks rest and refreshment.

Why swelter through a midsummer day in the hayfield, argues the farmer with profitable materialism, when the passing throng clamors to shed ready cash for buttermilk and watermelons?

Each year finds increasingly large numbers of farmers branching out into roadside enterprises. The ingenuity that formerly went into wrestling with the routine of the Pilgrims now is called upon to halt and hold the prospective patron of country cuisine.

So large that those who speed may read, so ambitious in design, and so heroic in expression that none pass unnoticed, the farmers' "ads" lure the hungry, the tired and the merely curious with inescapable appeal.

Japanese Railways Give Women Employees Vote

Tokyo.—The first step toward the realization of woman suffrage in Japan was taken recently by the imperial government railways. The officials decided to grant all employees, regardless of sex, who are more than eighteen years old, the right to vote for the election of members of the railway committee on improvement and treatment of employees.

Although this is limited to those employed on the railways, suffrage leaders are of the opinion that it will have a favorable influence on the country and that it will not be many years before nation-wide suffrage has been achieved.

There are approximately 10,000 women employees of the railways who will vote for the first time in their lives. Up to the present only male employees twenty years old or over have been privileged to vote in the committee elections.

Needle Imbedded in Man's Heart Is Taken Out

Buffalo, N. Y.—Morgan Downey, twenty, is recovering in a hospital here after an operation for removal of a gold-tipped needle imbedded in his heart.

In the operation an opening was cut in the chest wall and the sac protecting the heart was opened. With his fingers the doctor was able to touch the tip of the needle in the back of the heart when the organ contracted.

It required 75 minutes to gain a firm hold and dislodge the needle.

The needle was in the mattress of Downey's bed and in some manner pierced him. Downey attempted to pry it out but instead forced the sharp sliver of steel further into his body.

Subsequent examinations showed the heart in its contractions had drawn the needle further into itself.

Incinerator Gives Up Woman's Diamonds

Atlantic City, N. J.—Incinerator ashes the other day yielded four valuable diamond rings and brought to happy ending an odd little trick which fate played on Mrs. William Van Dyke Smith, a resident at a local hotel.

She wrapped the rings in tissue paper, intending to store them away. In a moment of absentmindedness, however, she picked them off her dresser like so many wads of paper and tossed them into the waste basket.

Not until ten o'clock at night, long after the waste had been collected and sent to the incinerator, did she discover her mistake. She appealed to Frank Andrews, manager of the hotel, and a frantic search of the incinerator was begun. A number of employees especially assigned to the task of sifting the ashes finally came upon all four of the rings. They were returned to the owner, who valued them at $15,000.

Gamblers Found Firm Believers in Jinxes

Friday is widely a day of rest among the city's gamblers. It is a "bad-luck day" and many who live by their wits will not bet a nickel on the color of their garters. It is also near the end of the week and many are "broke."

Gamblers shun "Friday money," chase black cats, and give generously to street beggars—particularly the blind. Among followers of "the ponies" it is bad luck to lend pencils and racing forms. Card men sometimes refuse to sit down if their favorite seat is occupied.

Several of the city's hustlers carry a rabbit's foot and most of them own "lucky coins." They have faith in the luck-bringing virtues of rings and other jewelry. One refuses to touch a card unless he is wearing a favorite shirt.—Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

Take Your Choice

Mrs. Belle de Rivera, who founded the City Federation of Women's clubs, said in New York the other day:

"Pro-administration papers give our unemployment figures as very small. Anti-administration papers on the other hand run them up into millions.

"It reminds me of the two Germans lunching on bran and near-beer in a Berlin restaurant during the World war.

"'I see you're reading that Socialist sheet, Vorwaerts, said the older German. 'I always read the imperialistic Tageszeitung myself. It gives ever so many more victories.'"—Detroit Free Press.

His Wish Fulfilled

When William C. Brunner, seventy-one, of San Francisco, for many years oriental agent for the old Pacific Mail Steamship company, knew he had but a short time to live he prayed that he might last long enough to see a history of Pacific coast shipping published. One day recently James King Steele, of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, just back from New York, brought word that a large publishing house would print the volume. "I can die happy," said Brunner. Two hours later he was dead.

Not Fond of Change

The record of Jordan W. Coombs, of Belfast, Maine, who has lived in the same house for 80 years, is surpassed by Leason Martin, of Richmond, N. H. He was born on December 13, 1840, in a house that was probably built in 1835 and has lived there ever since—87½ years. He says that it seems pretty much like home to him now. Mr. Martin also has a record of attending 64 consecutive town meetings in Richmond.

Any Woman Can Look Stylish
By MAE MARTIN

Most stylish-looking women are just "good managers." They know simple ways to make last season's things conform to this season's styles.

Thousands of them have learned how easily they can transform a dress, or blouse, or coat by the quick magic of home tinting or dyeing. Anyone can do this successfully with true, fadeless Diamond Dyes. The "know-how" is in the dyes. They don't streak or spot like inferior dyes. New, fashionable tints appear like magic right over the out-of-style or faded colors. Only Diamond Dyes produce perfect results. Insist on them and save disappointment.

My new 64-page, illustrated book, "Color Craft," gives hundreds of money-saving hints for renewing clothes and draperies. It's Free. Write for it now, to Mae Martin, Dept. E-143, Diamond Dyes, Burlington, Vermont.

Are You Ready

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. At your druggist, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

FARMER'S WIFE GETS STRENGTH

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Schoolfield, Va.—"My mother had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I decided to take it for my own troubles and found great relief. I was hardly able to stand on my feet sometimes and now I feel better than I have for several years. I credit the Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with my present good health. I have taken five bottles of it and I am now able to do all my housework and sewing, feed my chickens, milk the cow and tend the pigs, and feel fine."—Mrs. J. C. CHAPTER IX—Continued

—18—

"Seein' that it's a boy you are?"

"That's different."

"So it is. So it is. Sure, child, it's only teasin' you a bit I was. I'll give him a room, but as all my spacious guest chambers are full I'll have to give him a wee small one next to me and to put you in another small one at the front of the house."

"Bridget!"

"Ah! It's the one next to me I'll give you if you're wantin' it so bad as all that. . . . An' now I'll go see that young man of yours and see whether it's give my consent I will. . . . Oh, whist! child, I'm not doubtin' that it's all right he is. But I'll give him the once-over before I trust him or any other man. An' if he ain't all right, aiver a step will you be goin' off with him."

Stella, however, clung to her. "He is all right, Bridget," she panted. "He is. Dad sent for him—"

"So he did. But he's never seen him."

"No-o. But I have. And I know a man when I see one. He came out here to help me, and he got into dreadful trouble—that is, it would have been dreadful trouble if he hadn't been so splendid— Oh! If you'd seen the way he handled Wade and Barker and Diego, too. Everybody calls him Go Ahead—and"—a shadow crossed the girl's face—"and it makes him so venturesome and—"

"There, there, darlin', don't be takin' on so. You can just tell him who you are an'—"

"But I don't want to tell him who I am. I—I want to ride and talk and—and all that with him first—"

"Indade an' you won't!" And Bridget resumed her interrupted progress to the front of the house.

Meanwhile, Go Ahead had sat him down on a bench near the front door and had been trying to concentrate his mind on the revision of his plans, which had been somewhat disarranged by the completeness of Barker's surrender. Go Ahead was familiar with Barker's type and he knew well that such men are never so dangerous as after they are beaten, for then they fight by proxy or from ambush. To recover his lost "face" Barker must somehow destroy his adversary, and he would not dare to fight fair. Go Ahead knew that it became him to guess what Barker would try to do next and to forestall him.

But he had great difficulty in keeping his mind concentrated on the problem. Just as he would get a train of thought straightened out and running smoothly, some act or word of Bob's would pop into his mind and he would lose his place, go off at a tangent, and later find himself miles away from the conclusion at which he had been aiming.

After this had happened several times, he jumped to his feet, fuming. "Confound that boy and his scrape!" he raged, to himself. "I've got to get him and his troubles out of my head. He's a good kid, but he isn't the whole works by a long shot. He's just an immaterial cogwheel, after all."

Go Ahead glanced at the watch on his wrist. "Where the devil is the boy, anyway?" he fumed. "He's been gone long enough to rent this whole shebang, let alone engaging one room . . . Oh, he's all right at that. Looks sort of effeminate maybe, but—oh, well. You never can tell about these kids. Lot's of 'em haven't got sense enough to be afraid. . . . Oh, hello, Bob! I thought you were trying to buy out the place."

Stella and Bridget had come upon him unawares.

Stella was confused, for the first time since Go Ahead had met her. She had no answer ready to his chaff, and she responded only by introducing him to Bridget—and she did this awkwardly. Bridget's stern stand in regard to him, to say nothing of her insinuations, had left the girl ill at ease.

Bridget, however, quickly swept all awkwardness aside. "Bob's been tellin' me how you helped him out this mornin'," she said. "Sure an' it's myself that's mighty grateful to you for that same. Bob's like me own boy; I brought him up, so to speak. An' that Wade is a dirty blaggard to try to hurt a gossoon half his size." Bridget's eyes searched Go Ahead's face as she talked for any sign that might betray consciousness of Stella's sex.

But she saw none. Go Ahead only grinned. "Help him?" he retorted. "It was he who helped me and saved my life. Have you seen him in action, ma'am? No? Well, you've got something to live for then. He does honor to your bringing up. I think I never saw a likelier youngster—if he wasn't so darned venturesome."

Bridget rolled her eyes at Stella, who grinned reluctantly. "Yes," she answered, glancing back to Go Ahead, "an' him so slim and ladylike, too." Bridget was determined to probe Go Ahead's mind to the very bottom.

"Sure thing. He's good looking enough to be a girl." Go Ahead grinned maliciously at Stella, who was looking down and blushing deeply. "But he doesn't fight like a girl; no, ma'am. He and I have got to be great pals in short order."

Bridget was satisfied. "You can't always be tellin' about young things like him," she replied, with a meaning that Go Ahead was far from suspecting. "You'll be after wantin' rooms?"

"I've come from the East to get my Cousin Stella," he said. "I believe Fair sent you word?"

Bridget nodded. "Most a month ago," she answered.

"The messenger had difficulty in finding me, I believe; and then of course he had to take some time to find out whether he could trust me. We left for here a few hours after he broke the news. He said that you would probably have a message for me."

"I only knew that you were comin'."

"Well, in that case, I was to stay here till it did come in some form or other. So you see my stay is pretty indefinite. If you can put us up—"

"Sure, I can do that. Green came by yesterday an' told me that you was on the way before he went on to the Roost. Most like he got there last night."

"He did." Stella chimed in before she thought.

"Why?" queried the Irishwoman, surprisedly.

"Yes. He—he was with the men who were chasing us this morning. I—I recognized him." Stella thought she had got out of her predicament very well.

Bridget accepted the explanation with a nod. "Sure! Then Fair knows you're here an' he'll be sendin' you word soon," she said to Go Ahead. "You'll be here the night, anyway. Come in, an I'll be after showin' you the rooms. It's only two small ones I've got."

Two minutes later Bridget threw open the door of a tiny bed-chamber and let Go Ahead enter. "Bob's room is back, near mine," she said. "I'll take him to it. Supper'll be ready in half an hour or 'ess."

"I'll be ready for it," laughed Go Ahead, with real earnestness in his voice.

At the door of Stella's room Bridget would have gone on. But the girl stopped her. "Green came to meet me," she said, hurriedly. "He brought me a message from dad. He knows that I know Go Ahead. So dad probably won't send any other message. And Go Ahead'll wait and wait till Barker manages to get him shot from behind. I—I got to get him away from here quick. Can't—can't you help me?"

Bridget looked at the girl tenderly. "You lamb," she breathed. "It's meself will get a message from father this very night."

"But—but—how can you?"

"By weeja board; how else?"

"Oh!" Stella laughed hysterically. "And what will weeja say?" she demanded.

"I'll have to be consultin' it afore I'll know. But I'm thinkin it'll be instructin' the two of ye's to go wait for that minx Stella somewheres east of here, close by the J/B ranch belike. Now I must be hurrying. Sure, I've got twenty-odd hungry men to feed in less than half an hour from now; an if I'm not ready they'll be tearin' down the place, so they will."

No More Leisure

Leisure is gone—gone where the spinning wheels are gone, and the pack horses, and the slow wagons, and the peddlers who brought bargains to the door on sunny afternoons. Ingenious philosophers tell you, perhaps, that the great work of the steam engine is to create leisure for mankind. Do not believe them; it only creates a vacuum for eager thought to rush in. Our idleness is eager now—eager for amusement; prone to excursion trains, art museums, periodical literature and exciting novels; prone even to scientific theorizing and cursory peeps through microscopes. Old Leisure was quite a different personage; he only read one newspaper, innocent of leaders, and was free from that periodicity of sensations which we call pastime.—George Eliot.

8 RECORD-BREAKING MONTHS!

Greatest August in Willys-Overland history—68% gain over last year!

NOW August has added its sweeping plurality to Willys-Overland's impressive total for 1928. Eight consecutive months have broken every record for the corresponding months in all of Willys-Overland's 20-year history.

Last month 68% more people bought Whippet and Willys-Knight cars than in August, 1927—a gain of more than two-thirds!

Experienced motorists are quick to appreciate the superiority of the Whippet Four, with its many engineering advantages never before brought to the light car field;—the Whippet Six, the world's lowest priced Six, with 7-bearing crankshaft and other costly car features;—and the Willys-Knight Six, which now, at the lowest prices in history, brings the unmatchable smoothness, silence, power and operating economy of the patented double sleeve-valve engine within easy reach of thousands of new buyers.

KANSAS FAVORS GRAVEL HIGHWAY

THE Kansas Highway Commission has adopted a definite policy of using sand and gravel on all the roads it can improve that way for the present.

"Gravel and sand cost only $1,500 to $2,000 a mile," said John Gardner, Highway Director. "By using these materials, which are plentiful in many sections, we can build roads passable at all seasons without difficulty or long delay. They are easy and inexpensive to maintain. By using the calcium chloride, the gravel and sand are held together and the dust is obviated. Of course, these roads will have to be rebuilt in five or six years, but we feel that it is better to build that way and get as many people out of the mud as possible rather than build short stretches of more permanent and more expensive roads, just at this time."

HERE you have the story of the Maytag's superior, unmatched washing ability, given to you direct from Maytag users. No product can attain real success without the influence of satisfied users. The Maytag's rapid rise to world leadership, the fact that more than one out of every three washers sold is a Maytag, is unmistakable evidence of its superiority.

Good Housekeeping Institute

For homes without electricity, the Maytag is available with in-built gasoline motor.

"I used to think that wringing the clothes was the most disagreeable part of washing until I got my Maytag. The Soft-Roller Water Remover removes soap and water evenly from all parts of the garment, automatically adjusts the tension, reverses the drainboard and is much easier to feed because of the safety feed."

"I am sure my clothes will last longer since I have the Maytag washer. Before I had to hand-rub the edges of cuffs and collars and some of the children's play-clothes, and a washboard is hard on the clothes. Now the Maytag does it all."

"I think my washday troubles are settled for a lifetime. The Maytag is built so strong and sturdy, yet is so compact and handy to handle. The cast-aluminum tub keeps the water hot for an entire washing and then I just lower the drain outlet and out goes the water."

A message to the editor of this paper from GENERAL MOTORS

JUST about a year ago we published, in your advertising columns, a message in which we sought to give you and your readers an idea of what General Motors is and what it is trying to accomplish. At that time the public was purchasing our cars at the rate of about one in every three; and our Frigidaire automatic refrigerator and Delco-Light electric plants were leading in popular preference in their respective fields.

Since then each of our car divisions has introduced new, further improved models and public patronage has reached the point where almost one out of two automobiles purchased is a General Motors car. Frigidaire and Delco-Light products have showed comparable increases in sales.

The reason for this is two-fold. First, the public wants value for its automobile dollar and recognizes value when it is given. Second, General Motors is seeking so to conduct its operations as to deserve the goodwill of the public.

We are particularly impressed with the number of letters which have come to us from editors of small city newspapers during recent months. These editors, who are in a position to reflect local sentiment, speak of the goodwill which attaches to General Motors in their communities and express an obviously sincere appreciation of the character of General Motors' advertising in their publications.

For our advertising has been as much concerned with giving your readers facts of helpfulness to them in the purchase of automobiles as with the merits of our own products. Our messages have set forth the principles of trade-in transactions and used car allowances. They have dealt with time payments and the change in the public's attitude toward the used car. Other messages have told of the policies of General Motors and of how our resources are being employed to effect them.

That General Motors enjoys the goodwill of the people in the small cities and on the farms of America gives us an especial satisfaction and confidence in the future. It is in the country sections of the United States that half our population lives. It is there that the whole industry must look in increasing measure for maintenance of the production volume upon which high values and low prices depend. And it is there that General Motors is paying particular attention to its facilities for sales and service.

To our friends in your community we express our thanks.

Many Students at N. S. A.

Students from every county in northwestern Minnesota were on hand Monday, October 1, for the opening of the fall term of the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston. Though E. R. Clark, acting registrar, reports all dormitories filled to capacity, every effort will be made to occommodate those who find it necessary to remain at home for a few days to assist with the delayed fall work.

Several auto loads of people from Holt and vicinity attended the big Luther League convention held at Thief River Falls on Saturday evening and Sunday.

Obert Reierson returned home Saturday from Warre where he has run a threshing rig this fall.

Chas Fay will have an auction sale on his farm here Oct. 16.

Several of the local threshers have been finishing up their runs in this vicinity the past week and are now filling silos.

Ernest Raaum left this week for Minneapolis where he will attend college this winter.

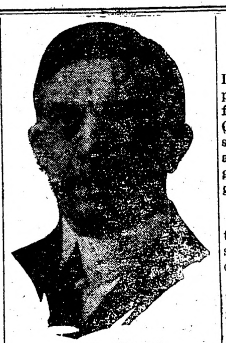
Mrs. C. Foss and children are spending the week with relatives near Argyle.

Albert Haarstad of Newfolden spent a few days here repairing the building on his place in the south end of town.

Tom Severson and two sons who are employed on farms near Dahlen, N. D., were over Sunday visitors here.

R. M. Nyhus made a business trip to St. Paul on Saturday, returning here Wednesday.

Johnny Ness returned home Saturday from Dahlen, N. Dak.



C. G. SELVIG

Ninth District Congressman whose speech on the effect of the tariff on agriculture is being widely circulated by farmers' organizations all over the United States.

Arthur Anderson arrived here Saturday from North Dakota for a visit with friends.

Paul Lundgren of Thief River was here on business Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Obert Reierson and family and Mr. and Mrs. Leo Horien and family were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Hanson Monday evening.

R. Reierson and family have rented the Kolden house across the street from the village hall and have this week been busy moving into it.

Mrs. Obert Reierson and two children returned home Sunday from Strathcona where they have been visiting with friends and relatives the past month.

Mrs. W. Heiny of McIntosh and Mrs. R. Kautz from Grand Forks visited here this week.

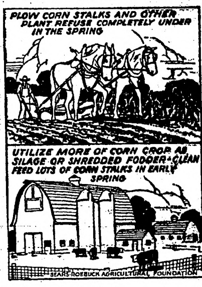
Corn Borer Compels Changes in Farm Practice



PLOW CORN STALKS AND OTHER PLANT REFUSE COMPLETELY UNDER IN THE SPRING
UTILIZE MORE OF CORN CROP AS SILAGE OR SHREDDED FODDER—CLEAN FEED LOTS OF CORN STALKS IN EARLY SPRING
SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

Farmers who begin now to build their lines of defense against the corn borer will be able to slow down the march of this enemy and will be most likely to win the battle with it, observes the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. Farm methods will have to be changed eventually, and some of the modifications will require several years for completion, so that it will be a mistake to wait for the borer's actual arrival.

Greatest changes will have to be made in sections now producing a large acreage of corn, where only a small portion of the stalks are fed and where small grain is commonly sown in corn land in the spring without plowing and usually without removing the corn stalks. The least change will be needed in those sections and on those farms where only a moderate acreage is being planted in corn, where most of the corn is cut and siloed or shredded, and where corn land is practically all plowed in preparing for the next crop. These are essential practices in areas infested with the borer.

A gradual change to crop rotations which include only a limited acreage in corn and a maximum acreage of crops not molested by the borer and which permit removing or plowing under all plant refuse will help to control the pest. The selection of crops to displace corn must be made with reference to the adaptation of the soil, the markets, the labor supply, and the live stock program on the individual farm. Sugar beets, alfalfa, soybeans, and small grains are some of the crops which have been substituted for corn in areas where the borer is already present and where the necessity of cleaning up stalks has added $2 to $5 per acre to the cost of growing corn.

Siloing and shredding cause almost complete destruction of borers. A change in the live stock program so as to utilize more of the corn crop in these forms is desirable on many farms, the Foundation continues. Hogging-down can be practiced, although it increases the difficulty of clean-up methods. Corn stalks and cobs in feeding yards and barn lots will have to be cleaned up in early spring after the borer is on the scene.

The plow is the chief weapon of warfare against the borer when it is at close range. Plowing corn stalks completely under is the most feasible way to dispose of them and the simplest, most effective way to prevent severe commercial damage from the borer. They must be completely covered deep enough so that other machinery will not drag them to the surface. Disc harrows and drills will have to replace toothed implements.

LESSON XXXX

MILK PRODUCTION: "A pail full of milk to a milking"—fine—but what will the cow do for the year? The udder and milk veins and milk wells give strong indication

A large but soft and pliable udder and well balanced and large and long milk veins and large milk wells located far forward are indications of large milk production—6 to 8 thousand pounds a year for Jerseys and Guernseys and 8 to 12 thousand pounds for Holsteins.

Milk is made from the blood and if much milk is made, much blood must flow thru the udder. The milk veins running forward from the udder carry the blood from the udder back to the heart and the openings thru which the veins pass are called milk wells. Large veins and large wells indicate a large flow of blood to and from the udder. Medium size and well shaped teats, set well apart, are desirable and especially for the successful use of milking machines.

Railroad Sale Ends Romance

History of Wild Financing Recalled by Purchase of the Orient.

Kansas City, Mo.—Purchase of the Kansas City, Mexico and Orient railroad by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railway ends a chapter of railroad history romantic and tragic.

First visioned thirty-five years ago in a dream by Arthur E. Stilwell, a young insurance salesman who had come here from the East, its construction began a few years later, financed by small-fry investors living far from Wall street, where such projects usually are capitalized.

In the period of construction Stilwell was confronted by many financial obstacles. But financing was his forte. Reluctant purses yawned at his magic voice. When he was faced by any problem he went into what he described as a trance and always came out prepared with ideas.

In addition to organizing the railroad company, he established numerous subsidiaries, such as construction companies and others. The construction company would build the line, taking in pay stock and bonds of the road.

Build Extensive Terminal.

Instead of a continuous line, the road was built in short stretches. It never got farther east than Wichita, Kas., although it carried Kansas City in its name and built an expensive terminal here. The purchase by the Santa Fe gives it the first Kansas City connection.

Eventually a line that stretched 737 miles from Wichita to Alpine, Texas was completed and three widely separated stretches including one at Topolobampo, western terminal on the gulf of Lower California, were built, 250 miles on that side of the border.

Stilwell interested English financiers who invested heavily in the road. At about the same time, when aid in the amount of $2,655,000 was forthcoming from President Diaz of Mexico, the revolution of 1910 halted the payments after Stilwell had received about half the amount.

Even with all the financial aid Stilwell mustered, the road never was adequately equipped and as late as 1924 paid $400,000 for rental of box cars and $250,000 freight on coal hauled for its engines.

Kept Going by U. S. Loans.

The fact that the line was the only railroad serving more than a hundred communities in western Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas, caused the government to keep it going with loans.

In 1912 it was thrown into receivership and in the reorganization that followed Stilwell was left out entirely. The original stock was thrown in the waste basket when $6,000,000 in gold notes secured by the Orient's properties were issued. Former investors took some of the notes and new investors, including Henry Ford and Senator Couzens of Michigan became interested. All went well until the road defaulted interest payments and its construction companies went into bankruptcy.

The road was refinanced in 1916 by a noteholders' deposit committee. English noteholders also formed a committee, but the two never worked in harmony.

Difficulties continued in 1917 and then William T. Kemper was named receiver and authorized to issue $2,500,000 in receivers' certificates to rehabilitate the line.

The Kemper receivership was a stormy period, including the years of government operations. On two occasions the road was on the point of being sold for junk. But Kemper and a few others put their own money into the line, obtained government loans and effected economies that made continued operation possible.

Old Debt Paid

Columbia City, Ind.—A debt of five cents apparently worried some man several years. Sam Yantz, a grocer, received the following note: "I owed you this for years. I beat you out of it while you were still Yantz & Hallauer." The sender did not sign his name.

Armchair Her Nest

London.—Postman Terry of Epping has a hen which makes its way to the kitchen of his home, turns out the cat and dog, seats itself on the armchair and lays its eggs.

Dollar Watch Given Scientific Dignity

Washington.—The "dollar watch has been elevated to the dignity of recognition within the branch of the human sciences which may be described as contemporary archeology.

The division of mineral and mechanical technology of the Smithsonian institution has assembled a series of watches, arranged to show how American inventors made it possible for the poor as well as the rich to own timepieces.

The collection includes the invention of Jason R. Hopkins of Washington, who in 1875 devised a timepiece intended to sell for 50 cents. His project failed, but a few years later patents obtained by D. A. A. Buck made possible profitable construction of a cheap watch.

25th Child Since 1900 Called World Record

San Jose, Costa Rica.—The twenty-fifth child in a period of twenty-eight years of married life has just been born to Manuel Miranda Fernandez and his wife, Teodula, aged forty-seven and forty-five, respectively.

All of the children are healthy and normal. It is believed that this is the largest family produced from a single union in the same space of time in the world.

The eldest son lives in the United States and the remainder live with their parents. There have been three sets of twins.

PIGUE FAMILY PRINTS ITS OWN MONTHLY NEWSPAPER

Tennessee Clan of Many Members Limits News Sheet to Private Affairs.

Trenton, Tenn.—Comes the Pigue family offering a newspaper published of, for and by the Pigue family exclusively. It may be something new under the sun, the Pigues believe.

There are many Pigues, and it has always been a problem for them to keep posted on one another's doings. For years they made carbon copies of each letter they wrote, mailing duplicates to other Pigues. But now they have branched out and a monthly eight-page newspaper carries to every member of the family all available news of all others.

Behind this newspaper business are eight Pigue brothers, six of them newspaper men, publishers, editors and printers, who are widely scattered, but imbued with a spirit of clannishness.

Besides the eight brothers and their father, Rev. R. H. Pigue of Hazel Ky., are many Pigues and near-Pigues. Just how many is a moot question, but forty-two of them gathered in Hazel for a 1928 reunion.

The brothers edit the paper, appropriately known as "Pigues Is Pigues." They are M. H. Pigue of New Orleans W. W. of Pittsburgh, R. W. of St. Louis, M. M. and Dick, who live in Nashville; Bob, who makes Memphis his home, and Paul W. and Syd W., who stay in Trenton and publish the paper.

The first issue told of Rev. Mr. Pigue's farm, to which he eventually plans to retire; of little Virginia's recovery from an illness; of vacations, clothes and automobiles of these Pigues and those.

Only the back page carries advertising, which is offered at the prohibitive rate of $1,000 an inch. The page is devoted to a circulation booster, which offers "Pigues Is Pigues" for 25 cents "a year on your doorstep or in your ash can."

The real Pigue touch comes in this sentence: "If the paper busts before the year is out you lose your unearned subscription money—but even life is a gamble—or gambol, which?"

For Aged Writers

Sceaux, France.—The historic castle of Sceaux is to be transformed into a home for aged authors and men of letters, if the plans of the municipal council of Sceaux are successful. The idea is backed by such men as Marcel Prevost of the French academy and Roland Dorgeles, one of the most popular young novelists in France.

S. O. S. Messages Success

London.—Of 802 S. O. S. messages broadcast in England last year, 340 were successful, 396 failures and in 66 cases the result was not known.

Little Carolyn, age three, was just learning to chew gum. Her mother had given her two pieces and both were swallowed. Carolyn ran to her mother to get a third piece. Her mother refused and Carolyn kept teasing for it until her mother said: "Carolyn, I said 'no.' Don't you understand 'no' when you hear it?" Carolyn, still determined to get the gum, said: "I understand yes."

Supper was ready on time and Bridget's place escaped the fate that its owner had conjured up, though no one who saw the men eat would have doubted that its escape was narrow. Like a torrent they poured into the dining room when the gong sounded, and like a horde of devouring locusts they swept the table bare.

Stella and Go Ahead were there with the first, but they stayed longer, most of the others making their escape the moment they finished their meal and scattering to affairs that interested them. Several, however, waited outside till Go Ahead came out.

When he did appear, one of these, a clear-eyed, determined-looking ranchman, came up to him, with the other two closely behind. "My name's Brown," he said. "I own a big ranch near here. My friends, Nelson and White"—he gestured toward the others—"also own big ranches. We all saw you get Barker's goat a while ago. Course, we don't know just what your game is, an' we're not askin' you to spill it till you get good and ready. We're only tellin' you that we'll back your play against Barker to the limit—and that's the sky. Call on us, any time."

Go Ahead nodded. "That's mighty fine of you," he said, noncommittally. "I'll be glad to call on you if I need help. But I hope I won't need it."

"So long."

The three men turned away, and Go Ahead looked around for Caesar and the horses he was to bring. Caesar was not visible, however; no one was visible, for the matter of that, except one man sitting on a bench close by. So he started back to the hotel.

At the door Bridget met him. "I've just been gettin' word from Fair," she said. "If you an' Bob will be leavin' about two o'clock in the mornin' so as to get to the J/B ranch about daylight, you'll find Stella there. If you don't find her soon, ride on toward Mustin and she'll be with you afore you get there."

Bridget's words were accurate enough, as a whole and in detail, though they were somewhat misleading in spirit.

Go Ahead's face fell. The pending meeting was exactly what he had come West for, but it had been arranged with a speed that was not altogether welcome. It involved his leaving Loboville with a suddenness that would permit Barker to assert and other people to believe that he had weakened and run away. Of course he could and would keep his promise to "drop in" on Barker before he went, but he could not afford to notify him when and where he was going, for to do so would be to endanger Stella. As a matter of fact he did not want to leave Loboville until he had smashed Barker completely—to Fair's advantage.

Nevertheless he could not disregard Fair's instruction, the authenticity of which he had no reason in the world to doubt. He must not only meet his cousin, but he must take her immediately East. He could not get back in less than ten days, and what might happen in ten days he could not guess. However—

Abruptly he dismissed the matter from his mind. His duty was plain. He must set about it and consider later what was to be done next.

"All right," he answered. "Bob and I'll be there on time. Where's Fair's messenger? I'd like to talk to him."

"He didn't dare wait. Sure it would get him in bad if any of Barker's spies recognized him."

"All right. Er—where's Bob?"

"Be aisy. He's asleep now, an' if it's knowing anything about boys I do, he won't be wakin' for twelve hours if he's left alone."

"Good. I've got an appointment to keep tonight and some things to attend to right away if we're to be getting away before daylight. And I'd just as soon that Bob shouldn't know ever. He'd give me Hail Columbia if he found out I'd done anything without him. So—"

"I'll not tell him."

Bridget turned away, and Go Ahead went back to the door to look for Caesar. He found him standing by the rack with four horses, which, obedient to instructions, he had obtained somewhere. Out and over to him he went, noting out of the tail of his eye that the fourth of the diners who had waited outside was still sitting on the bench by the door.

"Those the best horses you could find?" he remarked, contemptuously—and loudly enough for the man by the door to hear.

Caesar fell in with his lead immediately. "Yassuh!" he answered promptly. "Ain't they fine?"

"Fine? Those things?" Go Ahead bent down to examine a hoof. "Have the best three just east of town on the main road at two o'clock tomorrow morning," he breathed. Then he straightened up. "Look here," he exclaimed aloud, "I'm no d—n tenderfoot. If you want to sell me horses you bring good ones—and bring 'em by nine o'clock tomorrow morning. Understand?"

"Yassuh. Yassuh."

Without a nod or a word further, Go Ahead strode off, up the road, toward town.

Down the broad white road he walked briskly, till just opposite the sheriff's office; then, turning on his heel, he crossed the road, opened the door of the office, beneath whose lowered window shades he could see a thin line of light, and walked in.

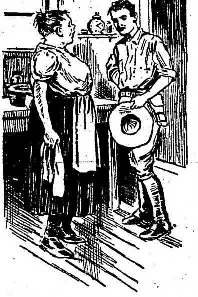
"Evening, sheriff," he said.

CHAPTER X

When Go Ahead walked off with Stella, the sheriff watched him for a moment, then strode back into his office, called certain of his minions, and ordered them to keep a close watch on Go Ahead. This done he sent for Go Ahead's prisoners.

Smilingly the men came in, convinced by the fact that he had sent for them that all that had happened in front of the office had been a farce played for the benefit of the onlookers, and that now they were to be set free, perhaps even to be complimented on the way they had behaved.

But Barker was in no mood for smiles or smirkings. Outside, he had concealed the rage that was seething within him because he dared not give it vent; later, inside his office, he had held it in leash because he did not wish his subordinates to guess (as if anyone doubted it) that he had been holding it in. But the first sight of the bandits' grinning faces broke through his defenses; and he threw all restraint to the winds.



"Be Aisy. He's Asleep Now."

Like a hurricane his wrath descended on the two helpless prisoners. He cursed them by the lords of heaven and of hell, by their ancestors and their progeny, by their looseness of tongue and by their lack of brain; he heaped upon them epithets which had been conceived by men who wallowed in the primeval ooze and which, rephrased in every generation, have been handed down through the ages; he spared them nothing that brain could devise and tongue could utter. Even an asbestos record would have flared up before it had recorded half that he uttered.

Under the impact of his words the two men quailed as if from the beat of a literal tornado. For in his eyes they thought they read promise of sudden death.

"For two bits, I'd let you hang," he choked at last. "But I'm going to let you get away this time because I need you. But if you ever make such double-d—d fools of yourselves again I'll skin you alive."

The two men drew long breaths. They were, at best, mere riffraff, cowardly, cruel, dull and brutish, who had drifted into crime because they had lacked intelligence to earn their livings by any other way. They were used to being cursed, though not so sharply as by Barker, and they never thought of resenting it. They were only too glad to get away under any conditions. With lightened hearts they waited to learn for what they were needed.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Criticism is easy, art difficult.

South Seas

The Pacific ocean was formerly known as the South sea, due to the fact that Vasco Nunez de Balboa, Spanish governor of Darien, first saw it in 1513 when looking southward. He named it "el Mer del Sur," or the "Sea of the South." Almost from the beginning, however, the English used the term in the plural form and applied it to all the waters of the southern hemisphere. In 1528, only 15 years after Balboa first beheld the Pacific, a man named Thorne wrote to Henry VIII as follows: "Ventill they come to thee, South Seas of the Indies Occidentall." In English literature "South Seas" refers especially to that part of the Pacific ocean south of the equator. "The South Sea islands" is a general term designating the more remote and less civilized islands in that region.—Exchange.

He's Too Busy

The fact that money doesn't make the man seldom worries the man who is trying to make the money.

KENTUCKY'S RIFLES ARE PUT ON SHOW

Old Flintlocks Given to University Museum.

Philadelphia.—A gift of 35 "Kentucky" rifles of the Revolutionary period, one of the few collections of its kind in this country, has been received by the University of Pennsylvania museum through the generosity of J. Stogdell Stokes.

The importance of the gift, says Joseph Downs, curator of the decorative arts at the museum, arises from the unique part the "Kentucky" rifle played in the early days of conquering the wilderness and producing a livelihood for the pioneers and also in the winning of the Revolutionary war. The name dates back to a time not long after Daniel Boone had returned from his memorable adventures in the wilderness west of the Cumberland mountains.

Many of these old flintlocks bear the names of their makers inscribed on the barrels—names chiefly of German derivation. They were made in eastern Pennsylvania, most authorities agreeing that Lancaster probably was the center of the industry.

The stocks were made of curly maple, the most decorative obtainable, and this often was inlaid with silver wires and carved with scrolls. They were inevitably overlaid in parts with brass appliques cut in graceful designs with spread eagles or other conventional decoration. By pressing an ingeniously concealed spring in the stock, which releases a hinged cover, the patch box is revealed. This held the grease for the small pieces of linen or buckskin with which the ball was "patched" in loading.

Old Canvas Believed Work of the Druids

London.—What is believed to be a valuable discovery of Druidical remains have been uncovered by workmen at Arnos Grove, Southgate, and an invitation has been sent the archeological society to investigate.

The remains consist of two large dark caves built of huge boulders, many of which weigh over three tons. In front there is what appears to be an altar with sacrificial stones, and on one side there is an immense pillar upon which representations of serpents can be traced.

The remains as they stand are almost completely hidden by mistletoe and ivy, and big mounds of earth which it is now thought may conceal other relics of the Druids age, stand near by. The caves stand within a short distance of the famous Mitchenden Oak—a tree which is mentioned in the Doomsday Book.

The discovery was made upon an estate which once belonged to Lord Iverforth, but which is now being developed into plots for building purposes.

Seagull Loses Its Popularity in Utah

Salt Lake City, Utah.—The seagull, once esteemed in Utah, is not so popular now.

Some thirty years ago when Mormondom was threatened with a crop devastation due to an invasion of crickets thousands of the graceful birds swept in from the Pacific ocean, devoured the insect pests and averted a possible famine.

To show their appreciation Utahans erected a monument in honor of their winged friends. A great gull, sculptured with spread wings, is perched at the top.

Now, the farmers complain, flocks of the birds make their home near Salt Lake and sally out into the fields to gorge themselves on cherries, other fruits and grain crops. They are so ravenous and bold they can scarcely be shaken out of a fruit tree.

There is growing demand that the law protecting gulls be repealed, and the bitterness of some farmers is such that they advocate tearing down the seagull monument.

Cat Loses Kittens, Wins Affections of Puppies

New Orleans.—A unique rivalry for the affections of five offspring was discovered at the home of Mrs. C. J. Rocquin. A black-and-white cat, Minette, lost her three kittens through death about the same time five collies were born to Bessie, the family dog. Minette immediately set about the task of winning the affections of the young collies and has succeeded, much to the chagrin of Bessie.

Dog Halts Traffic as He Guards Dead Pal

Beaumont, Texas.—A setter dog which refused to leave a canine pal in death caused motorists to send in a hurry call to the sheriff's office here.

When a deputy reached the scene he found the faithful creature sitting beside the body of his stricken comrade in the center of the highway, defying motorists to run him down as they had his comrade. One automobile had been thrown into the ditch to avoid hitting the dog.

It was not until the dead dog had been moved to the side of the road that the other consented to leave and permit traffic to move normally.

KING OF SLAVS IS NO PUPPET MONARCH

Alexander Takes Big Part in Nation's Affairs.

Belgrade.—Probably no other king in the world has such a grip on the affection of his country and his people as young King Alexander of turbulent Jugo-Slavia. He is not a mere symbol. Not only is he in the closest bonds with his people, but he directs the cabinet, controls the army, formulates the foreign policy, and takes an active part in every question affecting the welfare of the nation.

Only thirty-nine years old, Alexander, who was once a page in the czar's court at Petrograd, is the most powerful figure in a country which, since the World war, has increased its population from 3,000,000 to 12,000,000 and its territory from 58,000 square miles to 96,135 square miles.

Alexander is a tremendous worker. He is on the go day and night. "I have never known a man who works so hard," remarked Queen Marie about her royal son-in-law.

Seeks Racial Harmony.

Alexander's greatest ambition is to achieve unity and harmony among the Croats, Slovenes, Serbs, Dalmatians, Moslems, and other diverse nationalities of Jugo-Slavia.

The king is intensely interested in mechanics, science, medicine, archeology, art, military lore, and literature. Like King George of England and King Victor Emmanuel of Italy, he is a great stamp and coin collector, having one of the finest sets in the world.

The king's day begins at seven in the morning, when he goes through the newspapers, reads telegrams and answers correspondence. From ten o'clock onward he receives his ministers, the commandant of the Belgrade garrison, the governor of the capital and army and civilian leaders. At 1:30 the king has luncheon, usually with the queen, his two baby sons, court officials, and sometimes invited guests.

Like most Slavs, Alexander is a hearty and a fast eater. He is fond of Serbian national dishes.

From 2 to 4 in the afternoon he usually takes an automobile trip with the queen into the country, sitting at the wheel himself. Occasionally he varies this by a horseback ride, a long walk, or a game of tennis. From 4 to 7 he grants audiences.

Is Always Cheered.

Between 7 and 8 his majesty usually takes a stroll into town, accompanied only by an aide-de-camp. He is always enthusiastically cheered, but does not relish this public adulation.

At 8 the king dines, usually with friends or official guests. After dinner he chats with his guests, plays bridge, chess, or "listens in" on his wireless.

Like most Slavs, Alexander is very pious and goes to church every Sunday and on all feasts. He is a member of the Greek Orthodox church. But he is broadminded and does not adhere to dogmas or rigid doctrines.

Although Alexander has been on the throne seven years, he has never been formally crowned. He has always insisted that his country could better devote the expense of such a coronation to other more useful ends. Only once has he worn the crown, and that was when he formally assumed the throne in 1921.

Science Warns Industry Of Benzol Poison Peril

Washington.—Benzol poisoning has been found a distinct health hazard in many chemical laboratories as well as in certain manufacturing plants, reports J. J. Bloomfield of the United States public health service. In laboratories in which tests are made in connection with rubber, paint, oil and varnish, benzol is extensively used, not only in the tests but as a solvent for cleaning apparatus and the hands and arms of the workers.

The concentration of more than 100 parts of benzol in every million parts of air in the workroom constitutes a health hazard. Substitutes for this substance are recommended to be used as far as possible, particularly for cleaning.

The number of white blood cells is considerably reduced in chronic benzol poisoning, and the nature of the cells also undergoes change. Routine physical examinations of the workers, including examination of the blood, are recommended upon employment and frequently thereafter, as a means of checking this condition in plants where benzol cannot be dispensed with altogether.

Abilities of Triplets Found Fixed by Birth

Washington.—If a triplet child starts out in life bigger and brighter than his fellow triplets he is likely to remain just about the same distance ahead of others through childhood.

This is the case with a set of triplets whose mental and physical development have been recorded at intervals during fifteen years.

The triplets consist of two girls and a boy, according to E. C. Nowe of the state normal school at Mount Pleasant, Mich., who has reported the case to the Journal of Heredity. The boy was the first to cut his teeth and the first to walk and talk. He had the highest intelligence rating, and until the girls were about thirteen years, the boy was the tallest and heaviest. The boy's intelligence rating has stayed about an even distance ahead of the brighter girl, and her rating has kept ahead of the third triplet, Mr. Nowe states.

RESTORE HOME OF GEN. SAM HOUSTON

Teachers With State Aid Making It a Shrine.

Huntsville, Texas—The homestead to which Gen. Sam Houston retired when he was deposed as governor of Texas because he refused to swear allegiance to the confederacy, and the house in which he died, lonely and broken-hearted, are being restored to their original rustic beauty.

The work of making the grounds a state park and the old home a shrine for the people of Texas soon will be completed. The legislature appropriated $15,000 for the purpose.

A quarter of a century after he had won freedom for Texas with his victory at San Jacinto, General Houston lost the governorship of the state which, as a republic, had honored him with its presidency. Somewhat embittered, he sought peace at his home near Huntsville and died two years later.

The home changed ownership many times, but in 1911 became the property of the state teachers' college, which bears the general's name.

In the last few months many changes have been made in the appearance of the place. Trees, which were not there when it was Houston's home, were chopped down, and those which he had planted were pruned and marked. The pond was enlarged to its former size and shrubs were planted on its banks.

The house was restored to its appearance of long ago, except that lumber from a sawmill replaced the rough-hewn planks. The interior, however, was given what architects pronounced an almost perfect restoration.

Now a search is being made for the furniture which Houston used during his last days. One of the first pieces recovered was a chair, found in a Negro's hut.

Chinese Converts Hand Christians a Puzzle

Canton, China.—Chinese converts to Christianity have advanced the claim that admission to the church entitles them to divorce their non-Christian wives and contract a new marriage "based on love as in the west."

The demand is a new phase of the old conflict between the customs of ancient China and the ideas implanted by Christian missionaries. Among non-Christian Chinese the bride and groom have little or nothing to do with the match.

Present-day wedding ceremonies in Canton are of a hybrid nature. Firecrackers are plentifully used and rice-throwing, not a custom indigenous to China, has been introduced by returned students from America. Many brides wear foreign-style lace veils with Chinese knit tams, while bridegrooms combine foreign straw hats and rubber-soled shoes with the conventional Chinese long silk gowns and black satin jackets.

The ancient wine ceremony and the obeisance before the tablets of the bridegroom's ancestors are generally observed even at Christian weddings out of deference to older members of the family. In Nationalist circles the political will of Dr. Sun Yat-sen is read and the couple bow three times before his portrait.

Saragossa Sea Place of Beauty, Not a Menace

New York.—The Saragossa sea is pictured as a place of beauty rather than a menace by H. A. Marmer of the United States coast and geodetic survey.

The water is unusually blue, due to lack of minute plant and animal life. It is so transparent that a six-foot white disc can be seen clearly at 200 feet depth.

Belief in the existence of great masses of weed in this sea has no basis in fact, Marmer writes in the United States Naval Institute proceedings.

The sea has surface weed patches up to 100 feet in diameter and occasionally as large as an acre in extent, which do not interfere with navigation.

Naughty Alligator

Bassett, Neb.—Noticing a commotion among the chickens and pigs on her farm, Mrs. A. B. McCance investigated and found a small alligator trying to get a chicken dinner. It is thought the alligator escaped from a small circus that visited here a short time ago.

Buffalo Police Bar Old Wedding Custom

Buffalo, N. Y.—The time-honored custom of playfully tossing old shoes at the groom, tieing tin cans and other noise-producing articles on the rear of automobiles used by bridal parties, and blowing of horns by cars in a bridal procession, will be cause for arrest hereafter.

The Buffalo health department classifies such acts as those of "morons, diabolical, and threatening the health of the sick and nervous."

Throwing old shoes at the groom is said to be fraught with danger—a blow on the head often resulting in a fatal injury.

A Sour Stomach
In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.
This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1927, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1928 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by
G. A. YOUNGQUIST
Attorney-General of Minnesota.

Addressed to
MIKE HOLM
Secretary of State.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT,
G. A. YOUNGQUIST,
Attorney General.

St. Paul, Minnesota, April 30, 1928.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State:

In compliance with the provisions of section 46, General Statutes 1923, I furnish you herewith a statement of the purpose and effect of proposed amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1928, in accordance with certain acts adopted by the legislature at the 1927 session thereof.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

By the adoption of chapter 445, Laws 1927, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 5 article 9 of the constitution. This section now reads as follows:

"For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such works, except as authorized by section 16 of Article 9, and by Article 16 of this Constitution; but it may levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful, in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state, and shall place the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in section 2 of said Article 16, and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

If amended as proposed this section will read as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such works, except as authorized by section 16 of Article 9, and by Article 16 of this Constitution, but it may levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful, in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state, and shall place two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in section 2 of said Article 16, and one-third thereof in the state road and bridge fund, and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

Advertise it in this paper.

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

The entire proceeds of the gasoline tax are now placed in the trunk highway fund for use on the trunk highway system. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to place two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax in the trunk highway fund and one-third in the state road and bridge fund.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to place two-thirds of the proceeds of the gasoline tax in the trunk highway fund for the use of the trunk highway system, and one-third in the state road and bridge fund for lending aid, by the distribution of that fund among the counties of the state, in the construction and improvement of roads other than trunk highways.

First:

DIVISION OF GASOLINE TAX

Amendment to section 5 of article 9 of the Constitution (as amended), authorizing the state to place in the trunk highway fund two-thirds and in the state road and bridge fund one-third of any and all excise taxes levied and collected on the business of selling or dealing in fluids used or which can be used for motor vehicle power purposes.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2

By the adoption of chapter 444, Laws 1927, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 3, Article 10 of the Constitution relating to corporations. This section now reads as follows:

"Each stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business, shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him."

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

"Section 3. The Legislature shall have power from time to time to provide for, limit and otherwise regulate the liability of stockholders or members of corporations and co-operative corporations or associations, however organized. Provided nothing in this section shall be construed as repealing or in any manner affecting the liability of stockholders in banks or corporations organized for banking purposes as provided in Section 13 of Article 9 of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendments

The constitution as it now stands, makes every stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on a manufacturing or mechanical business, liable for the debts of the corporation, if the corporate assets are insufficient to pay the debts, up to an amount equal to the par value of the stock held or owned by him, in addition to any sum that he may owe the corporation on account of his stock. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to authorize the legislature to prescribe and regulate by law the liability of stockholders or members in all corporations, including co-operative corporations or associations, however organized, except stockholders in corporations and joint associations organized for banking purposes which issue bank notes, as provided by section 13 of Article 9 of the Constitution. The effect of this exception is explained in the next following paragraphs.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate the present fixed rule of stockholders' liability prescribed by the Constitution, except in the case of stockholders in banks which issue bank notes, and to place the matter of prescribing and regulating the liability of stockholders in all corporations, co-operative corporations or associations created under the laws of this state (except those banking corporations and joint associations specifically excepted therefrom) entirely within the control of the legislature, subject to change from time to time as they may see fit.

"Stockholders in banks of the kind provided for by section 13 of Article 9 of the Constitution are by that section made liable for the debts of such corporation or association up to an amount equal to double the amount of stock owned by them. Stockholders of this class are excepted from the operation of the proposed amendment. However, the only banks provided for by section 13 are those that issue bank notes. There are none such in this state. Hence, stockholders in state banks are not within the exception of the proposed amendment but fall in the same class as stockholders in other corporations.

Second:

LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS IN CORPORATIONS.

Amendment to section 3, Article 10, of the Constitution, authorizing the legislature to prescribe and limit the liability of stockholders in corporations.

HERE you have the story of the Maytag's superior, unmatched washing ability, given to you direct from Maytag users. No product can attain real success without the influence of satisfied users. The Maytag's rapid rise to world leadership, the fact that more than one out of every three washers sold is a Maytag, is unmistakable evidence of its superiority.

"I used to think that wringing the clothes was the most disagreeable part of washing until I got my Maytag. The Soft-Roller Water Remover removes soap and water evenly from all parts of the garment, automatically adjusts the tension, reverses the drainboard, and is much easier to feed, because of the safety feed."

"I am sure my clothes will last longer since I have the Maytag washer. Before I had to hand-rub the edges of cuffs and collars and some of the children's play-clothes, and a washboard is hard on the clothes. Now the Maytag does it all."

"I think my washday troubles are settled for a lifetime. The Maytag is built so strong and sturdy, yet is so compact and handy to handle. The cast-aluminum tub keeps the water hot for an entire washing and then I just lower the drain outlet and out goes the water."

For homes without electricity, the Maytag is available with in-built gasoline motor.

Machine and Stacks Burn

The threshing machine belonging to Iver Larson and the total crop for this year, belonging to I. A. Hovrud was destroyed by fire on Wednesday of last week. The machine had just been pulled onto the farm and a few bushels threshed out when one of grain stacks burst into flames from sparks thrown by the old steam engine. The fire spread so fast on account of the hard wind that the crew had all they could do to save the buildings on on the place.

LESSON XXXXI

WHEN THE COWS COME FRESH: The first month after a cow freshens is an important time in her production period because during that time she will probably hit the pace she will carry throughout the rest of the year—good, fair or poor. A milk production of from six to ten thousand pounds a year for a cow is exceptional work and requires exceptionaly good conditions not only in feed and care, but in getting a running start, so as to speak.

A dairy cow should be in a good state of flesh when she freshens and also in a good state of mind—in other words comfortable and feeling at home. Laxative feed is desirable at this time and not too much grain for the first few days but plenty of water. The grain feed should be increased gradually until about the fourth week when the cow should be on full feed and giving her maximum amount of milk.

WOMAN STUDIES HAREM SECRETS

Finds Peephole in Ancient Seraglio Palace.

Constantinople.—An American woman, the first foreigner whom the Ottoman government permitted to enter the harem of Seraglio palace, has just completed an exhaustive study of that mysterious labyrinth.

She is Dr. Barnette Miller, head of the history department of Wellesley college, who returned to Stamboul this year to complete the investigations she began in 1907. Aided by a young Turkish girl, Mebrouke Hanem, a member of the staff of Constantinople College for Women, Doctor Miller is the first American to delve deeply into the shadowy history of the vast 500-year-old palace where Turkish padishahs and sultans and their hundreds and thousands of slaves lived hidden lives.

The American investigator discovered in her prowlings through the palace that there existed one peephole by which the women of the harem could look upon men other than their sultanic master and their guardian eunuchs. High in the wall of the palace mosque where the sultan and his masculine followers worshiped, Doctor Miller found a tiny window covered with a golden lattice and discovered that this window connected with the room in the harem where the women gathered to pray.

During her final investigations this year Doctor Miller was given permission by the new republican Turkish authorities to enter every one of the hundreds of palace rooms save one. No human except the sultans, not even the sultan-smiting, religion-defying Mustapha Kemal, has ever entered that sanctum sanctorum where the beard of the Prophet reposes. Outside the heavily barred window of that room 40 turbaned priests, in groups of four, chant prayers from the Koran day and night, year after year, century after century.

New Method to Aid Deaf Is Being Taught

Los Angeles, Calif.—Extraordinary results of a method whereby children born deaf are taught to speak and to "hear" by lip reading were disclosed at the demonstration school of the University of California at Los Angeles.

The new method, according to Miss Rachel Dawes, a demonstration school teacher, presages the abandonment of the sign language.

The course of study includes lip reading, spelling, writing, reading, number and language work in addition to tongue gymnastics, the last of which forms the most important part of the work.

"Music, too, is an important factor in arousing the child's consciousness of vibration," Miss Dawes said.

"Being unable to hear, the children must be taught how to take the correct positions for language sounds, which we call 'tongue gymnastic work.' They must know where to put the tongue and how to give voice and breath for sound. Ten sound and syllable combinations have been learned by the children to date."

Scientists Hunt Poison to Kill Coddling Moth

Yakima, Wash.—Field laboratories have been opened here and at Wenatchee by the Department of Agriculture in an effort to develop a poison that will be superior to the lead-arsenate spray which at present is the only effective method of combating the coddling moth, an insect that causes huge losses to apple and pear growers.

Local orchardists are co-operating. They desire a poison that while deadly to the moth will be harmless to humans and which will not require a wash or other treatment that will shorten the life of the apple when in storage.

English Clerics' Wives Forced to Take Jobs

London.—Penury and even starvation among British clergy are advanced as reasons for a sharp decline in applicants for ordination in this country.

Four London clergymen's wives are working as waitresses in cafes, others as housekeepers and "lady helps" in order to make ends meet. In Birmingham, the wife of a curate was found working as a charwoman. A certain London minister with six children to support, has learned to repair boots so that he can make extra money in his spare time.

Self-Aiming Plane Gun Invented by Esthonian

Tallinn, Esthonia.—The Esthonia inventor, Karl Papello, has perfected a mechanism for airplanes which he claims will be able to locate the direction and position of other planes by their sound and fire a machine gun automatically.

This invention has attracted the notice of the British air ministry, it is reported here, and Papello is expecting an order from the British government. Papello spent eight months in British military schools and was invited to go on a lecture tour there last year.

TRAWLER'S CREW IN FIGHT WITH SHARKS

Captain of Vessel Reports He Saw 7,000.

Fleetwood, Eng.—While fishing for herring at grounds known as Klondyke, which lie between the north coast of Ireland and Barra Head, in the South Hebridean islands, a steam trawler had a thrilling fight with a shoal of sharks. The trawler concerned, the Castelnau of Boulogne, carries a crew of 22, in addition to a Fleetwood trawlerman, Skipper John Wright, who is sailing in the vessel as fishing pilot.

"During our voyage," Skipper Wright explained when the Castelnau returned to Fleetwood, "we came upon shoals of vicious sharks. There must have been 6,000 or 7,000 lashing the sea into foam for miles around. They completely surrounded our boat and bit huge holes in our net, and it was only with the utmost difficulty that we could haul it in. As night time approached we hove to and started sorting our catch and throwing smaller fish back into the sea.

Hooked 18 Sharks.

"The hungry sharks were on us immediately and we decided to clear the infested water as much as possible. We laid hooks on long poles which we suspended from the side of the ship, but the twine was not strong enough, and as the sharks grabbed the hooks with bait on they gave a violent lurch and carried the hooks and twine away with them.

"Our mascot kitten was unfortunately knocked overboard and, although it was only in the water a few seconds, a shark had bitten one of its legs off and we had to drown it on board to put an end to its misery. In the end we got 18 sharks on board, and we had to stand clear. They were lashing about the deck so fiercely that it would have been fatal to have approached them.

Drowned One by One.

"Finally we lassoed each one and suspended them from the ship, head downwards in the sea, and thus drowned them one by one. During our homeward voyage the Frenchmen reveled in shark steaks and the French skipper invited me to have some, but I told him I did not want any.

"The skipper then told me to have beefsteak and chips, but the beefsteak turned out to be shark steak, and I could not discern any difference in taste. In France shark steak is worth four or five francs a pound, but in England they find their way to fishmeal works."

Wife Sues Poker Club for Husband's Losses

Washington.—The Supreme court was asked to decide whether clubs are liable for damages to wives for depriving them of the companionship of their husband's income.

The case came from McGill, White Pine county, Nev., and was brought by Mrs. Gladys Anderson against the McGill club where she asserted her husband played poker.

She declared in her suit that her husband spent much of his time at the club and lost a large portion of his salary, causing her "worry, humiliation, sickness and grievous mental pain." She insisted in her complaint that the club, as a public nuisance, was liable to her for damages.

The state courts dismissed the suit, however, holding that there was no provision in law warranting action against a club on such grounds. Mrs. Anderson would have the Supreme court reverse this decision.

Hindenburg Dam Makes Ocean Build New Land

Westerland-on-Sylt, Germany.—Through the building of the Hindenburg dam to the Island of Sylt, two years ago, the swift current sweeping between the island and the mainland was checked, with the result that silt began to accumulate in the so-called Watten sea.

The dam, which carried a railway track, was built only two years ago, but soundings have now disclosed that the accumulation in places has reached a full yard, so that it will be only a few years before what had been the sea will be land. This will add thousands of acres of tillable soil to Germany.

Last African Slave on Nassau, Bahamas, Dies

Nassau, Bahamas.—Martin Sawyer, the last of the African slaves on this island, died at the age of one hundred and five. When a small boy, Sawyer was captured in Africa by the Spaniards.

The slave ship was captured by a British vessels and the human cargo brought to Nassau. The boy was sold to the late R. H. Sawyer, who later gave him his freedom. Late in life Sawyer continued to yearn for the Africa which he remembered only faintly.

He remembered his tribal language and sang African songs.

TOURS DOMINION TO SAVE FORESTS

Tree Planting Car Is Operated in Canada.

Edmonton, Alta.—A tree-planting car, operated by the Canadian Forestry association, has just returned from the West and left for Peace river following a two months' trip over the lines of the Canadian National railways between Edmonton and Prince Rupert.

By the operation of the car the dominion government hopes to achieve direction of reforestation of burnt-over areas and at the same time to instruct townspeople, and others in more remote communities, in the care and protection of their forests.

The line of the Canadian National westward from Edmonton to the Pacific port of Prince Rupert, runs through heavily wood territory, threading its way along the Fraser, the Bulkley and the Skeena rivers.

This is a country which owes its beauty as much to the heavy green forests which cover it as to the mountains with which it is hemmed. The increasing tourist traffic, coupled with lumbering and ranching activities, renders fire a real peril.

During their stay in Britsh Columbia, the complement of the forestry car, accompanied lately by George Harcourt, representing the University of Alberta, held 351 meetings in the interests of forestry preservation. It is estimated that 60,000 persons attended these gatherings.

The distribution of placards took place at key points. These signs, bearing a brief conservation message, posted at cross roads, along the highways and the trails, present a pertinent message to the passer-by.

World's Tallest Building Is Planned for Chicago

Chicago.—Chicago gave birth to the skyscraper and now it is to regain the honor of having the tallest building in the world.

The Chicago Tower, which has been announced for construction in February, will rise 880 feet above the street level of Wacker drive, exceeding the height of the Woolworth building by 88 feet.

The Chicago Tower will have a gross floor area of 5,097,778 square feet which will make it the largest building in the world.

Nine classes of tenancy will be included in the new building. Besides a 75 story office building the skyscraper will house the Chicago Apparel Mart, a 440-room hotel, a 25-story garage, two clubs and two convention halls.

The building will be erected on air rights over the Illinois Central railroad tracks and its estimated cost is $45,000,000.

Walter W. Ahlschlager is the architect for the Chicago Tower.

Caterpillers Peril Crops in Portugal

There has not been a similar outbreak since 1883 and Portuguese farmers, unable to cope with the situation, have called for government assistance.

The invading caterpillar has been identified as a night-flying agrotis. It is green or grayish in color, with darker markings, and has pale pink underwings. It can fly only during the first two hours after nightfall, but in that time does much damage.

New Barley, Alfalfa, Produced in Michigan

East Lansing, Mich.—Michigan's latest contribution to American agriculture is the new "Spartan" barley and "Hardigan" alfalfa. Both, in statewide production for the first time, will be offered on the market this year.

Spartan barley was developed in an experimental laboratory 12 years ago by crossing the Michigan "Two Row" and Michigan "Black Barbless" varieties. It has an early maturity, a large yield, and does not have the usual rough beard.

Beekeepers Insure Selves Against Damage Suits

London.—Pioneer Beekeepers' association does not want to be stung by people who are stung by its bees. As a result the association has insured its members against public liability. For about 12 cents a year beekeepers can be insured for claims up to $500. The third party risks are very small, for bees do not attack people unless they are interfered with.

Heart Stops Beating but He Isn't Dead

Warsaw, Poland.—Medical circles are greatly interested in reports from the village of Sieniakonie, in the Vilna district, of a man whose heart action apparently has ceased but who still retains normal body temperature.

The man, Adam Woynisz, was struck by lightning and was considered dead. Shortly before his funeral his coffin was opened on his mother's wish and the man was found in what appeared a deep coma.

Not the Car but the Contents

FLORENCE NEWTON sighed as she sat on the steps of the little vine-covered porch of her home and watched the magnificent cars speed by. She wished that one—just one—might stop some day and the well-dressed crowd jump out and say: "Come along, Florence, let's go for a spin. It's too hot to play golf." Or, "Let's run out to the club this morning for a foursome." Of course, she knew nothing about golf or country clubs or taking spins, but these were the things she imagined the occupants of the glistening automobiles said to each other before starting off.

Florence had always been lonely, but lately her loneliness had been accentuated by the opening up of a new super development with country club, golf course and snobbery all included. Her street was the most direct route from town to this development and it had suddenly become alive with endlessly passing cars of great splendor and price. In the cool of the late summer evenings she would watch them rushing past and sometimes late, late at night, a car would flash by with the inside light on.

If only one would stop; one gorgeous, gleaming car. But none did. They all hurried along quite unmindful of Florence on the steps, often laughter floating out behind them to smite the ears of the lonely girl.

There came a wretched Thursday when everything had gone wrong for her from the minute she got up. Her mother had suffered all night with sciatica and Florence had been awake for hours putting hot applications on the aching spots. Then the milkman had failed to come in time for breakfast and she had been forced to put on a street dress and run around to the corner grocery. And while she was gone the oatmeal had burned. (She'd been trying to cook it without using a double boiler so as to hasten the process.) After breakfast when she finally got her father off to work fifteen minutes late she had taken mop and furniture oil into the living room and had promptly let the bottle slip out of her hand. It fell crashing to the floor letting its greasy contents escape on the best rug. In the midst of all her troubles the doorbell rang and she hastily got up off the floor where she was mopping the rug with suds and hot water and went to answer the bell. A young man was standing outside, hat in hand, a neat young man with humorous blue eyes and a rather distressed expression on his face.

"May I use your phone?" he asked. "I was on my way to Westmoreland Park and I find I've run out of gas."

"Come in," she smiled, holding her sudsy, oily hands out at right angles from her body. "Is this a closeup of one of my heroes of the imported limousines?" she asked herself a little breathlessly, but a second later she looked out and saw a most modest, inconspicuous little car drawn up to the sidewalk.

"You look as if you were having a time this morning, too," he said sympathetically. And why, Florence doesn't know to this day, but she heard herself telling all of her woes to the perfect stranger who had merely asked to use her phone.

"I declare, that's a shame. You poor kid," he said, in his soft southern voice. "I tell you what let's do. I'm going out to Westmoreland to see about some surveying. Why don't you and your mother come along and get a little air? The change'll do you both good."

When Florence hesitated he said in a boyish outburst: "I'm a nice young man. I'm all right. Maybe it sounds fresh but I didn't mean to that way. I've got a mother and sisters of my own and often when I come home in the evening they're all fussed up over the housework and I take 'em for a ride and they forget all about it."

"I'd love to go," said Florence. "Let me speak to mother."

"All right. You slip along and get ready and I'll sit out on the porch and read my surveyor's bulletin and wait for the gas."

Mrs. Newton thought it very strange and said so, but there was something so pleading in Florence's expression that she could not resist, and all her reluctance vanished when she saw the frank open face of John Morgan. He was so full of spirits that the trip was a hilarious success, and after that it became quite a habit for him to drop in late in the evening and pick them up for a spin. Often one of his sisters would be with him or his mother, and frequently the little car was packed.

It was late in the winter that he ran in alone one evening and, finding Florence in the living room, stopped before her, his hands rammed in his pockets, a very guilty little-boy expression on his face.

"Florence, I've got to fess up," he said. "That first day I dropped in here I ran out of gas—on purpose. I'd seen you sitting on the porch so often and something seemed to draw me to you. In fact, I felt from the very first that you were my girl."

"Am I really Florence Newton? Can this be little me?" her brain chanted, but her lips expressed quite another idea.

"I've found out one thing, Jack," she laughed; "it isn't the cars but the contents that count."

While their children absorb sun rays and dirt, the mothers seem to do little but sit on the veranda smoking, talking and playing bridge.

The other day the seven-year-old boy happened to be near when his mother expressed a need.

"Aw, mother," said the little man, "don't make me walk out here before everybody with those ladies' things."—New York Sun.

Salts Fine for Aching Kidneys

When Back Hurts Flush Your Kidneys as You Clean Your Bowels

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, sometimes get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region begin drinking lots of water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here. take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is intended to flush clogged kidneys and help stimulate them to activity. It also helps neutralize the acids in the urine so they no longer irritate, thus helping to relieve bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in trying to correct kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

A "used car" is unused transportation

◆

A GOOD automobile is built to stand years of use. It will provide many thousands of miles of satisfactory transportation.

But only occasionally are all its years and all its mileage used up by one owner. Many owners turn their cars in after an average use of only two to three years—long before the cars' lives have been exhausted.

This custom brings into the market every year so-called "used" cars which represent outstanding opportunities to buy unused transportation at low cost.

Every year more and more people appreciate this fact. Today millions of families are driving cars of which they are the second or third or even fourth owners; and this year the volume of new car sales and trade-in transactions has created wider choices and greater values in unused transportation than ever before.

3 out of 5 buy used cars

◆

THREE out of five of the cars you see on the road have been purchased as "used" cars. You cannot tell—nor do you ask yourself—whether the driver of any particular car is its first owner, or its second or its third, providing the car looks well and is running satisfactorily.

The cars which General Motors dealers have accepted in trade vary in name, body style and price. Some have seen sturdy service; in others the potential mileage has scarcely been touched. And all offer a wide field of opportunities—

To the family wanting transportation at lowest possible cost.

To the family wishing to own a car of a higher price class.

To the family needing a second or third car to meet the requirements of all its members.

We invite you to examine the unused transportation in the stores of General Motors dealers. For your convenience General Motors extends the GMAC Purchase Plan.

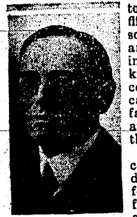
VARIOUS PLANS TO STEAL TIME AND MONEY FROM THE UNWARY

Bankers Association Official Tells How Young People Are Fleeced in "Hokum Pokum" Movie Schemes—The Investor Loses Savings by Listening to Messrs. Slick and Smooth.

By W. R. MOREHOUSE

Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association



W. R. MOREHOUSE

THE fabulous salaries paid stars of the first magnitude, and the publicity of the "movies" naturally create longing in the breasts of thousands of our young Americans to get into motion pictures. Because so many are ready to leave home, and risk everything on a fling at motion pictures, unscrupulous persons have devised ways of fleecing these ambitious young people out of their savings. "Hokum-pokum" schemes of various kinds are used with great success. Fake courses in the art of acting before the camera, fake courses on how to make-up, fake registration gags and screen tests, are among the schemes used to separate these thousands of young people from their cash.

The pilgrimage to the motion pictures centers by thousands of novices usually ends disastrously for the pilgrims. Naturally a few are successful, but only a very, very few, the ninety and nine meeting with disappointment. The truth is, the number of persons who seek to "break into" the movies exceed the number of available positions by one hundred to one, while in the realm of popular stars it is thousands to one.

Don't be misled by the promises of promoters of hokum-pokum schemes that there is room for all, because this last year over 100,000 young people knocked at the door for admission and were turned away because there was no room on the inside for them. Consult your banker or address the National Better Business Bureau, New York City, for information or advice regarding any enterprise that seeks to gain possession of your mony. They will give disinterested counsel before it is too late.

Also let every investor approached by either Mr. Slick or Mr. Smooth with a proposition yielding big dividends remember that such assurances always spell financial danger ahead. To every investor who is inexperienced in making investments, in other words perhaps just a little green and perhaps a little too easy, any offer coming from this source should be like a red flag warning to come to a complete stop.

Such investments as Mr. Slick or Mr. Smooth offer are too good to be true and therefore they are not true. Slick, Smooth and Company are not miracle workers although from their sales talk you would infer that they could make you rich as if by magic. No, they are not miracle workers—just slick and smooth.

The Estate Gag

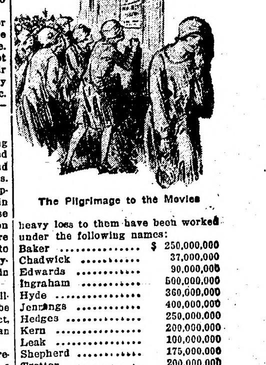
Twenty-four "estates" representing 5½ billions of dollars have been used as bait to interest a lot of savers and finally bleed them of their savings. The scheme is built around a supposed search for the heirs to certain phantom estates. At all costs these heirs must be found. Every person who can by any hook or crook, figure it out that he is in anyway related to the deceased are urged by some shyster lawyer or genealogist to send in their names and their life history.

Soon they receive glad tidings telling them that their family tree can be traced back to the deceased, in fact, they are a direct descendant and an heir at law.

Like fake raffles everybody who responds to the search is found to be a winner—in other words an "heir." Here is where the rainbow chaser gets trimmed. Before his claim to the mythical thousands can be pressed so as to insure success a demand is made on him to advance attorney's fees and pay the expense of tracing through his genealogy.

Not surmising that he is being trapped and seeing only the big inheritance which he is led to believe he will soon receive, he draws the amount necessary from his savings account and sends it on, not knowing he is actually throwing it away. But he is, for like thousands and thousands of other rainbow chasers, he parts with it for the last time.

So-called estate schemes which have produced thousands of "heirs" and at a heavy loss to them have been worked under the following names:



The Pilgrimage to the Movies

Baker	$ 250,000,000
Chadwick	37,000,000
Edwards	90,000,000
Ingraham	500,000,000

Chase	1,800,000,000
Townley	500,000,000
Webber	50,000,000
Weiss	20,000,000

Again, before parting with your money in any scheme you do not know all about consult your banker or a Better Business Bureau.

The Career of a Gag

"This, in brief, is the career of a gag," writes Robert E. Sherwood in the new Stokes book "Mirrors of the Year":—

"It is born on the street; it is sent in to a newspaper columnist or to the editor of a comic paper; it is published; it is handed about, from one salesman to another; it reaches the ears of a librettist, who converts it into a wow for his new show, or a vaudevillian who exclaims, 'that one goes in the act,' or a movie scenarist who uses it as a subtitle."

Pointer for Collectors

As officials prepared to hand out medals struck in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the state government of New York at Kingston, they were shocked to find that the letter "N" had been left out of the most important word on the medals—"Sesquicentennial." The legend on the bronze read: "Sesquicentenial." Hasty conning of dictionaries confirmed the suspicion that there was no authority for such simplified spelling. But optimists perceive a silver lining in the cloud. They point out that errors have made stamps and coins valuable, and that maybe the mistake will add to the value of the disk.

"Used Cars" Not Wanted

The used car seems to be a world problem. Polish motorists are abandoning the custom of selling their old cars only to their friends; the friends are becoming rich enough to buy new machines. Dealers in Bolivia have refused to accept "trade-ins" on new cars and the government has 15 old vehicles it would like to sell at any price. Egyptian dealers have organized a used-car sales company to handle all such machines. Rumania once was a good used-car market, but now motorists want the latest types and improvements.

Aeronautics Aids Farmer

Aeronautics, after adapting the windmill to its own purposes, is returning it to the farmer greatly improved as a result of the intensive research made by the aircraft industry. Changes in the number of blades and the pitch of the propellers used to drive electric generators on airplanes at the army laboratories at Dayton, Ohio, have resulted in a new type of wheel for ordinary windmills. This increases the speed of revolution from six to ten times that of the old-fashioned wheel.

EASY LESSONS IN AUCTION BRIDGE

Discards

DISCARDING is one of the most difficult operations for a beginner at Auction Bridge and many a trick is thrown away by careless or mistaken discards. The fundamental rules regarding this matter are: not to unguard a face card; and to discard from the weak suit or suits. For instance: if holding a Queen and two small cards of a suit which has not been led, both of the small ones must be saved because if one is thrown away the Queen becomes unguarded.

The discard is used to indicate to partner certain things about a hand; and there are several methods which various authorities advocate. The simplest method is to discard from weakness and let partner infer strength in suit not discarded. If, for instance, a spade is being led and you are void of that suit but have good clubs you could indicate this by discarding a small heart and a small diamond. But if you want to inform your partner quickly or think that you will not get a chance to make a second discard you may discard one of your strong suit as high as an eight. In other words a low discard indicates weakness and a high discard indicates strength.

Trouble frequently comes regarding the discard when a hand has several cards of an established suit of which the partner is void and only one possible card of re-entry, a guarded face card.

Suppose at a no trump declaration your hand contains the last two spades and three hearts to the Queen and a club is led. Your spades are good but to make them you are absolutely dependent upon getting the lead with the queen of hearts. If you discard a small heart you unguard your Queen and lose all possibility of making even one of your spades; therefore you always should discard good cards rather than to unguard your only re-entry card.

When declarer is playing a long suit the adversaries often have to make a number of discards and when this is the case they should try to understand each other and work together by each one holding a guard for the suit which his partner is discarding. This can be done only by watching the cards carefully and remembering the discards made by other players. It frequently happens that you must unguard a face card by discarding and when this is true continue to discard from the same suit rather than to keep two guards with a Jack and one with a Queen in different suits. In other words, if you are compelled to unguard a Jack you would better continue discarding that suit, Jack and all, rather than to begin on another suit containing a barely guarded face card.

Sometimes in place of giving partner as much information as possible by discards it may be advisable for the sake of deceiving the declarer to give incorrect information. If declarer on your right is running a long suit from his dummy and you discard small cards of another suit he is quite apt to start that suit next and take a finesse in it because you have indicated weakness by your discard. Therefore, to deceive him it would be perfectly proper for you to make a low discard from a suit in which you held the King. In such cases one always must judge whether such a play could possibly do any harm by misleading the partner.

From a declarer's standpoint, watching discards is a very important matter. When a declarer can run a five-card suit first it always is wise to do so and gain information regarding the adversaries' hands by their discards. Frequently a declarer cannot decide which suit to start second until he has finished the first one and watched the discards. If the adversaries are foolish enough both to discard from the same suit it usually gives declarer an opportunity to establish this second suit easily.

The direction in which to take a finesse often can be decided from discards provided you know your adversaries' method of playing well enough to be sure they are not deceiving you.

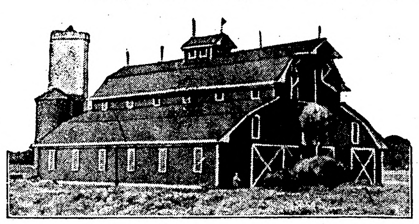
In playing a declared trump declarer frequently may be able to lead several winning cards of a suit from his own hand of which dummy is void and discard from dummy another suit of which the adversaries hold the command. Then use one or more of dummy's trumps on the suit just discarded before extracting trumps.

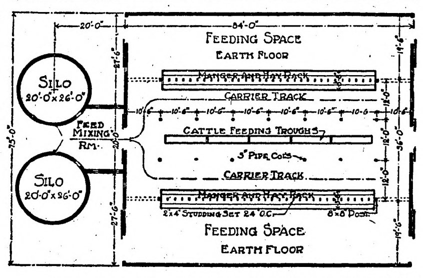
When playing against a no trump and your partner has opened a long suit be sure not to discard your last one of that suit. Save it to lead back to him.

Drudgery

Drudgery, toil—it requires a minimum of effort, of intelligence, and no imagination or initiative. It merely requires constant, daily, monotonous attention. Instead of its being, as we sometimes say of uncongenial tasks, "took much like work," it's not enough like work. There is no personal interest, no chance to use the mind, no challenge to the pride, the skill or ingenuity of the operator, no chance to grow—in other words, no real chance to work at all.—Jesse Lynch Williams, in Hearst's Cosmopolitan.

Profitable Handling Depends Upon Proper Housing for Beef Cattle





By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Much attention is given to the question of proper housing of dairy cattle, but it sometimes seems that beef cattle do not receive their due share of attention. If the raising of beef is to be made profitable good housing is an essential and, when it is time for "finishing," a well planned cattle feeding barn should be available. Such a barn is shown in the accompanying illustration together with a plan indicating its interior arrangement and equipment.

room connecting with two large silos. Doors are so arranged as to provide a straight drive through along each side and down the center of the barn, through the mixing room and out between the silos. Extending down the center of the barn is a long cattle-feeding trough with a manger and hay rack of equal length at each side of it and parallel. Between the feeding trough and these mangers, carrier tracks are provided for quicker and easier handling of feed.

While this barn is set on a concrete foundation an earth floor is entirely satisfactory for the interior, and this makes the cost of construction considerably lower than that of an equal-sized dairy barn, as does also the less elaborate equipment. The upper portion of the structure is supported on 5-inch pipe columns and above there is provided a large loft for the storage of hay and dry feed. With such

Spectacles for Racer

Race horses have been known to stumble at a crucial moment, losing their chance of victory and seriously impairing their value. It has been discovered that this tendency is not always due to faulty feet, but to defective vision. Recently, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine, a well-known owner of "blue bloods" had a special pair of glasses made to fit a two-year-old afflicted with imperfect eyesight. The lenses were incased in a wide, comfortably fitting holder kept snugly in place with straps and bands. Marked improvement in the horse's performance was noted while wearing the glasses.

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. CHAPTER X—Continued

It was a simple task, after all. "Miller'll take you back to your cell," explained Barker, "and give you files. You take them an' get busy on the bars in your window. Soon's it's dark—an' I want 'em filed through by then—Miller'll give you a couple of horses. You get out of town quick's you can and ride like the devil to Robbers' Roost. Don't go near Fair. Hunt up Wade instead an' tell him that the man we saw at the J/B ranch and the girl we were chasin' are both here. Tell him the girl's mashed on the buckaroo an' 's gone clear over to him, an if he don't want to see her showin' the doughboys the way to the Roost he'd better come quick an' carry them off. Get me?"

The men nodded. But Hen did more. Hen had an incurably clacking tongue. "Maybe the gal ain't gone back on us," he said. "She signed to us to keep still about knowin' her and whispered that she'd fix things for us. An' she did persuade the man to turn us over to you."

"Say that again." Barker's order came sharply.

Hen said it again in almost the same words. "I guess she thought that was the surest way of getting us free," he finished.

"The devil she did." Barker's voice showed profound amazement. For a moment he wondered if Stella could actually still be loyal to the band and had kept and would keep its secrets. But very quickly he dismissed the idea. If she had really had the men turned over to him, she had done so for her own reasons and not from any love for him and Wade; of this he felt very sure. Perhaps she had so far kept the location of the Roost secret for her foster father's sake; but that she would continue to do so was unbelievable.

"Don't matter," he went on, to the men. "You tell Wade what I said. Tell him I ain't sure she's told where the Roost is yet, but I am sure she's told pretty near everything else she knows an' she'll tell about the Roost by tomorrow if she's here to tell. Tell him to bring his men to the North Arroyo crossin' just north of town an' leave them there an' come to this office for the latest news. There's a captain and a half platoon of doughboys come in here today, an' the moonlight tonight will make it too risky to race around town promiscuous. You get all that?"

Yes, the men got it; or so they said.

Some two hours later, in the brief interval between the setting of the sun and the rising of the moon, the two bandits climbed through their doctored window and scurried away to the North Arroyo, where they mounted their horses and scurried away.

And not long afterward Go Ahead walked in on Barker with his careless greeting.

At the sound of the opening door Barker and Miller, seated at the table and engaged in earnest (and profane) conversation, sprang to their feet, dropping their hands to their pistol butts as they moved. But an instant later Barker, noting that both of Go Ahead's hands were in the loose pockets of his coat and that each pocket showed a suspicious looking protuberance that might well be due to a revolver muzzle, took away his hands, an act that Miller speedily imitated.

"Evenin'," replied Barker, to Go Ahead's greeting. "Come in an' sit down. Didn't hardly expect you tonight. Thought you and Bob would be too chummy."

Barker intended his words to be insulting; like Bridget, he wanted to trap Go Ahead into some word or glance that might betray knowledge of Bob's sex. But as Go Ahead had no knowledge on that point to betray, Barker's words passed clear over his head. "Had to come tonight or not at all," he said lightly, seating himself so as to face both Barker and Miller. "Got to take the 9:34 train over to Mustin tomorrow morning. Be back the next day, but didn't want to keep you waiting so long's all that. What did you want to talk to me about?"

Barker, though easily taken by surprise and though slow in repartee, was by no means a fool. Given time, he could puzzle things out fairly well. Go Ahead had got the best of him twice that day, largely by taking him by surprise. But since then he had had time to reach certain deductions. In fact, that was what he and Miller had been engaged in doing when Go Ahead came in.

On reflection he had been unable to believe that Go Ahead could be merely an irresponsible cow puncher who had accidentally butted into the game at the J/B ranch. He might have accepted him as such if the proceedings at the ranch had been all; though why an errant cow puncher should interfere on behalf of a seeming boy whom he did not know would still remain to be explained.

But they were not all. After Stella had escaped, Go Ahead had followed her trail. If he had known that she was a girl such action would not have been very puzzling; but, assuming that he thought her a boy—and Barker really believed that he did so think her—it, too, clamored for explanation. Then Stella's abrupt volteface and attempt to get back to the ranch after she had talked with Green (who was a partisan of Fair's and who had been mysteriously absent from the Roost for a month) seemed to indicate some understanding between Green and Go Ahead and Stella—especially when Go Ahead joined the girl and aided her to escape. Of course Green had explained all this glibly; but now Barker was beginning to doubt the explanation. And, finally, when Go Ahead and Stella had turned up at his very door with such exceeding patness and had later gone to Bridget's (Bridget being a very old friend of Fair's), Barker concluded that Go Ahead had come to Lobo county on some very definite errand. Remembering Fair's opposition to his wish to marry Stella, reckoning that Fair had guessed that he had not given up his design and might readily have learned of his intrigue with Wade, and recalling the fact that Fair had promised Stella's real father that he would send her to her friends, the sheriff had little difficulty in making a shrewd guess at the truth.

So sure was he of the accuracy of his deductions that, now that chance offered, he determined to put them to the test.

"What I wanted to see you about is mighty soon told," he said bluntly. "I want to warn you that I'm going to marry Stella Fair and get her money, an' that no d—d imitation cow puncher's going to come out here from the East and carry her off."

This time it was Go Ahead who was surprised. But Go Ahead reacted more quickly than Barker ever could—and he was not enough surprised to take his hands off the pistols in his pockets.

After a gasp of amazement he laughed. "Bravo, Barker," he said. "Evidently, I've cruelly misjudged you. You've got a lot more imagination than I thought. Now tell me who the imitation cow puncher is, and why you're taking me into your matrimonial confidences, and we can talk."

But Barker was not to be balked. "Oh, cut out that bunk," he growled. "You c'n talk all right; an' you got the best of me twice today, I'll admit. But you can't do it again. I guess you think you've got the girl all right an' that you're goin' to get away with her an' her money. Well, you ain't. You ain't even got another guess comin'. You've used up your guesses an' you've played things a little too fine. You're goin' East on the limited one hour from now or you're goin' to stay here for keeps in a nice hole in the ground."

"That so?" Go Ahead's tone showed a confidence that he did not entirely feel.

"Yes, that's so." Barker's voice was grim. "You think you've got me because you've got me covered from your pockets. But you ain't. Why, you fool! It's me that's got you covered. You ain't the first man that's tried to get me in this office. I'm loaded for you and anybody else. . . Don't believe me, hey? All right, I'll show you. And after I've shown you, you take your hands out of those pockets mighty careful and put 'em up."

With his foot the sheriff pressed a spring; and the three window blinds of the room, suddenly released, shot upward with a whirr. Framed in each window stood a man with revolver trained on Go Ahead.

"Put 'em up," reiterated the sheriff.

But Go Ahead did not put his hands up. He did not even take them out of his pockets. Instead he laughed and rose—very, very leisurely—to his feet. He had no desire to provoke the men at the windows to action.

"Good stuff, Barker," he admitted. "Trouble is, old man, I think about two jumps ahead of you. I asked Captain Carter to surround this place as soon as he saw me enter it tonight; and I haven't the least doubt that he's done it. The regulars are apt to be on time, you know—listen."

Go Ahead was romancing. He had sent no word to Captain Carter. He was trapped and his chance of escaping was infinitesimal. He knew very well that Barker had no intention in the world of sending him away by train, that the suggestion of such sending was merely to get him to take his hands from the revolvers that covered Barker. Once he did that his shrift would be short. He said what he did on the bare chance that his words might create a diversion that would give him a chance for his life.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

There are about 2,000,000 girls in the United States named Mary.

Army Rations Long Ago

How the American soldiers in the old fort of Detroit used to fare is indicated by a warrant recorded in September, 1797, contained in the records of Otto Stoll, register of deeds, and signed by Edward Day, department commissary. The warrant reads: "The United States owe at Detroit to Messrs. Leith, Shepard and Duff, 5,185 rations of soap at 22 cents a pound; 123 pounds beef at 10 cents a pound; 31,736 rations of whisky at $2 a gallon (one-half a gill being a ration); 5,404 rations of candles at 24 cents a pound, and 24,886 rations of vinegar at 6 cents a quart. . . . All of which quantities have become due to the soldiery anterior to this date as appears by due bills of the assistant commissary."

Pity the Pretty

Homely girls have it all over their beautiful sisters, if the newspapers tell the truth. The former never have any trouble of any sort, kind or description.—Seattle Argus.

Soviets Grant Mercy to Afflicted Sire

Leningrad.—Sometimes Soviet justice is merciful. A case has just been decided by the Leningrad provincial court in which a father confessed to the murder of his two-year-old-son. The father, an aviation pilot named Orlovsky, said he had killed his boy because the boy was incurably insane, suffering from water on the brain. Orlovsky produced evidence, and his wife supported him, of his own unbearable suffering at the tragedy, and proved that he had consulted many doctors who pronounced the case helpless.

Orlovsky was sentenced to only six months imprisonment by the court, and this sentence was then commuted to a severe reprimand.

PRISONER IN GRIEF ONLY FOR HIMSELF

New Britain, Conn.—Making it clear to police that he was sorry, not for his victims but for the predicament in which he has placed himself, Samuel Weiss, thirty-two years old, confessed to putting cyanide in several bottles of home brew from which his brother, John, and two neighbors, John Stein and John Stehr, died after drinking.

Weiss' confession was as heartless as his action. He told the police he was in love with his sister-in-law and had long ago determined to do away with his brother. He regretted that the poison had worked so quickly, telling police he had hoped his brother would "die like a dog in the yard."

After his confession, which came after five detective sergeants had questioned him throughout the night, Weiss began to sob, but he quickly assured his questioners that his tears were not for his brother or the dead neighbors, but for himself, as he feared he would be hanged.

Weiss has a wife and family in Czechoslovakia, but he said he promptly forgot them when he went to live with his brother and sister-in-law, who also is being held as a possible accessory before the fact. His affair with Mrs. Weiss came to a climax last Easter, he said, when the woman took $500 from her husband's savings and eloped to Boston with him. Last July she returned to her husband and when Weiss reappeared she rejected his advances. His confession did not implicate the woman.

Trail of Death Left by Murderous "Chink"

Fairfield, Calif.—Ten Chinese were slain and five seriously wounded when Loy Yeung, a cook, ran amuck on the Wong Gee ranch, five miles from here.

Using a rifle and a hatchet he killed Wong Gee, his wife and three small children. Five others, including Wong Hueng, brother of the ranch owner, fell dead under the maniac's weapons and five others, ranch workmen, were wounded.

Loy Yeung then fled in an automobile owned by one of his victims.

The attack came without warning, survivors said. The cook had been employed on the ranch for the last three months. He descended upon the Wong family brandishing his hatchet and killed the mother, father and three children, decapitating the youngest infant as it lay in the mother's arms.

Residents of Spanish Village Like Savages

Madrid, Spain.—Spain's efforts to improve the living conditions of her people have disclosed the existence of an extraordinary village within 500 miles of Madrid where 350 persons live without marriage, baptism or the usual civilized forms.

Valdemanqueda is the name of the place and Gen. Primo de Rivera's attention was called to it when he happened to take a vacation in a near-by monastery. The locality formerly belonged to the duke of Medinaceli, who sold it to the Spanish resin trust.

There is a tumble-down church with no priest, a school with no pupils and the inhabitants live in a state of semi-starvation. Mental degeneracy is common because of consanguinity.

Sailor Makes "Hades" His Last Destination

New York.—Benjamin Shor, eighteen, able seaman, recently made his last entry in his log. In a black leather looseleaf notebook containing neatly typewritten pages, listing ports he had visited and ships on which he had sailed, was written shakily, in pale blue ink:

"Sailing for Hades on the S. S. Cyanide. Benjamin Shor."

He then took a fatal dose of potassium cyanide.

Evidence That Sailor Was Victim of Shark

Philadelphia.—A human thumb and a coat sleeve were found in a 7-foot shark captured far out at sea by Charles McNulty, of Philadelphia. The shark was caught with a very heavy hook and line and five pistol shots were required to kill it. The thumb had been cleanly severed and the sleeve was part of a uniform common in the merchant marine.

Secretary Knew How to Handle Balfour

In Paris during the peace conference, two young secretaries were conversing. This is what was overheard:

"Why don't you persuade your old man to get his hair cut?" said one. "He looks like the Old Man of the Sea."

"I know," said the other, "but he won't go to the barber's. I can't persuade him."

A pause. Then from the first speaker:

"I can."

The next day he approached Lord Balfour—the "old man" in question.

"Oh, sir," he said, "how like Mr. Lloyd George you look with your hair long like that!"

Balfour arose and went to the barber's shop on the spot.—Kansas City Star.

Taught to Handle Money

A course of instruction in money management will be given experimentally to elementary pupils in two grades of Driscoll and Devotion schools, Brookline, Mass. The course, planned by a member of the faculty of the economics committee of the Massachusetts Teachers' federation, is a systematic study of the implications of money as they confront the self-supporting adult; the necessity for work; capacity to earn; usefulness of work to others; payment in return for service, and use of money in saving, spending, and giving.—School Life.

Bachelor Primate

The fact that the new archbishop of Canterbury is still unmarried recalls a story of him and Queen Victoria which, if not true, is at any rate good enough to be true. The queen, the story runs, said to him: "Doctor Lang, why don't you dismiss a couple of curates and marry a wife?" "Madam," replied the future archbishop, "I can dismiss curates. I could not dismiss a wife."—Manchester Guardian.

Basket ball has just been introduced to Guam and the natives are taking to it with an enthusiasm rivaling that shown for baseball when the Americans first brought the game to the South seas.

How many people you know end their colds with Bayer Aspirin! And how often you've heard of its prompt relief of sore throat or tonsilitis. No wonder millions take it for colds, neuralgia, rheumatism; and the aches and pains that go with them. The wonder is that anyone still worries through a winter without these tablets! They relieve quickly, yet have no effect whatever on the heart. Friends have told you Bayer Aspirin is marvelous; doctors have declared it harmless. Every druggist has it, with proven directions. Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1927, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1928 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by
G. A. YOUNGQUIST
Attorney-General of Minnesota.

Addressed to
MIKE HOLM
Secretary of State.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT,
G. A. YOUNGQUIST,
Attorney General.

St. Paul, Minnesota, April 30, 1928.
HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State:

In compliance with the provisions of section 46, General Statutes 1923, I furnish you herewith a statement of the purpose and effect of proposed amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1928, in accordance with certain acts adopted by the legislature at the 1927 session thereof.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

By the adoption of chapter 445, Laws 1927, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 5 article 9 of the constitution. This section now reads as follows:

"For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such works, except as authorized by section 16 of Article 9, and by Article 16 of this Constitution; but it may levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful, in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state, and shall place the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in section 2 of said Article 16, and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

If amended as proposed this section will read as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such works, except as authorized by section 16 of Article 9, and by Article 16 of this Constitution, but it may levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful, in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state, and shall place two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in section 2 of said Article 16, and one-third thereof in the state road and bridge fund, and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:
The entire proceeds of the gasoline tax are now placed in the trunk highway fund for use on the trunk highway system. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to place two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax in the trunk highway fund and one-third in the state road and bridge fund.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:
The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to place two-thirds of the proceeds of the gasoline tax in the trunk highway fund for the use of the trunk highway system, and one-third in the state road and bridge fund for lending aid, by the distribution of that fund among the counties of the state, in the construction and improvement of roads other than trunk highways.

First:

DIVISION OF GASOLINE TAX

Amendment to section 5 of article 9 of the Constitution (as amended), authorizing the state to place in the trunk highway fund two-thirds and in the state road and bridge fund one-third of any and all excise taxes levied and collected on the business of selling or dealing in fluids used or which can be used for motor vehicle power purposes.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2

By the adoption of chapter 444, Laws 1927, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 3, Article 10 of the Constitution relating to corporations. This section now reads as follows:

"Each stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business, shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him."

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

"Section 3. The Legislature shall have power from time to time to provide for, limit and otherwise regulate the liability of stockholders or members of corporations and co-operative corporations or associations, however organized. Provided nothing in this section shall be construed as repealing or in any manner affecting the liability of stockholders in banks or corporations organized for banking purposes as provided in Section 13 of Article 9 of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:
The constitution as it now stands, makes every stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on a manufacturing or mechanical business, liable for the debts of the corporation, if the corporate assets are insufficient to pay the debts, up to an amount equal to the par value of the stock held or owned by him, in addition to any sum that he may owe the corporation on account of his stock. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to authorize the legislature to prescribe and regulate by law the liability of stockholders or members in all corporations, including co-operative corporations or associations, however organized, except stockholders in corporations and joint associations organized for banking purposes which issue bank notes, as provided by section 13 of Article 9 of the Constitution. The effect of this exception is explained in the next following paragraphs.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:
The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate the present fixed rule of stockholders' liability prescribed by the Constitution, except in the case of stockholders in banks which issue bank notes, and to place the matter of prescribing and regulating the liability of stockholders in all corporations, co-operative corporations or associations created under the laws of this state (except those banking corporations and joint associations specifically excepted therefrom) entirely within the control of the legislature, subject to change from time to time as they may see fit.

Stockholders in banks of the kind provided for by section 13 of Article 9 of the Constitution are by that section made liable for the debts of such corporation or association up to an amount equal to double the amount of stock owned by them. Stockholders of this class are excepted from the operation of the proposed amendment. However, the only banks provided for by section 13 are those that issue bank notes. There are none such in this state. Hence, stockholders in state banks are not within the exception of the proposed amendment but fall in the same class as stockholders in other corporations.

Second:

LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS IN CORPORATIONS.

Amendment to section 3, Article 10, of the Constitution, authorizing the legislature to prescribe and limit the liability of stockholders in corporations.

Gasoline or Electricity Runs The MAYTAG

FARM homes without electricity can have the same, speedy, handy, clean-washing Maytag as homes with electricity. The famous Maytag Multi-Motor is an in-built gasoline engine, as compact as an electric motor and delivering the same smooth flow of power. Any woman can operate it. A step on the pedal starts it. All bearings are high-grade bronze. The carburetor is flood proof and has but one adjustment.

The Maytag seamless, non-breakable, cast-aluminum tub and gyrafoam action washes grimy overalls clean without hand-rubbing. The average washing takes but an hour.

Perfect wringing is another advantage of the Maytag. The Roller Water Remover has a soft top roll and a hard bottom roll. It wrings everything evenly dry and spares the buttons.

LESSON XXXXI

LOOK OUT FOR COLD WEATHER: Dairy cows should be in the barn at night when the weather is cold. Pasturing the cows late in the fall and leaving them in the pasture or yard at night is an expensive way when you figure the loss in milk production. Having the cows out at night when there is a frost or cold rain will cause them to be down in milk in the morning from one to two quarts each. You notice this when you are weighing the milk from each cow and keeping a careful record with them.

It does not pay as a rule to pasture cows after Obtober first unless the pasture is especially good. When the weather is chilly they walk around a great deal and use up much of their feed in exercise that should go for milk production. For cows to do their best work in milk production they must be quiet, contented and comfortable as well as properly fed.

What Will you do When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks. Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fretful, or restless. Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

But while he spoke, he heard, they all heard, in the road without the rasp of a sharp order and the quickly following beat of footsteps.

At the sound Go Ahead spun round to the window, jerking his pistols free as he moved. But he had no use for them. The men at the window had vanished, and he swung back in time to stop Barker and Miller from attempting to fire. "Easy, boys, easy," he counseled.

The next instant the door was burst open and Captain Carter sprang in—with Bob by his side.

"What's the matter here?" he cried.

Carelessly Go Ahead returned his weapons to his pockets. "Nothing to speak of, Captain," he replied. "Somebody tried to hold the sheriff and me up through the windows. I guess you've scared them off. But I'm a whole lot obliged to you for coming, Captain."

The captain looked a little bewildered. But he shrugged his shoulders. "I'm satisfied if you are," he answered.

"I am—for the time being. Er—Captain, if you're patroling toward Bridget's I'll be glad to go along with you, if you don't mind?"

The captain smiled. "Curiously enough, I'm going to that very place," he observed.

Go Ahead turned to the sheriff. "Night night, Barker," he said. "Be sure to see me off on the 9:34 tomorrow morning."

Smilingly Go Ahead followed the captain out of the office. But as he stepped through the door he caught Stella's hand and pressed it. "Thank you, boy," he said, feelingly. "That's the second time you've saved my life today. How did you know where I'd gone?"

Stella's breath was coming very quickly. "I made Bridget tell me," she whispered. "Then I went for the captain and the men. We've been waiting outside. When the blinds went up and I saw those men outlined against the light with their guns—Oh, Go Ahead, if you'd been killed I'd have hunted them down and killed them both!"

CHAPTER XI

Wade, as Go Ahead had guessed from his bandaged head, had suffered more or less severely from Diego's ambush. And Diego had suffered also.

Wade had been the first to bolt through the door into the semi-obscurity of the corridor, and Diego had fired instantly without waiting to make sure who was coming. The bullet struck Wade high up in the forehead, passed through the skin, circled over the top of the skull, and went about its business, the shock knocking him over.

Barker, bursting out on Wade's heels, had already drawn his sheath knife, the only weapon that Go Ahead had left him, and this he hurled at Diego, or rather at the flash of Diego's pistol. The knife, however, went true, transfixing Diego's right right arm and causing him to drop the pistol without firing a second shot.

All three, being then weaponless, stopped fighting, recognized each other, and counted up the damages.

Diego's wound, though painful, was not dangerous and did not disable him. Wade's wound was not disabling, either, and, if he had gone quietly to Robbers' Roost and had taken care of himself there, it probably would have given him little trouble. But the long chase in the blazing sun, the rage over his humiliation at Go Ahead's hands, and the final fury that possessed him when he found that Go Ahead and Stella had slipped through his hands in some inexplicable way, played hob with him.

Fever racked and exhausted, he at last got back to the Roost and tried to sleep, but for hours he could not. And when, about midnight, he did at last close his eyes, it was only to be awakened by the arrival of the two bandit messengers that Barker had sent.

He was in no condition and in no mood to listen quietly to the story they told nor to the message they brought. Quicker of comprehension than Barker, he grasped the essentials of the situation before the men had more than fairly begun their tale, and maddened by the fever in his veins and the triphammer throbbing in his brain, he sprang to his feet and rushed out of the cabin.

A moment more and the brazen alarm bell of Robbers' Roost sent its wild summons through the sleeping camp.

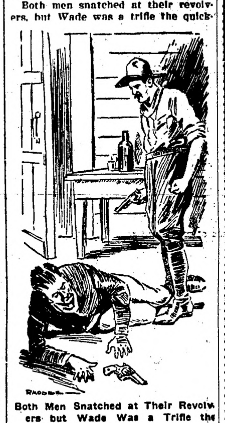
Up and out, from cave and from cabin, poured bandits, women, and children—all who went to make up the population of the Roost. Some came shivering, wild-eyed with fear; others came ready to fight for their lives. Never before in the history of the Roost had the bell rung in the night, and those who heard it knew that it betokened no light danger.

With the others came Fair, half dressed, buckling on his pistol belt. To Wade, still sounding the bell, he rushed.

"What's up?" he demanded.

Wade threw down the padded mallet and turned, glaring. "The whole show's up!" he raved. "You traitor! You and that girl of yours have sold us out."

Both men snatched at their revolvers, but Wade was a trifle the quicker.



Both Men Snatched at Their Revolvers but Wade Was a Trifle the Quicker.

Two shots rang out; and Fair crumpled down.

All about sounded the click of revolvers. But Wade did not hear them or did not heed them. "It's true!" he yelled. "Word's just come from Jim Barker. Fair's girl is at Loboville with that man we were chasing today. He's a ranger or somethin'. She's mashed on him; and she's sold us out."

"That's a lie!" Hot faced, furious, Green broke through the crowd. "That man's not a ranger or anything like it. He's Bob's cousin, come from the East to take her home with him and keep her out of Barker's clutches. Wade took her with him the other night to sell her to Barker. He tried to play a dirty trick on her at the J/B ranch, an' Go Ahead dropped in just in time to stop him and make monkeys of him an'—"

"Crack!" Green's voice broke—stopped. Desperately he tried to draw his gun. But Wade's bullet had gone too true. Midway of the effort he crumpled down beside Fair.

From the crowd a yell of rage sounded. But before action could follow, another man sprang forward, hands uplifted. "Hold on," he yelled. "Don't shoot! If we've been sold out we've got somethin' else to do besides killing each other. Don't kill any more till we know. We'll need all the men we've got if the doughboys are after us."

The words came as a douche of cold water to the maddened men, recalling them to a realization of their own danger. "That's right, Ames," cried a single voice. "What's up? Make Wade tell us!" And a roar of agreement went up.

Like Dynamite

There is nothing that a man will not do for the woman he truly loves! There is a type of woman who knows this and who, after having won the devoted love of a man, proceeds to use that love as a means of gaining her purely selfish ends.

Many a woman of this type is hopelessly extravagant. She knows that her husband will make any sacrifice to gratify even her slightest whim. But she often does not know that the ver[illegible] makes him spoil her will make him violently condemn her if she indulges in dangerous indiscretions.

Love is somewhat like dynamite. If properly handled, it can serve the most useful purposes. If treated carelessly, it can cause havoc and even death.—True Story Magazine.

Keeping Up With Life

"When you turn a sudden corner and meet yourself a goin' the other way hit's plumb certain that one of you is a headin' the wrong direction."—Preachin' Bill.

YES, I know . . . But you are not so different from the rest of us. Most of us are bothered more or less because the world is so much older today than it was yesterday.

No matter how hard we try to keep up we seem to be always behind. We are always wishing Life would wait a minute. If Life would only stand still we might catch up with it.

But Life doesn't stand still; it never has and never will. And from start to finish Life always leads. Ride ourselves as hard as we may—lay on the whip of necessity, ply the spurs of ambition—Life runs always more than a length ahead. Mr. Casual Observer says: "There are a few fast ones nowadays." But the fastest steppers that ever raced on the track of time ran always at the tail of Life. Catch up with Life? Never! I tell you, it is impossible. The race is fixed. Why, we can't even catch up with ourselves.

And, between you and me, it may be a good thing that the race is fixed for Life to win. I guess it is a good thing, too, that we can't even catch up with ourselves. I don't know about you, but speaking for myself I have more than a suspicion that if I ever should succeed in catching up with myself I would be sure to make one jump too many and leave myself behind.

Yes, the world is older than it was when our great-great-grandparents were training us for our race with Life. Touching some things the world is wiser.

For instance, we are beginning to understand that training for the race with Life actually does begin with the several-times-great-grandparents of the entrant.

When our understanding of this truth reaches the point where we can remember our forefathers without forgetting our grandchildren we will have arrived somewhere in what our doctors of esthetics call culture.

What our doctors of medicine mean when they speak of culture is sometimes something else—and sometimes not so different.

You know the old saying: "People who are content to rest their claims to recognition upon their ancestors are like potatoes: the best part of them is underground."

Oh, yes, certainly, I agree that it is good to know the name of the ship that brought our great-great-great-ones over. I am merely trying to say if we do not keep a sharp lookout forward our descendants will be wondering what we came over in, where we came from, and why.

So far as I am informed Life moves in one direction only: straight ahead. There seems to be no reverse gear, no brakes and no way of stopping. Everything must move forward on the road which Life travels, or drop out—human things not excepted.

Those silly folk who persist in wearing their head-lights where their tail-lights ought to be, always make trouble for themselves and others.

No, you simply cannot make better time by wearing your tail-light in front and your head-lights behind.

But there are some things about which the world knows no more today than it did when it lived in a cave, dressed in skins and ate its meat raw.

Yes, and between you and me, these things of which the world can never know more than it has always known are the only things which are worth bothering about.

We are moved today by the same passions which moved us at the beginning of Life. We are subjected to the same temptations which tried us in the Garden of Eden. We follow the same instincts and work to the same end as when we were wriggling around in the mud trying to make a living in early Paleozoic times. Physically, mentally, spiritually the real needs of the world are the same this year as they were forty or fifty million years ago.

Somewhere to live, something to eat, a mate, something to think about, something to do, God to worship—these things we have always had; these things we must always have. But the houses we live in, the manner of our cooking, our ideas of mating, the things we think about and do, the forms of our worship—these all have changed from age to age.

A prehistoric cave, a mud hut, a cliff dwelling, a castle, a palace, a farmhouse, a city apartment, hotels; these all have been evolved by man's unchanging need of somewhere to live.

Hunger is hunger—the same today as in the beginning—the same in every land, every language, every social plane.

The time was when we mated to establish homes. I will leave it for you to say what the prevailing ideas of mating are these days and where they are likely to lead us.

A long, long time ago—before Hunt was governor of Arizona—a tangled-haired, low-browed, bewhiskered person sat in a cave and with a sharp bit of flint scratched something on the bone of a prehistoric animal. The something which our ancient friend scratched on the flat bone was meant to tell how he chased and killed the critter that supplied the bone, and how he felt about it. It didn't amount to much from the viewpoint of the art editor. But just the same it was the beginning of Art. The succeeding ages have brought paints, brushes, canvas, paper, printer's ink, printing presses, and all such things to replace the sharp flint and the flat bone. But the need of expression which is the genesis of Art is still the same. The real artist of today still sits in his cave and tries to put down what he has seen and felt.

Through unnumbered ages the forms of worship have changed with the changing conceptions of Deity, but man's need to worship has remained the same. The outward and visible trappings of religion have changed as Life has gone forward and man has followed Life but God is still the God of our beginning.

Very well, we will talk about Christianity, if you wish—some other time.

Just now we are thinking about keeping up with Life. I am trying to say that we can live successfully only by following Life—by which I mean conforming in thought and habit to the changes which Life, as it goes forward, demands; and that we shall most miserably perish if we fail to recognize, through all our changes, those elements of our being which are unchangeable.

Exactly. That is the idea. The changes which Life demands are like the colors assumed by a chameleon. When Mr. Chameleon migrates, or advances in education, or strides forward in science, or climbs up the social ladder, or betters his position, or becomes the head of the firm, Mr. Chameleon simply changes his make-up. He does not change himself. No chameleon ever became an alligator by changing his color from brown to green.

Through all his color changes Mr. Chameleon remains the same old chameleon. And don't you see; if he did not change his make-up he would not be a chameleon.

That poor chameleon who found himself on a Scotch plaid and died doing his best, was simply trying to keep up with Life.

He was not unfortunate because he was a chameleon—his misfortune was due to whatever circumstance it was, that landed him on the Scotch plaid. He blew up because he was trying to live as no mere chameleon should live. Perhaps if he had moved to a quieter neighborhood—or found friends in a different set—or been content with a million or two less he might have lived to enjoy old age.

Wright Philosophy

The variety and the quality of the male and female human vegetable is wholly a matter of culture.

• • •

Of course, one must start with good seed.

• • •

The ground in which the seed is planted must be right.

• • •

And we must not overlook cultivation. Culture and cultivation are very nearly twins.

• • •

Is there anything sadder to see than the men and women who might have been?

• • •

People whose minds are filled with selfish, cruel, obscene, vicious thoughts, and whose indecent tastes would shame any red, yellow, black or brown savage, are not cultured.

• • •

They may speak seven languages, or write books about nothing at all, in passable English, or be at home in the social capitals of the world, but if their minds, morals and tastes are those of degenerates they are not cultured.

Boss Was Reading

While cleaning out an old desk in the office the secretary of a local business man ran across several Nick Carter books. Puzzled as to where they came from, she asked the boss. He gave a startled look as she uttered the question, and hastily dismissed it with a gruff, "I don't know, throw 'em away." She complied with his order and nothing more was said.

That night the secretary left the office, and had almost reached home when she discovered that her purse was missing. Hurriedly she retraced her steps back to the office and to her surprise found the door unlocked. She entered quietly and looked around. There, with his feet cocked up on a desk and puffing away at a cigar, was the boss, eagerly devouring one of the books she had been ordered to throw away.—Springfield Union.

Environment and Character

Environment is not the last word in human life; it does not spell our fate. Character is wrought to finest quality in spite of untoward conditions, and often is majestic in its scorn of circumstance. Were it otherwise, the galaxy of genius would not shine so brightly in the firmament of life. The best environment on record, the Garden of Eden, was not (so the theologians tell us) eminently fruitful.—Glasgow Herald.

Elephant Farm Started

Experimental government elephant farms have been started in the Belgian Congo. One activity is the training of the animals to plow, it having been found that they can do so at one-fourteenth the cost of plowing by tractor. Baby mammals are taken from wild herds when from two to ten years old and taught by experienced men with the aid of elephants already trained. One elephant can plow about one and one quarter acres a day.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1927, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1928 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT,
G. A. YOUNGQUIST,
Attorney General.

St. Paul, Minnesota, April 30, 1928.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State:

In compliance with the provisions of section 46, General Statutes 1923, I furnish you herewith a statement of the purpose and effect of proposed amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1928, in accordance with certain acts adopted by the legislature at the 1927 session thereof.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

By the adoption of chapter 445, Laws 1927, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 5 article 9 of the constitution. This section now reads as follows:

"For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such works, except as authorized by section 16 of Article 9, and by Article 16 of this Constitution; but it may levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful, in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state, and shall place the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in section 2 of said Article 16, and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

If amended as proposed this section will read as follows:

"Section 5. For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenditures, the state may contract public debts, but such debts shall never, in the aggregate, exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; every such debt shall be authorized by law, for some single object, to be distinctly specified therein; and no such law shall take effect until it shall have been passed by the vote of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the legislature, to be recorded by yeas and nays on the journals of each house respectively; and every such law shall levy a tax annually sufficient to pay the annual interest of such debt, and also a tax sufficient to pay the principal of such debt within ten years from the final passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of such taxes to the payment of such principal and interest; and such appropriation and taxes shall not be repealed, postponed, or diminished, until the principal and interest of such debt shall have been wholly paid. The state shall never contract any debts for works of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such works, except as authorized by section 16 of Article 9, and by Article 16 of this Constitution, but it may levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful, in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state, and shall place two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in section 2 of said Article 16, and one-third thereof in the state road and bridge fund, and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the state, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

The entire proceeds of the gasoline tax are now placed in the trunk highway fund for use on the trunk highway system. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to place two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax in the trunk highway fund and one-third in the state road and bridge fund.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to place two-thirds of the proceeds of the gasoline tax in the trunk highway fund for the use of the trunk highway system, and one-third in the state road and bridge fund for lending aid, by the distribution of that fund among the counties of the state, in the construction and improvement of roads other than trunk highways.

First:

DIVISION OF GASOLINE TAX

Amendment to section 5 of article 9 of the Constitution (as amended), authorizing the state to place in the trunk highway fund two-thirds and in the state road and bridge fund one-third of any and all excise taxes levied and collected on the business of selling or dealing in fluids used or which can be used for motor vehicle power purposes.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2

By the adoption of chapter 444, Laws 1927, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 3, Article 10 of the Constitution relating to corporations. This section now reads as follows:

"Each stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business, shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him."

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

"Section 3. The Legislature shall have power from time to time to provide for, limit and otherwise regulate the liability of stockholders or members of corporations and co-operative corporations or associations, however organized. Provided nothing in this section shall be construed as repealing or in any manner affecting the liability of stockholders in banks or corporations organized for banking purposes as provided in Section 13 of Article 9 of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendments

The constitution as it now stands, makes every stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on a manufacturing or mechanical business, liable for the debts of the corporation, if the corporate assets are insufficient to pay the debts, up to an amount equal to the par value of the stock held or owned by him, in addition to any sum that he may owe the corporation on account of his stock. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to authorize the legislature to prescribe and regulate by law the liability of stockholders or members in all corporations, including co-operative corporations or associations, however organized, except stockholders in corporations and joint associations organized for banking purposes which issue bank notes, as provided by section 13 of Article 9 of the Constitution. The effect of this exception is explained in the next following paragraphs.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate the present fixed rule of stockholders' liability prescribed by the Constitution, except in the case of stockholders in banks which issue bank notes, and to place the matter of prescribing and regulating the liability of stockholders in all corporations, co-operative corporations or associations created under the laws of this state (except those banking corporations and joint associations specifically excepted therefrom) entirely within the control of the legislature, subject to change from time to time as they may see fit.

Stockholders in banks of the kind provided for by section 13 of Article 9 of the Constitution are by that section made liable for the debts of such corporation or association up to an amount equal to double the amount of stock owned by them. Stockholders of this class are excepted from the operation of the proposed amendment. However, the only banks provided for by section 13 are those that issue bank notes. There are none such in this state. Hence, stockholders in state banks are not within the exception of the proposed amendment but fall in the same class as stockholders in other corporations.

Second:

LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS IN CORPORATIONS.

Amendment to section 3, Article 10, of the Constitution, authorizing the legislature to prescribe and limit the liability of stockholders in corporations.

Work

By MRS. RAYMOND ROBINS
National Director of Republican Campaign Among Industrial Women

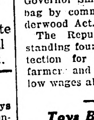
THE higher wages, shorter hours and social gains which the American working man and woman now enjoy will be challenged in the next four years, and can be protected only by the election of the right President.

For twenty years my husband and I lived on the top floor of a Chicago tenement. I know what poverty means to little children and mothers in tenement houses.

In my opinion, Herbert Hoover, too, understands fully the haunting fear of losing one's job. He is the first candidate for President who has ventured the assertion that poverty can be abolished.

Tariff Talk

By DR. HUBERT WORK



ERRONEOUS impressions have gone forth, and are spreading, that there is no material difference between the Democratic and Republican stand on the tariff this year; consequently many are prone to say that the tariff is not an issue. That impression is wholly erroneous, and should be corrected.

The tariff is and should be a vital issue in this campaign.

Recall the Democratic platform adopted at Houston. It endorsed a competitive tariff, — quite different from a protective tariff. Furthermore, Governor Smith let the cat out of the bag by commending the ruinous Underwood Act.

The Republicans, of course, are standing four-square for adequate protection for American workers and farmers and prevent competition with low wages abroad.

FARM ISSUES AS SHOWN IN HOOVER RECORD

Consistent Friendship for Farmer Indicated by Review of Candidate's Life Work.

TRUTH OF PRICE FIXING

Annals of War-Time Government Show Hoover Repeatedly Saved Agriculture From Disaster.

WASHINGTON.—Hoover's consistent friendship for the farmer is shown by his record, which is open. He not only did not fix maximum prices to the farmer, as has been wilfully or ignorantly charged, but did his utmost to protect and secure fair and generous dealing to the wheat growers, hog producers and other farmers of the country for their war-time efforts. He followed through and made good on his undertakings to them in spite of the severest obstacles.

This summing up of Mr. Hoover's record is contained in a pamphlet just issued here. It lists as significant the following activities:

His personal efforts in 1919 and 1920 to develop measures of enlightened reconstruction to help the farmers maintain their economic position.

His creation in the Department of Commerce of a special division to promote the sale of agricultural products abroad.

His leading share in 1921 in reviving the War Finance Corporation, which was instrumental in halting decline in farm products.

His obtaining in December, 1921, of a Congressional appropriation for purchase of corn for Russian famine relief.

His leadership in the movement for a seaway to connect the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, and for completion of the Mississippi System to cheapen transportation of farm products.

His helping to solve problems of prompt and adequate rail transportation for farm products.

His program for elimination of waste, by means of which costs of manufactured commodities are being lowered.

Hundreds of minor services rendered by the Department of Commerce to the agricultural community.

The struggles to break the grip of foreign monopolies of commodities which American farmers must have.

Details of War Record

Hoover's war-time record is detailed, both as to his method of procedure as Food Administrator, his counsel in framing of policies which would encourage production; conserve food supplies and control the distribution of food products and fuel. As to the charge of price-fixing of wheat, it is pointed out that the Allied Governments had concentrated their purchasing and were preparing to fix a price of $1.50 to $1.80 per bushel. Congress had fixed the government price at $2.00 per bushel. The appointment by Wilson of a fair price committee, and the deliberations of this committee in arriving at a fair price of $2.20 at a meeting at which Mr. Hoover was not present are outlined, together with a statement by the four surviving farm members of the committee showing that the conclusions of the committee were not made known to Mr. Hoover until after the committee had reported to the President.

It is further shown, from documentary evidence, that President Wilson, in accepting the recommendations of the committee said: "The price now recommended, $2.20 per bushel, will be rigidly adhered to by the food administration. Mr. Hoover, at his express wish, has taken no part in the deliberations of the committee on whose recommendation I determined the government's fair price, nor has he in any way intimated an opinion regarding that price."

As Food Administrator

Mr. Hoover as Food Administrator protected the wheat growers' interests by preventing foreign governments from breaking the price, and again, by averting a collapse which threatened after the Armistice.

While Mr. Hoover had no power to fix prices for hogs or pork products, the documents show that he succeeded in maintaining hog prices at more than twice the pre-war level until months after the armistice. This gave the producers millions of dollars more than they would otherwise have obtained.

This market, documents further show, was supported for months after the armistice, when not only allied governments but members of the Wilson Cabinet, including Secretary of the Treasury Glass and Secretary of Commerce Redfield, were advocating abandonment of all price control.

In this price-maintaining effort, Mr Hoover had to break the post-armistice blockade by the Allies, to open the market of the Central Powers, and to induce France and Italy to restore orders which they had sought to repudiate, along with those of Great Britain.

Czechs Decree Death for the Incurables

London.—The Express quotes an article in the Prague newspaper "Cheske Slovo" to the effect that infliction of painless death on sufferers from incurable disease will be legalized in Czechoslovakia.

This legalization will be provided in a new code now being prepared, the article asserts, but written approval by at least two physicians will be necessary before permission to inflict death is granted.

The same code, it is stated, will exempt from punishment anybody helping another to commit suicide.

DEATH FOILS PLAN OF ANGRY MOTHER

Son She Would Have Disinherited Gets Fortune.

New York.—Mrs. Elizabeth Seltzer, seventy-seven, of 101 Middleton street, often told neighbors she intended to disinherit her son, John Seltzer, and bequeath her $30,000 to her grandson, John, Jr., thirty. The latter had continued to live with the aged woman after she quarreled bitterly with her son and he left her and went to live in Jersey.

However, fate willed otherwise, for in ending her own life Mrs. Seltzer killed her grandson, unintentionally, the police believe. And it is John Seltzer, disinherited by his mother, who will inherit the money.

Salvatore Avino, thirteen, whose father, John, has a cobbler's shop on the ground floor of the Middleton street address, smelled gas and his father called the police station. With a policeman the boy went to the door of the old woman's apartment and when it was opened the entire flat was found to be filled with gas, which was escaping from the range in the kitchen. The grandmother was dead in her bed and in his bed lay John, Jr., also dead.

Death Writes Ending of Pathetic Romance

San Diego, Calif.—Dazed by the sudden end of his romance, Tony Gonzales went about the task of burying his wife and baby.

Eighteen months ago Tony met Zenlo Rubio in a tubercular ward of a hospital here. As they fought the disease they planned their future together.

Physicians who knew of their love warned Zenlo, as the pair was discharged from the hospital, that she must not bear children.

But they forgot the promise. Zenla grew weaker and Tony called physicians.

An operation, a physician said, might hurry Zenlo's death but might save the child.

"No! No!" cried Tony. "I will not kill Zenlo.

Without his consent the physicians could not operate.

The death watch at the wife's bedside began.

Outside the room Tony paced back and forth, weeping hysterically and praying. A physician with a stethoscope announced Zenlo dead.

Scared Robbers Away by Histrionic Ability

New York.—An old vaudeville actor, now a night watchman in a Brooklyn theater, feigned death and saved the theater's week-end receipt from four gunmen.

Peter McCleane, seventy years old, was making his rounds when the men leaped upon him as he passed through the orchestra pit.

Into McCleane's mind flashed a long-forgotten role. Years ago a part had called for his feigning death. He dropped to the floor in so realistic a manner that one of the robbers said: "I think you croaked him."

The four hurried away, while McCleane ran to a window and shouted for help.

The safe, holding between $10,000 and $20,000, was not touched.

Meets Terrible Death in Yellowstone Park

Casper, Wyo.—George Brown of Lampassas, Texas, was scalded to death in a Yellowsone park geyser, it was learned with the return to Casper of a physician who gave the victim first-aid treatment.

Mr. Brown was leaning over the edge of a boiling pool, seven miles north of "Old Faithful," when he fell into the water. Two sons, who pulled their father out, suffered bad scalds on the arms. The father died shortly afterward.

Brakeman Saves Many From Death in Wreck

Salt Lake City, Utah.—Quick action by J. B. Brown, brakeman for the Denver & Rio Grande Western railroad, probably averted a wreck of the special train carrying 600 members of the American Chiropractic association from Denver to Salt Lake.

Seated in the rear car of train No. 7, Brown heard a peculiar noise as the train passed through Nolan, and, realizing that a rail had broken, dropped off the train and flagged the special, which was following close behind.

STRANGE SPOOKS VISIT ISLAND HOME

Family Mystified by Odd Noises and Doings.

Elizabeth City, N. C.—Two hundred years ago, the children would have whispered "pirates" when doors slammed mysteriously at night on Church's island. Today the grown ups shout "spooks."

George Brice, who with his family lives in a frame house on the island, has brought word to the mainland that strange noises, as of heavy weights dropping, or of a woman shrieking, come at intervals from the walls of his home.

Brice is a fisherman, staid in appearance. Mrs. Brice and the children corroborate his story.

The noises are said to occur in broad daylight or in the wee hours before dawn. The entire family has been aroused by moans and gurgles emanating sometimes from the attic, again from the cellar. Search after search has failed to show a natural cause, Brice claims.

Recently word of the strange happenings spread to the mainland and scores each Sunday go by boat to the island, which is steeped with traditions as a pirate rendezvous, and visit the house.

The coast of North Carolina near here 150 years ago was a favorite gathering place for buccaneers. They hove their swift ships to in the inlets and sailed out at night to raid shipping along the coast.

Desert-Horned Toads Help Conquer Earwigs

Tonopah, Nev.—The bumble-horned toad, whose chief claim to fame has been its indifference to physical environment, is overcoming his stupid philosophy. From now on he is going to catch earwigs.

The earwig is not manufactured—it grows. It looks like a cockroach. In some parts of Europe it is a serious crop pest. In America it is mostly a household pest.

However, many earwigs have gone West and in keeping with the spirit of the open spaces have taken to outdoor existence. They have molested vegetable and flower gardens and even some fruits. Near Seattle, Wash., they are described as a menace.

Now the earwig has to reckon with the horned toad. One of the little creatures, a pet, escaped into the streets of Seattle recently and displayed a voracious appetite for earwigs. That inspired an idea, and more horned toads were brought to Seattle. All ate earwigs. Since then desert dwellers of southern Nevada have been flooded with orders for the lizard-like toads.

Research in Flight Senses Being Planned

St. Louis, Mo.—Plans for a $4,000,000 eye, ear, nose and throat hospital to be erected for the Washington university school of medicine here, include a "Lindbergh pavilion," to be devoted to medical research in aviation.

Dean W. McKim Marriott of the school of medicine, who announced the plans, said: "The new science of aviation is calling for a great deal of investigation in such subjects as the sense of equilibrium of the aviator, the judgment of distance of the pilot and his power to adapt his vision quickly and accurately to conditions of light and dark.

"Individuals differ greatly in these particulars and it is evident that something more than a desire to fly should constitute the requirements of an aviator. These are some of the problems upon which the workers of the proposed institute will be engaged," he said.

Alaska Youngsters Taught to Take Bath

Cordova.—Chitina, a small town halfway up to the "Iron Trail," claims the distinction of having the only schoolroom bathtub. It is a halfway point between savagery and civilization where the white man and the native Indian rub shoulders.

Miss Catherine Kirklin, teacher in the government school at Chitina, is responsible for the tub. She installed the bath in the class room and she sees that it is used, although her ideas do not please the old Indian chiefs. Many a ring appears on the Chitina tub.

"I do not really believe that the Indians object to baths," Miss Kirklin said, "but conditions have been such for centuries that it was not practicable for them to wash so they just forgot how."

Searches Holy Land for Ark of Covenant

Jerusalem.—A. F. Futterer, president of the Edendale Bible Institute of Los Angeles has ended a fruitless quest of two years for the Ark of the Covenant.

He is engaged in one final exploration before returning to the United States. He says he will organize a more complete expedition to the Holy Land at a later date. Meanwhile, he has arranged with a powerful chief of the land of Nebo to continue the search.

FINDING BOY IS NOT TWIN, GIRL FLEES

Shocked When "Brother" Locates His Own Kin.

New York.—Shocked by realization that the boy whom she regarded as her twin brother was in reality no relation at all, and that his own true brothers and sisters had suddenly appeared to displace her in his affections, Jessica Hart Trogan, twenty-two, of Freeport, L. I., has disappeared from her home, leaving no clew to her whereabouts.

Her "brother," William Hart, recently told the curious story, a story that has kept their neighbors excited ever since Jessica's disappearance.

"It all started in Camden, N. J.," said Hart. "Three families were living there, the Stricklands, the Furnesses and the Harts. I was the youngest of the Furness family, and when I was six years old my mother died. During the funeral preparations my father decided to intrust me to the care of the Harts, an elderly couple who had always been his friends.

Go to Nashville.

"I was to stay there only a week, but just before my mother's burial the Harts suddenly left for Nashville, Tenn., where Jessica and I were brought up as their children till we were fourteen years old. Jessica and I were then taken back to Camden, always believing we were brother and sister, though knowing we were adopted.

"Meanwhile the Furnesses had moved to Philadelphia, so I never knew who my real parents were. When the war came I enlisted, though only seventeen years old. Jessica had meantime been married. Her husband was a pilot of a Standard Oil company plane in South America, but he was killed just a week later, and both the Harts died just after the Armistice.

"We then went to live in Freeport with Mr. and Mrs. Bergstrum, who were old friends of the Harts. Jessica helped with the housework and I got odd jobs. Then about a month ago I wrote to Mr. Strickland, asking him to get a job in his silk business. He happened to show it to an elderly woman who knew the Furnesses and Harts in Camden. She knew my family had always been looking for me and she wrote them in Philadelphia.

"A few days later a Mrs. Sue Potter, my real sister, wrote me and asked me to come and visit her for a week in North Philadelphia. I was awfully surprised, of course, but I told Jessica and together we motored down to Mrs. Potter's house.

"Sister" Faints at Fete.

Hart described the reception he received from his family, which included another sister, Mrs. Mary Rotz, and his brothers, George and Edward. He said that Jessica grew more and more uncomfortable during the welcome and finally fainted "dead away." He said he tried to comfort her, but he couldn't help making a fuss over his new family.

"Gosh!" he said, "blood will tell, you know. I just couldn't help liking them, and even on the way back Jessica wouldn't sit beside me once."

The week after his return from Philadelphia Jessica disappeared. Then she sent him a card from Freeport, saying that she was going to Geneva, N. Y. Hart characterized this as a bluff, because, he said, he was sure she knew no one there.

Hart said he would change his name to Furness. When asked about his future plans, he said he didn't know.

"I'm going in search of Jessica, if she doesn't show up soon. Meanwhile, I'll stick to my job."

China Curbs Dowry Costs in Drive on Communism

Shanghai.—The Nationalistic government has decreed that mothers of marriageable daughters are entitled to no more than $150 from future sons-in-law.

If the girl is a widow the limit is $100. Nationalist authorities took action after examining evidence of profiteering by mothers, particularly in South China. Much of the Communist trouble, they say, has been due to the fact that young men are attracted in large numbers by the Communist plea for free marriages.

By controlling the marriage market they believe they are striking indirectly at communism.

Shorter Names Would Save Business Millions

Paris.—The Society for the Saving of Time, a newly founded French efficiency organization, is for the shortening of names.

The group would like to see parliament pass a law limiting family names to five letters and Christian names to two. They figure that in the business world alone millions of dollars could be saved annually in salaries of typists and wear on machines if names were held down.

They suggest that Jo, Ed, Al, Lu, and Jk are just as high sounding as Joseph, Edward, Albert, Lucien and Jack.

Stowaway Cured

New York.—Betty Simpson of Ada, Okla., whose claim to the girls' stowaway championship is undisputed, is cured. Back from England, where she spent a month in jail for her specialty, she received word that George Brogan of Galesburg, Ill., was waiting to marry her.

200,000 TREATED YEARLY FOR T. B.

New York and California Lead in Hospitals.

New York.—A survey recently completed by the National Tuberculosis association showed that New York State leads the country in the number of public, semiprivate and private sanitariums for the cure of tuberculosis, with California ranking second. This state has a total of 9,498 beds while California has 4,451.

The growth in institutions for tuberculosis cases has increased greatly during the last twenty-four years. In 1904 there were less than 8,000 beds devoted to the care of the tuberculosis.

Today there are 72,723 beds in 608 public, semiprivate and private tuberculosis sanitariums. This includes Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Phillipines and 44 federal sanitariums containing 12,320 beds.

It is estimated that 200,000 persons are cared for yearly in the institutions.

Every state in the United States, except Idaho, Nevada and New Mexico, maintains public institutions for combating the disease. Idaho and Nevada make absolutely no provision, public or private, for the tuberculous, the report indicates.

Dr. Linsly R. Williams, managing director of the National Tuberculosis association, characterized the analysis as "most illuminating" and declared:

"Despite the fact that there has been an increase of 750 per cent in the facilities for the care of the tuberculous in the past twenty-four years, improved methods and the increasing desire of the public to learn the truth about its physical condition brings to light more cases of tuberculosis than can be taken care of by existing sanitariums.

"Four states on the list have only one sanitarium each, but the fact that they are all publicity supported is an encouraging sign that the citizens and officials of those states have begun to realize the importance of providing protection against tuberculosis, which still kills more persons between the ages of eighteen and forty-five than any other disease.

Russians Use Rats to Exterminate Rats

Moscow.—Rat-eating rats are being bred in Leningrad. Thirty pairs of rats were put in thirty cages, and for a long period given no food. In some cases one member of the pair then ate the other. These rat-eating rats were then in turn paired, until by process of elimination several super rat-eating rats were developed. Breeding was then begun with these ravenous monsters as a base. The idea is to develop a system of self rat extermination. Rats are a serious problem in Leningrad, 2,000,000 being there; and many methods of extermination are being tried. The loss to Leningrad through destruction by rats is estimated at $2,500,000 annually. Rat extermination centers have been formed in 220 co-operative stores, ninety-six factories, ten storehouses, three markets and thirty-eight other establishments. And now the rat-eating rat is to be let loose on his brethren.

Father of Pilgrim Movement Honored

Leydon, Holland.—The memory of John Robinson, called the "father" of the Pilgrim movement to America and pastor of the English church at Leyden between 1609-25, was honored here recently in the unveiling of a bronze tablet in the baptistry of the Peterskirk.

The tablet is inscribed: "His broad tolerant mind guided and developed the religious life of the Pilgrims of the Mayflower."

It was given by the General Society of Mayflower Descendants. Addresses were delivered by Edward M. Tobin, United States minister; Dr. J. H. van Royen, the Dutch minister at Washington, and Professor van Ness, chairman of the Pilgrim Fathers society at Leyden.

Perfect Fit of Glass Measured by Spectrum

Rocheseter.—A method of measuring to within one hundred thousandth of an inch is in use in a lens making establishment here. This test measures the accuracy of the curve on the surface of the glass lenses. First a test glass of the proper curvature is fitted against the surface of the lens under inspection. If the two surfaces do not fit within one hundred thousandth of an inch, concentric rings of light, in all the colors of the spectrum, appear where the glass surfaces meet. When the fit nears perfection, the concentric rings diminish in number and become symmetrical.

Boy Without Hands Wins Designing Prize

London.—Although he was born without hands, John Buchanan, eighteen-year-old inmate of the National Children's home, has won the second prize for fancy calendars in the competition of industrial designs for Imperial institute, London.

Buchanan holds his brush between two stumps, and has won many prizes for designs.

Aviator's Good Work

Joseph Salzman, veteran aviator and instructor, and Oscar Rothlin, a youth who hopes some day to be a full-fledged pilot, took off from the San Francisco airport on an instruction hop. Just after the plane had left the ground it was discovered that the landing gear had become broken. Salzman ordered young Rothlin to take the controls while he climbed out on the wing to repair the landing gear. After more than an hour's work, with the aid of a safety belt, shoelaces and a piece of wire, the gear was repaired so well that a perfect landing was made when the plane descended.

NEW BEAUTY for YOUR CLOTHES By Mae Martin

Don't envy some other woman her ability to look attractive and stylish on less than you have. Learn her secret! Give new beauty and variety to your dresses by the quick magic of home dyeing and tinting. Perfect results are possible only with true, fadeless Diamond Dyes, the standard for over 50 years. Engine Cab in Front

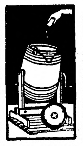
So that the engine men can more easily control it, the cab of a huge rebuilt locomotive on a western line has been placed in front, directly over the cowcatcher, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The engine and tender together are more than 104 feet long, weigh over 322 tons, and a tractive effort of 105,340 pounds is possible.



Record Gain in Butter Profits

Dairymen Who Use "Dandelion Butter Color" Say It's the Best Investment of All.

The biggest creameries in the country, who are most careful to cater to the whims of the public, are earning record profits by keeping their butter that appetizing June color everyone likes. Ninety per cent of them are doing it with "Dandelion Butter Color." It's the most economical and satisfactory butter color made. Half a teaspoonful colors a gallon of cream! It doesn't color the buttermilk. It's purely vegetable and tasteless. Approved by all State and National Food Laws. Large bottles, only 35¢ at all drug and grocery stores or write Wells and Richardson Co., Inc., Burlington, Vt., for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

Blind Telephone Operator

Sixty-four years old and blind since birth, Mrs. Clara Raney has just completed her thirty-sixth year as telephone operator at the town of Melrose, near Delphos, Ohio. Sealed in the tiny cottage in which she lives, Mrs. Raney pulls plugs and operates drops on her switchboard, and tells how easy these things are for her without her sight. Ability to distinguish a difference in the sound of the bells makes her job simple, she said.—Indianapolis News.

Deserve No Praise

It disgusts me to hear after-dinner and radio speakers praising ourselves. Praise our country but, in the name of all that is decent, don't praise ourselves. We have about ruined the appearance of this beautiful continent, for we have been the most inartistic people on earth, next to the Tibetans. —G. H. Corsan, in Forest and Stream Magazine.

Economy

By OGDEN L. MILLS
Undersecretary of the Treasury

ECONOMY in government means not just saving, but wise spending. It means the elimination of waste, the building up of a real sense of responsibility on the part of public servants, and the development of a spirit of unselfish service. Economy in this sense attains the dignity of a fundamental principle of government.

One of the great contributions made by Coolidge to the cause of good government has been the application of that principle with sincerity and thoroughness.

Such a policy is in happy contrast to that followed in New York State under Governor Smith, where during a period of abundant revenue, we have seen an enormous debt expansion, the breaking down of all wise pay-as-you-go policies, and the financing of recurring expenditures by bond issues.

The battle for economy in government is no single dramatic action. It is a continuing and continuous process. Nearly all that has been accomplished in the last eight years could be offset in the first years of a wasteful and inefficient administration.

Tammany Thinking

Big John Kennedy, the Tammany leader in Alfred Lewis's novel, The Boss, as he was about to go into the retirement of death, said to his protege, "Think first, last and all the time of yourself. You may not be of account to others, but you're the whole box of tricks to yourself. Don't give a man more than he gives you. Folks who don't stick to that steer land either in bankruptcy or Bloomin'dale." That has always been the pragmatic creed of Tammany Hall.—M. R. Werner in Tammany Hall.

Electric Service costs very little

ONLY 2 per cent of the average family income is spent for electric service. Isn't this percentage rather small when we think of the comfort, convenience and pleasure which electric service brings to the home?

A few of our politicians like to make political capital by agitating for lower electric rates. Would they not be doing the people a greater service if they investigated the cost of some larger items in the family budget?

Don't forget the ELECTION on NOV. 6th. A citizen that does not cast his vote isn't doing his duty to either himself or his country. There are issues in this election that should inspire everybody to get out and vote. Two years ago I urged upon the voters of this community to get out and vote and, this year I again feel it my duty to impress upon the voters of this community to exercise their right of franchise. I know in many cases the man or men will go and vote without thinking of taking the women folks along. Some times I believe it is vice versa; than you will find many families where everybody see to that they cast their vote. We should all make it a point to wake up the sleeping citizen and explain to him or her what would happen if no one took personal interest in the election.

When you go to the polls this coming election and call for your ballots you will find marked on one ballot Amendment No. 1 If you are interested in getting roads built other then the State or Trunk highways then vote yes on this amendment. This is known as the gasoline tax amendment. As it now is we are paying 2 cents on each gallon of gas we buy and this money is spent on State Trunk Highways.

If you feel that some of this money should be spent building side roads it should be of interest to you all to get out and vote in favor of it. When you stop to think that our County for the year of 1927 would have received $18,000.00 for building up side roads, had this amendment been in effect, should be a good cause for us to get busy and see to that our neighbors get out and vote with us on this amendment.

Remember by voting YES on this gasoline tax amendment No. 1 you will not pay anymore for your gas then before. If you fail to vote on the amendment you might as well have voted No because a blank vote is counted as against it. If you fail to vote yes on this amendment and some time later you get stuck in the mud on some side road, it seems to me that if you have anything to kick about I would say, start in right at home first.

PASKEWITZ-LARSON

A pretty wedding was solemized on Thursday, Oct. 18, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paskewitz when their daughter Eunice Estell was united in marriage to Leonard Larson, son of Mrs. Matt Larson. Rev. I. L. Lasseson of Thief River Falls, a relative of the family officiating.

The bride wore a gown of white crepe and black satin with veil. Her only ornament was the grooms gift a string of pearls. The groom wore a blue serge suit.

Their attendents were, the grooms sister, Miss Amanda Larson and the brides brother, William C. Paskewitz.

The bride is well known here and in Thief River Falls where she attended high school, also at Grygla her former home. The groom is also well know in this community having farmed for many years in Ringbo.

They have a host of friends who wish them the best of luck.

Those present at the wedding were: Mrs. Matt Larson, and son Albert, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Paskewitz, son William and daughter Mabel, Kenneth Knutson and Edgar Wegge of Holt, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Knutson of Grygly, Miss Amanda Larson and Mrs. Clarence Lasseson of Fargo, Rev. I. L. Lasseson, Mrs. Liman Fossom and Miss Harriet Knutson of Thief River Falls, and Mrs. Roy Paskewitz and children of Minneapolis.

The newlyweds are spending their honeymoon in North Dakota.

Mrs. and Mrs. R. Larson and son Raymond and Tom Larson of St. Hilaire, Mr. and Mrs. E. Larson and Mr. and Mrs. John Scholin and family from Wylie, were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Sandberg and family on Sunday.

Miss Collins and Miss Swendby, local school teachers made a trip to the Twin Cities last week. They returned here Sunday in a new Ford roadster that Miss Collins bought in Minneapolis.

Distance Finder Swift

With the aid of a new calculating machine invented by Dr. J. E. Rowe of the College of William and Mary an airman can tell in an instant how far he is from his goal; a gunner can use the device as a range finder. The "trinometer" is simply a triangle that measures itself. It is on the principle of all surveying and range-finding devices, which use trigonometry—the science of the measurements of triangles.

Clean Kidneys By Drinking Lots of Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers or Back Hurts

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because the acids created excite the kidneys. Then they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disorders.

Masculine Martyrs

Women smokers are blamed by State Forester M. B. Pratt for a large part of the increase in forest brush and grain fires in California.

"It is a proven fact that women are more careless with their 'stubs' than men," said Pratt. "A man will grind the stub into the bottom of his ear or in some other manner extinguish the light."—San Francisco Examiner.

Rather Cool

"The cold in the White sea was so intense that we couldn't stroke our dogs."

"Why not?"

"Their tails were frozen so stiff that they broke off if they wagged them."—Der Wahre Jakob, Berlin.

This Little Girl Got Well Quick

"Just after her third birthday, my little daughter, Connie, had a serious attack of intestinal flu," says Mrs. H. W. Turnage, 217 Cadwalder St., San Antonio, Texas. "It left her very weak and pale. Her bowels wouldn't act right, she had no appetite and nothing agreed with her.

"Our physician told us to give her some California Fig Syrup. It made her pick up right away, and now she is as robust and happy as any child in our neighborhood. I give California Fig Syrup full credit for her wonderful condition. It is a great thing for children."

Children like the rich, fruity taste of California Fig Syrup, and you can give it to them as often as they need it, because it is purely vegetable. For over 50 years leading physicians have recommended it, and its overwhelming sales record of over four million bottles a year shows it gives satisfaction. Nothing compares with it as a gentle but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It regulates the stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

There are many imitations of California Fig Syrup, so look for the name "California" on the carton to be sure you get the genuine.

Mosquito Only Enemy Small Runaway Found

Atlantic City, N. J.—Sixteen hours of searching through southern New Jersey swamps, underbrush and sand dunes for three-year-old Katherine Philippi ended when a posse of 200 residents of Absecon Highland and state troopers led by four police dogs came upon the child in a marsh, swatting mosquitoes.

The baby had taken up her stand against an army of the pests with an old newspaper she had found along the path of her adventureous wanderings which ended four miles from the home of her parents at Absecon Highlands. Katherine was uninjured, except for many mosquito bites, although her clothes were in ribbons.

DOG VAINLY TRIES TO SAVE CHILDREN

Unable to Make Father Understand Situation.

Winchester, Ky.—A small dog tried in vain to save his master's four children from death in their burning home in the Jackson county mountains. His every effort to attract aid were met only with ejections from the church which he was disturbing with his barks.

Repeatedly the dog dashed into the church, barking and tugging at his master's coat, but each time he was thrown out. At last members of the congregation saw the flames, but by that time it was too late.

Norman Dean and his wife had gone to the church, leaving the dog with their children, Esther, Mina, Rosa Lee and Tolbert, the oldest eight and the youngest three. They left a kerosene lamp burning on the table so the children would not become frightened in the dark.

During the service the dog kept running into the church, yapping frantically but for a long time he was looked upon as a nuisance. When the fire was seen, the whole congregation ran to the Dean home, but the roof had already fallen in and there was no sign of children.

When the embers cooled sufficiently to permit a search, it was found the three older children had apparently been trapped while trying to carry their little brother out. It is believed the lamp exploded and caused the fire.

Mother Begs Freedom for Her Son's Killer

Wilmington, Del.—Despite the fact Deputy Judge Lynn in City court held William Dougherty, aged fifteen years, of Rockland, under $5,000 bail on a charge of manslaughter, Mrs. Benjamin Clark, mother of Leroy Clark, aged fifteen years, is anxious that Dougherty be set free. When informed of the youth's arrest for the fatal shooting of her son, Mrs. Clark broke down, sobbing:

"Why, we don't want that. He was my boy's best friend, and I'm sure he didn't mean it at all. No, we don't want him arrested."

Her son, Leroy, and Dougherty, of Rockland, had gone hunting together since they were old enough to carry guns.

Girl Admits Killing Father Who Beat Her

Linton, N. D.—Inez Gontka, seventeen, in a written confession to Emmons county officials, admitted the murder of her father, Charles H. Gontka, 24 hours after his body had been found in a creek, police announced.

The girl, police said, admitted she shot and killed her father after he had beaten her when she refused to help him unload a wagonload of bricks. After shooting him, the confession read, she placed the body in a wheelbarrow and made an ineffectual attempt to bury it in the creek near their home.

Mystery in Find of Bones Piled in Vault

Sharptown, Md.—Workmen, excavating for a basement under a new building here, found a large brick vault about three feet below the surface. It was necessary to remove the end of the vault to make room for the basement. The vault was about ten feet across the end. When the bricks were removed a pile of human bones was revealed. They have been examined and pronounced as belonging to humans.

The oldest citizens know nothing of the vault.

Paralytic Uses Son as Death Instrument

Franklin, N. C.—Paralyzed and unable to use his hands, Jesse Oliver, forty-five, induced his seven-year-old son to pull the trigger of a shotgun that he had propped against his temple. He died almost instantly.

The boy did not know that the gun was loaded, according to his statement, Oliver had induced him to pull the trigger under the pretext that he wanted to see if the gun was working. The boy was prostrated with grief.

The Wires Were Crossed

By JOHN SAUNDERS

LILLIAN JAFFREYS came out of the gates which gave entrance to the grounds surrounding her father's country house and waved her hand at Tom Collingwood as he went by in his flivver. Lillian was dressed as became the daughter of a "magnate." She smiled a bewitching, careless smile at Tom as she waved her little hand in his direction. But her whole expression changed when the flivver had passed. A perplexed look wrinkled her brow and her eyes took on a pensive gaze.

The young man to whom she had waved had answered her greeting with a polite, but formal, bow. And withal there had been something like defiance in his look and manner as if he said: "No, I thank you; once bitten, twice shy. All your pretty ways cannot lure me back again. I am quite satisfied to have learned my lesson." And Lillian felt it; felt it as distinctly as if she had heard him say it in so many words.

For there was no denying that Lillian had given every encouragement to Tom—and had then thrown him over. Yes, Lillian had done all this and now she was sorry for it. She tried to tell herself that there was no use crying over spilt milk; but even the venerable saying did not seem to fill the bill. What she wanted out of the past was not a proverb but Tom.

It was not because her parents had objected to her marrying Tom that Lillian had rejected him. He was not wealthy, to be sure, but he came of a good family, was an exemplary and rising young man holding down a responsible job. Mr. and Mrs. Jaffreys desired only that their daughter should be happy in her marriage and considered that Tom was the very one to make her happy. But when they found that Lillian had rejected him they took it for granted that she knew best, and let it go at that.

If there had been a little opposition to their marrying, had their lovemaking not run along in such quiet lines, so much of taking everything for granted, it is likely that Lillian would have uttered a "Yes" as emphatic as her "No" when Tom asked her to be his wife. It is always the things around the corner that interest us most, the things which are constantly in our sight lose their interest after a while.

And so it had been with Lillian as regarded Tom. But now that he was decidedly "around the corner," as far as she was concerned, she found that she wanted him back more than anything else in all this world.

When she first realized this she had thought: "Oh, well; he is in love with me and all I have got to do is just to show him that I really did not mean it when I said 'No.' I can whistle him back all right." But now she was beginning to realize that Tom could not be whistled back as easily as she had thought. Her heart sank as the thought occurred to her that perhaps he could not be whistled back at all."

That day when she had strolled out of her father's gates to see Tom pass, and had seen her sweetest smile answered by him in that unresponsive manner, Lillian, after a fit of deep despondency, resolved upon drastic measures. She would write a letter to Tom in which she would acknowledge her mistake, tell him how much she really loved him, beg his pardon for her flighty conduct and offer him a "Yes" if he would take it. Of course, if it were true that he had ceased to love her, this would place her in a most humiliating position and expose her to a rebuff which would break her heart. But she didn't care; she could not stand things going on in this way any longer. So she went home, wrote a letter upon the lines indicated, and sent it to the post office.

Tom would not get it until the next morning, she thought—she knew he seldom went to the post office in the little neighboring village for the evening mail. And she passed a most miserable night. Then the thought occurred to her that perhaps Tom would go for his evening mail and get her letter.

Right after breakfast next morning she was in her little roadster, motoring down to the village post office. As she entered the door she and Tom almost collided.

"Did—did you get my letter?" she faltered with a blush.

"No," replied Tom, "did you get mine?"

"Why, no! Did you write?" she cried—and hastened to her letter box. Tom rushed around to his. In a couple of minutes they had another narrow scape from collision in front of the delivery window.

"Oh, Tom, I am so glad," said Lillian.

And "Oh, Lillian, what a jewel of a girl you are," said Tom.

You know what Lillian had written. Tom had written that he could stand it no longer; that he had tried to be indifferent and couldn't manage it. Would not Lillian reconsider?"

There is not much more to tell. You know from your own experience, gentle reader, how happy lovers are when they have made up after an estrangement. Tom and Lillian each keeps the letter the other had written and, now that they are married, whenever there is a hint of the approach of a family misunderstanding those letters are read over again—and all is at once serene.

LESSON XXXXIII

AMOUNT TO FEED DAIRY COW: Eight pounds of farm-grown grains (ground), ten pounds of clover or alfalfa hay, and thirty pounds of corn silage per day may be regarded as good feeding for a cow weighing around 1,000 pounds and giving from 20 to 30 pounds of milk a day. In other words, this amount of feed should produce a pound of butterfat a day with a good dairy cow.

This feed at present prices may be valued at from 20 to 25 cents. A pound of butterfat will bring from 50 to 55 cents at present prices. The skim milk should be worth an additional 7 to 10 cents. Considering the value of feeds and the value of dairy products, it should pay to feed well.

Good feeding calls for feeding all the rouhage—hay, fodder corn, silage, etc.—that will be eaten up clean two or three times a day and around one pound of grain a day in two feeds for each 3 pounds of milk produced daily.

SEES RUIN IN TARIFF STAND OF THE DEMOCRATS

Veteran Engineer Recalls Bread Lines of Previous Administration.

FLAYS GOVERNOR SMITH

Leland Declares His Election Would Be Greatest Calamity Which Could Befall Nation.

"We tried this Democratic free trade policy in 1893, and those of us who can remember the bread lines, the poverty and the suffering have no desire to repeat the experiment," says Henry M. Leland, veteran engineer of Detroit, Mich., in a letter to Chairman Work of the Republican National Committee. "We tried it again in 1913 with similar results, but were saved from further disaster only by the world war.

"Al Smith, together with Tammany Hall, which he now dominates, and the members of the Democratic party in the past have stood like adamant for either absolute free trade or a tariff for revenue only.

"If tariff schedules are reduced to a point where manufacturers in the cheap-labor countries of Europe can bring their products into this country and undersell our products, there is then only one of two things to do—reduce wages or close down plants throwing millions of our workmen into idleness. The want and distress are absolutely indescribable.

"I have studied the history of Al Smith since he was a boy mingling with other boys on the sidewalks of New York. I have scanned his record during the twelve years he was a member of the Legislature of New York, and his record as Governor of that state. To my mind it would be difficult to imagine a greater calamity that could befall this country than his election to the Presidency.

"As this letter would be too lengthy if I should attempt to catalogue a complete list of my reasons for the foregoing statement, I will confine myself to only one or two of the economic reasons for my convictions.

"One of these is the Protective Tariff. Al Smith, together with Tammany Hall which he now dominates, and the members of the Democratic party in the past have stood like adamant for either absolute free trade or a tariff for revenue only. Is it reasonable now to expect the leopard to change his spots?

Affects 30 Million

"Our thirty million wage earners work altogether the shortest hours and receive by far the largest wages of any wage earners on earth. If tariff schedules are reduced to a point where manufacturers in the cheap-labor countries of Europe can bring their products into this country and undersell our own products, there is then one of two things for our industries to do and that is reduce wages to meet that competition, or close down their plants throwing millions of workmen into idleness. Our people largely spend as they go; in fact many of them spend far in advance of their incomes, and the want and distress which would result from the cutting off of their incomes, and the result to their creditors, are absolutely indescribable.

"Abraham Lincoln said that if we bought a stove or a locomotive made in Europe, then we had the stove or the locomotive, but Europe had the money.

"On the other hand, if we bought a stove or locomotive which was made in the United States, then we not only had the stove or locomotive, but we also had the money with which it was bought. This is a simple problem, but it is far-reaching and of the greatest possible significance to the workmen of America.

"The difference is the difference between the 'full dinner pail' and the 'empty dinner pail,' between a nation of many millions of well-paid thrifty citizens as against millions of people struggling with poverty.

"Not since this nation was born has the electorate had the opportunity to draft as its head a man the equal of Herbert Hoover, a man so thoroughly equipped by experience, judgment, ability and integrity to cope successfully with the vast multiplicity of problems which confront us, and capable of leading us onward and upward to further greatness.

"With that opportunity, it is inconceivable that an enlightened citizenry would allow itself to be set backward a half a century by surrendering its destiny to Tammany Hall with its unsavory record of Booze, Boodle and Bunk."

Hottest Part of Day

Is the hottest part of the day the time when the sun is vertically overhead? The strongest rays of the sun occur when the sun is vertically overhead or most nearly so, which is at noon, but the hottest part of the day occurs about 2 p. m. because of the accumulation of heat due to solar radiation throughout the morning hours. —New York Telegram.

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Slight Misunderstanding

"What's the chatter?" inquired grandfather.

"I am trying to recite the Greek alphabet," answered the schoolboy.

"I am glad to hear it. I thought you were practicing the chorus of a new popular song."

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

All Bosses

Mrs. Colston, who, with her trio of pretty daughters, has forsaken Texas and made Hollywood her home, was asked the other day who was boss of the household.

"Well, I used to be," she replied with a smile, "but now that the girls are grown up, we have a commission form of government."

CAN'T PRAISE IT ENOUGH

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her So Much

Kingston, Mo.—"I have not taken anything but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for 18 months and I cannot praise it enough. I weighed about 100 pounds and was not able to do any kind of work. My housework was done by my mother and my out-of-doors work was not done. I have taken four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and now I am well and strong and feel fine. I got my sister-in-law to take it after her last baby came and she is stronger now. I cannot praise it enough."—MRS. HATTIE V. EASTIN, R. 1, Kingston, Missouri.

The Ward of Robbers' Roost

—22—

Wade's passion still was high. "Bob's sold us out," he raved. "Barker sends word that she has, an' Green has just owned up to it. Barker says we've got just one chance. He says he knows that Bob has told this Go Ahead most everything; but he's not sure she's told him how to find the Roost yet or that he's passed it on to the soldiers. He and she are stayin' at Bridget's tonight, an' if we can get there before daylight we can catch 'em asleep and end things for good and all. Then the doughboys can go plumb to; they ain't never found the Roost an' they never will till somebody shows 'em the way. Who'll go with me to get 'em?"

Two-thirds of the men shouted acclaim; the rest were hesitant. On the outskirts of the crowd the wailing of the women sounded.

Wade guessed that some were holding back. "How many won't go?" he yelled. "How many sneaks and cowards have we got here? Speak up now! Show your colors."

No one spoke. To speak out alone was to face instant death, every one knew it. And to speak out with others would probably be to provoke a battle whose result no man could guess.

Wade's lips curled back from his teeth. "Nobody, eh?" he cried. "All want to go? All right, we'll all go. Get your guns and horses and all the cartridges you can pack. Be back in five minutes. Any man that tries to hide and sneak out of going will be dragged out and hanged. Understand that, all of you. Now go, quick!"

Like a covey of quail flushed by the dogs the men scattered. And in less than five minutes they were back again, mounted and ready. Wade, who was a born leader whatever else he may have been, rasped his orders.

"Omaha Kit, Broncho Smith, Two-Gun Neal and Toady Pete will stay here to man the machine gun and hold the entrance. Black Ames will come along as my lieutenant. Where's Ames?"

"Here."

"All right. Start your men. Get 'em outside the valley. I'll follow as quick as I see that nobody's skulkin'."

Probably nobody skulked, though Wade made no attempt to search the camp to see. He believed that his words would be sufficient warning, and in any event he had no time to spare. Close behind the last man he rode out beneath the waterfall.

To the top of the column he raced. "Straight ahead, Ames," he ordered. "You know the way. I'll hang behind an' see that no white-livered pup slips away. Get to the North Arroyo before dawn. Stop there while I see Barker. Go!"

It had taken five hours for Barker's messengers to reach the Roost; and it took all of five more for Wade's cavalcade to get to Loboville. Through the long ride Wade hung behind, now on one flank and now on the other, shepherding his men with sudden death lurking in his eyes. If any of the riders had thought to slip away they noted his vigilant figure and thought better of it probably hoping for a safer chance later. The band reached the arroyo as strong as when it left the Roost.

Long before it arrived, Barker, almost as mad as Wade with anxiety, and denied the relief that Wade had obtained from vigorous exercise and imperative watchfulness, had quit his office and hurried to the rendezvous and back, not once but many times.

Barker had, in fact, more to lose than Wade or any other member of the bandit troop. Few of the latter were generally known and few of them had any important possessions to lose. If the worst came to the worst they could scatter to the four winds, leaving little behind. The Mexican border, close at hand, offered easy passage to safety. Some of them, perhaps, had become attached to their homes and women and children at the Roost and would regret losing them; but these were few and practically all of them would soon get over their regret.

Barker, on the other hand, had everything to lose. Years of success had made him overconfident; he had thought that he could never be displaced; and he had made no provision for the future by hiding or investing his booty and graft elsewhere. And his doom had come upon him so suddenly that he had had no time to remove it. Only that morning he had been a king, ruler over this domain, with none to dispute his power. And then, in the space of a score of hours, Go Ahead had swept the ground from under his feet and brought him face to face with utter ruin.

Half a day longer, if Go Ahead lived, would complete his destruction—and, even if Go Ahead did not live, the web about him had become so close that the most that he could hope to do was to save something from the wreck. Backward and forward, from office to arroyo, he wandered, straining his eyes and his ears for anything that would betoken the coming of the band.

And when at last it came he was there to meet it.

"Wade!" he called. "That you? . . . Bully! The sun'll be up in half an hour. You ain't got a minute to lose."

"Everything all right?"

"Yes. All right if you move quick. They're at Bridget's, fast asleep. Move quiet. The soldiers are at the other end of the town, but you don't want to wake them."

Wade shook his bridle reins. "You goin' with us?" he questioned.

"No, I mustn't be seen. I'll be at the office to look out for things in case of trouble. Hurry!"

Five minutes later Bridget's was surrounded, and Wade, with half a dozen helpers, was raging through the rooms, holding up the sleeping men, questing the place for Go Ahead and Stella—and not finding them.

At last he found Bridget. And she laughed at him.

"Faith!" she said. "It's too late entirely you are. I'm thinkin' that it's too late you always are in dealin' with Go Ahead an' Bob. It's half a dozen hours since they went away."

Bridget shrugged her shoulders. She could make allowance for Wade's condition and for his disappointment. "Search for yourself," she invited. "But you won't find them. It's the truth I'm tellin' you."

"Where did they go?"

"Sure, they didn't tell me." The words were literally true. They had not told her; she had told them.

"Wade's pistol went up. "Tell me quick!" he ordered. "Tell or—"

"They didn't tell me! Sure, wouldn't they be the foolish ones to tell me when they knew you were comin' to ask?"

"They didn't know it."

"Then why did they go away with the soldiers, leavin' two doughboys to satisfy whoever might be watchin' about the house? . . . Oh! You needn't be lookin' for thim soldier boys; they went away an hour or two later. . . . It's beaten you are, an' if you'll take an old woman's advice the quicker you get away from here an' out of the country the better it'll be for you. An' that's the God's truth."

A man—one of Barker's men—burst into the room. "Barker's here looking for you, Captain," he cried. "Somebody's just 'phoned from the ranch that the man an' Bob are there."

CHAPTER XII

While Wade and his men were riding to Loboville, Go Ahead and Stella were riding eastward, with Caesar at their heels.

Stella had been mad to get away from the town. The terror that had seized her while she waited with the soldiers outside Barker's office had not left her. Barker had been beaten again—beaten by herself this time; and Go Ahead believed that he was done for. But Stella had heard too many tales of the sheriff's methods to credit this; in the old days she had enjoyed these stories, but now the memory of them terrified her. That Barker would never again attack Go Ahead directly—this she believed; but that he would try to assassinate him she did not doubt.

How he would set about it she could not guess; if she could have guessed she would have been less troubled. That he had already summoned Wade to do the work for him she of course did not know, any more than she knew that the hotel was to be attacked before dawn. She knew only that Go Ahead was in desperate danger so long as he stayed in Loboville, and she was determined to get him out of it. And when she succeeded a load was lifted off her mind.

All the rest of the night they rode unmolested, beneath the glinting desert moon, until, close on to dawn, Luna dropped beneath the horizon, leaving only the low-hung stars to mitigate the darkness. Later came the actual dawn with the grotesque shapes of sun-tortured vegetation silhouetted against the rosy flush of the eastern horizon. And beyond these rose the low buildings of Barker's ranch.

Real Womanhood Admired

I know a woman who is naturally thoroughly feminine, and has many of those gentle qualities which make men marvel. Suffrage has changed her somewhat: she has heard about her wrongs until she believes she has some. In addition, she is a spinster, and somehow holds the men responsible for that. Still, she has frequent flashes of beautiful natural womanhood, and the men love to hang around and admire her. There is nothing the men admire so much as real womanhood; nothing they so much dislike as the new flapper type. —E. W. Howe's Monthly.

International Fishery

The catch of cod on the North American Atlantic coast has averaged 1,103,000,000 pounds yearly for the last 30 years, it is estimated. The fish is international, Newfoundland taking 40 per cent of the catch, Canada, 20 per cent; France, 17 per cent; United States, 12 per cent and Portugal, 2 per cent.

ATWATER KENT RADIO

you'd know it anywhere!

"DID you hear Hoover? What did you think of that speech of Smith's?"

Hear this historic campaign clearly through an Atwater Kent. You won't miss a word—a syllable. Atwater Kent tone is famous for clarity. Atwater Kent workmanship can be relied upon. Atwater Kent resources make prices low.

Electric or battery—your choice

Some homes have central-station electricity, some don't. Both kinds want fine radio. So Atwater Kent offers modern instruments in two forms.

With the all-electric set, you need no batteries. Your radio is operated in the same way your lamps are lighted—from the house current, either A. C. or D. C. The current costs considerably less than a cent an hour—about as much as reading a newspaper by the light of a single 40-watt lamp. Think of hearing Smith or Hoover for less than a cent!

With an Atwater Kent battery set the programs will also come in clearly and strongly—whether you want speech or music—for the Atwater Kent name-plate on any set spells good, reliable reception.

Nearly 2,000,000 owners prove it

There's nothing untried about Atwater Kent Radio. Each year for six years it has set the pace in improvements, performance and price. Among rural families as well as in the cities, it is far and away the leader in sales and popularity. The nearest Atwater Kent dealer will be glad to give you a demonstration and advise you in the selection of your model.

Widower Would Save Town

Coming to the front when it was announced that South Mimms, England, has had no marriages for 18 months, and there seemed no prospect of saving the town's reputation in the near future, a widower, aged seventy-four, has volunteered to wed if he can find a bride with sufficient income for two. He wrote the vicar of South Mimms that he is willing but could not provide a home because he has no income, is crippled in the left leg and has nothing but his old-age pension and a good character.

Commercial Art

Dr. A. S. Wolf Rosenbach, the famous bibliographer and connoisseur of Philadelphia, was condemning the new school of American novelists.

"Writing isn't an art with them," he said. "It's a trade. They don't try to write beautiful things. They try to write profitable things."

Doctor Rosenbach ended sadly:

"The talk of American authors used to be bookish. Now it's pocketbookish."

Leadership in Moderation

"We look to you for leadership!" exclaimed the admiring friend.

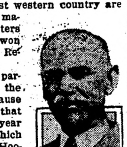
Farm Revolt

By SENATOR REED SMOOT



GOVERNOR SMITH cannot capitalize any so-called "farm revolt" in the West. My observations in the vast western country are that the great majority of the voters cannot be won away from the Republican party.

This applies particularly to the farmers, because they realize that year in and year out the party which now presents Hoover and Curtis has been their consistent friend, and has the record to prove it.

Within the last year agricultural conditions have improved. The Democratic plan to reduce the prices the farmer pays by lowering the tariff on industrial commodities would ruin the home market for American farmers.

Sidestepping

By SENATOR SIMEON D. FESS

GOVERNOR SMITH is sidestepping the farm issue. He leaves the impression to the farmers of the West that he is for the principle of the McNary-Haugen Bill, while to the East he gives the impression that he is against it. He permits his New York political organ, the World, to announce his opposition, which he specifically approves. In Nebraska he as specifically commits himself to the principle.

He wants to leave the impression that the principle is a matter of detail to be worked out. It is not a matter of detail, but the whole question. If he means that the farmer may voluntarily impose upon himself the loss of handling the surplus, he is apparently unaware that the Capper-Volstead Act was passed by a Republican Administration for this specific purpose.

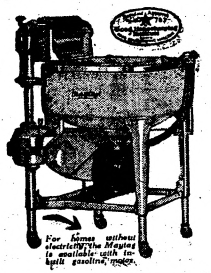
The MAYTAG Roller Water Remover
A New and Better Way of Wringing



For homes without electricity the Maytag is available with in-built gasoline motor.

PASSING a clothespin through the large rolls of the Maytag Roller Water Remover shows how the soft top roll hugs every fold, lump and seam in the clothes, wringing them evenly dry and sparing the buttons. The Roller Water Remover with a soft top roll and a hard bottom roll is exclusively owned and controlled by The Maytag Company.

There are many other features of convenience which make the Maytag Roller Water Remover handy. There is a safety feed that makes it easy to start the clothes through the roll. The tension automatically adjusts itself and the drainboard reverses itself.

For Representative

To the Voters of Marshall County, Minnesota:—

Owing to the delay in getting our fall work done up on the farm, it will be impossible for me to call upon you personally, so I am taking this method of informing you that I am a candidate for re-election to the House of Representatives of the Minnesota Legislature, and also to thank you for the support given me in the past.

This coming session promises to be the most important held in years, and I believe, with my experience in Legislative matters, I will be able to give to my district and the State at large valuable service.

Your vote and influence will be appreciated at the coming election.

—Yours for a tax on State-Owned Lands.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Two beautiful, hand carded wool, piece quilts are now being made for the Nazareth Lutheran Ladies Aid Auction Sale which will be held in the church parlors Nov. 12th. They will also serve a big supper the same evening.

Turkey Growers Attention!

The Land O' Lakes Creameries, Incorporated, will handle our turkeys this season on the following plan: They will pay about 90 per cent advance on the day of delivery and the balance will be remitted in the form of a premium shortly after the turkeys are sold.

In this way the producer will receive all that the turkeys bring less the freight and handling charges.

It will be necessary to have the Thanksgiving turkeys come in from November 7 to November 16th. We plan on handling the bulk of the Thanksgiving turkeys from the 12 to the 16th.

We suggest that you market only the mature birds on this market. Keep the others for the Christmas market.

Watch for further announcements and inquire at your local creamery for—Turkey Day—at your creamery.

The price outlook is good.

Statement By Selvig

Seventy-nine per cent of all American imports, last year, were of animal and agricultural products, and only 21 per cent were of all other products.

A large part of the troubles of our farmers, in the years since the war, have come from foreign competition entering our home markets.

Industry and Labor are protected against foreign competition by the tarrif, the immigration law and other measures.

What I am trying to accomplish is to secure for the farmers the same degree of protection against foreign competition as is now enjoyed by Industry and Labor.

That is fair, and well worth fighting for.

If all the farm products imported into the United States, last year, of the kinds that can be easily grown here, had been produced in this country they would have occupied 82,000,000 acres or more.

That is four and a half times as much land as is used in producing all the crops raised in Minnesota.

If the home markets can be secured for our farmers, by reducing foreign competition, every tillable acre of land in the Red River Valley would soon come into demand and value, and farming would become much more profitable.

I am your hired man in Washington. The above is my program. You will vote, next Tuesday, on whether to leave me on the job another two years, to work on the above program, or to put another man in the place.

Whatever the voters decide will be final. I shall not contest the election if I lose. If I win I shall take it as an endorsement of my efforts and carry on the fight with renewed vigor.

Yours most sincerely,
C. G. SELVIG

FARMERS COOL TO SMITH PLEA

New York State Agriculture Backs Hoover Plan as Practical.

HALL, N. Y.—Farmers in New York state are giving active approval to the constructive farm program announced by Herbert Hoover, declares Charles S. Wilson of this place, who as commissioner of agriculture came to grips with Governor Smith in the latter's efforts to extend Tammany's domination over the New York farms and markets department.

"New York farmers who have had their own problems to solve during the last decade," says Mr. Wilson, "recall that, in eight annual messages to the state legislature, Governor Smith's chief recommendation with respect to agriculture has been to scrap the machinery of the present department of agriculture and markets, which the farmers in the state with few exceptions endorse and approve. That done, it was well understood in political circles that the governor planned to seize the department and reorganize it as an added portion of gubernatorial patronage.

"It may not be generally known that 750,000 persons reside on the farms of New York State. They employ capital, in farmlands and equipment, approximating $2,000,000,000. Two-thirds of the area of the state is farm land. While the state, among the other states is only 20th in total area and 20th in area of farm lands, it stands eighth in the total of agricultural production.

"Republican legislatures for eight years have kept these varied, as well as financially and economically important farm interests, out of the maw of the political patronage into which Governor Smith has sought to throw them.

"Governor Smith during his incumbency of the executive chair has had some other peculiar ideas respecting agriculture. In his first year as governor there was submitted to him a report in which the suggestion was made that milk be declared a public utility and its price fixing power be made a function of the state. At the outset, Governor Smith made known his approval of this recommendation."

Hoover for President Nelson for U.S. Senator

On Oct. 15 Mr. Hoover Said:

"It is impossible to contemplate a successful Republican Administration, unless our States will support not only the National ticket, but also their State and Congressional tickets. The Government of the United States does not lie in the hands of the President. It lies in the hands jointly of the President and Congress, and unless we may have the same party in control of both branches of government, we can have no successful government; and therefore, if you are to give me your support I do implore you that you shall give it to the Republican candidate for Senator."

Proud of Ownership of Historic Bugle

The most famous bugle in the United States army is said to be found at Fort Myer, Va., just across the Potomac from Washington, the property of Staff Sergeant Frank Witchey, the veteran bugler of the Third cavalry.

Witchey blew taps on the horn at the grave of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington cemetery, and at the funerals of Woodrow Wilson, William Jennings Bryan, Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, Lieut. Gens. Nelson A. Miles and S. B. M. Young and other prominent Americans.

The bugle was issued originally to Witchey by the army as a part of his equipment, but the day after he blew the taps at the grave of the Unknown Soldier he bought the horn back from the quartermaster for $2.50. He had the bugle gold-plated and now he engraves on it all the important events at which it is blown, with the dates.

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it; some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

PLAN TREK FROM MISSOURI TO COAST

Covered Wagon Train to Traverse Old Trail.

Kansas City, Mo.—Widespread interest in the covered wagon train which will set out from here next spring for Sacramento, Calif., is being indicated by letters received by the Chamber of Commerce and Capt. Charles E. Davis, sponsor of the train, from many parts of the country.

The letters, which contain information relative to covered wagons, ox teams and old trails, come from old "bull whackers" (ox team drivers), historical societies and persons interested in the reproduction of the life of 1849.

The covered wagon caravan is expected to start from the old Westport Landing and travel to Sacramento to take part in the eightieth annual celebration of the gold rush of '49.

Captain Davis' contention that many historical societies do not have sufficient information about the covered wagon days has been proved in part by discovery that the Kansas State Historical society has been unable to assist in giving information about the covered wagon caravans.

One of the letters received was from J. E. Long, sixty-five years old, Claremore, Okla., who said he had not handled a team of oxen for several years, but believes he can hit a fly with a nine-foot whip, such as used by "bull whackers."

Long said plenty of oxen teams could be obtained in southern lumber camps.

Another bit of information received in the letters is that some of the covered wagons were equipped with speedometers.

Some of the wagon wheels, the informant wrote, were as much as eight feet in diameter. The speedometers on the wagon consisted of a stick fastened on a spoke so it would strike a part of the wagon. A member of the party would keep record of the number of times the stick struck the wagon.

At the end of the day's journey, the number of miles covered would be computed from the number of revolutions the wagon wheel had made.

Thus the number of miles from one place to another was learned and maps were made showing the distances between landmarks, trading posts, water holes, rivers and other important places along the trails.

Better Wings Sought for Safer Airplanes

Washington.—Safer and cheaper airplanes for both civil and military aviation is the objective of the national advisory committee for aeronautics, engaged in continuing research in all the branches of aerodynamics, according to an oral statement by E. H. Chamberlain, acting secretary of the committee.

Explaining that the committee has been concentrating on the matter of airplane design with a view of reducing the hazard of aircraft and at the same time lower the construction costs, Mr. Chamberlain said that these studies have revolved primarily around wing construction. "A plane is no better than its wings," he said, and for that reason the major part of the experimental work at the committee's laboratory at Langley field, Virginia, has been in this direction.

New Coal Fields Found in Siberia

Washington.—The discovery of large coal mines in Siberia is reported, the Department of Commerce was advised by the assistant commercial attache at Paris, Daniel J. Reagan.

The report says: "Large coal mines in the Khabarevsk region, in the district of Touloupak, Asiatic Russia, have been discovered according to news received from Novosibirsk, by the expedition led by the geologist Jeutchoujnikov. It is said the coal is the same as that extracted from the Tcheremkhov mines, and specimens of this coal have been sent for a minute analysis.

"It is said also that the discovery of these mines will have considerable weight in deciding the question of the construction of a railroad in the Lena region, which latter would be of advantage to the mining enterprises in that country."

Thames Island Lures Speculators to Ruin

London.—The Island of Lost Gold is the name which an unbroken succession of ill luck has attached to Tagg's island in the Thames near Hampton Court.

One after the other, successive owners of the island have based great hopes of fortune upon it, and have lost almost all they possessed. Hundreds of thousands of pounds have been lost by its former lessees.

TELL OF BURIED CITY AND HEAPS OF GOLD

Prospectors Outdo Verne and Rider Haggard.

San Francisco.—Three prospectors slipped in off the desert in a battered old auto recently with a story that begins where Jules Verne and Rider Haggard stopped. It had to do with a buried city laden with millions of dollars' worth of gold and highly preserved bodies of no less than 700 men and women who grew to a height of six feet six inches and upward.

This Golconda of modern times remains somewhat of a secret as far as definite location is concerned, but it is partly under the Colorado river at a point along the California-Arizona line, according to the sponsors of its existence. It is reached by a shaft about 28 miles in length, paved with blocks held together by red cement, and lies three miles under the surface—according to the prospectors.

Backing Sought.

They are C. J. Howard of Houston, Texas; his wife, and Reuben King of Denver and San Antonio.

Howard, acting as spokesman, attempted to persuade Prof. A. L. Kroeber, head of the anthropology department of the University of California, that the university should finance an expedition to unearth all this vast wealth. The scientist informed Howard that the university has no funds for such a purpose. Professor Kroeber, as a matter of fact, was inclined to discount the veracity of the strange things he heard about the underground city of Babylonian elegance, but hastened to add that "nothing is impossible."

"We are only desert rats," explained Howard, "but we know we have located more buried treasure than has ever been uncovered in this country. There will be a lot of soreheads when we find the help we need and prove we have the goods.

"We know we are telling a story hard to believe, but are willing to take anyone with money to the buried city and let him see the treasure with his own eyes.

Finds Buried City.

"About three years and eight months ago we were prospecting for gold along the California-Arizona desert country. One day I was working in a 29-foot shaft when my pick broke through to an abandoned mining shaft. It was paved with square beveled stones fastened with red cement. They looked very old. I followed the shaft for 28 miles and came to the buried city."

Howard described in detail how he entered a great circular chamber with a table extending almost entirely across its diameter, at which were seated "the almost nude bodies of 72 persons," six feet six inches or taller, with "blue eyes," which were open, and with "flesh white and firm, having been preserved in an extraordinary manner."

In another room, which Howard opined might have been the harem, were the bodies of 200 women.

The city had trapdoors and all kinds of plain and fancy levers and mechanism, Howard declared.

He said they cached $18,000 in gold dust which they retrieved, and King went to Cheyenne to try to finance the expedition. By the time the trio went back to the cache the cabin in which it had been secreted had been washed away by the flood of a freshet, he said, thus delaying them in getting their story to the world from which they hope to obtain finances.

"Liberty Bell" Foundry Oldest London Business

London.—The ancient bell foundry, where America's "Liberty Bell" was cast, is reputed to be the oldest business in London.

The property of Messrs. Mears and Stainbank, it was originally established in 1570 at Essex street, Whitechapel, whence it was removed to its present site in Whitechapel road during 1738.

A bell cast at the foundry in 1594 for the English village of Staplehurst was sent back to the firm for repairs 300 years later. "Big Ben," the huge bell that tolls the hours in the clock tower surmounting the British houses of parliament, came from this foundry, as did also York minister's "Great Peter" and Lincoln cathedral's "Great Tom."

Holds Perfect Pinochle Hand and Falls Dead

Newark, N. J.—Frank Ozol looked at a hand of pinochle he had just dealt himself and toppled over, dead. Friends said it was a perfect hand. Heart trouble was given as the cause of his death.

A perfect hand in a four-handed pinochle game, is all the cards of a suit, 12, which would permit the holder to meld 1,520 points and to take 250 points in tricks, a total of 1,770 points; the highest number of points that may be made in one hand.

BOOKS SO SMALL SPOON HOLDS 12

Owner Has 700 Volumes in Unusual Library.

Boston.—What is authoritatively said to be the world's largest collection of unusual little books does not lie under dust-protecting glass, within the deeps of some great museum or library. It is gathered in a little house in Brookline.

The collection is the property of James D. Henderson, a Boston real estate dealer, and consists of approximately 700 "volumes," few of which are more than three inches high. Many are small enough to rest comfortably on a two-cent postage stamp.

In fact, a dozen among the collection may lay valid claim to ranking among the world's smallest books. Mr. Henderson demonstrates that 12 volumes may be supported at once in a single tablespoon.

The books used for this literary feat are a Koran; an English dictionary of 12,000 words; a Galileo book, said to be the smallest in the world with a moveable type; a Testament; the Mite, which up to 1896 was rated the world's smallest book; a Robert Burns; a Petit Poucet; the French constitution, in a gold-stamped leather binding; a Gita, written in Sanskrit; a Tasche Kalendar; a Toras Mosche, judged the smallest of Jewish books; and a book of Scottish-Irish songs, with the music included.

German Plans to Stop Wrecks With Light Rays

Berlin.—Light rays in future will prevent railroad disasters if the invention of a Munich engineer named Baeseler stands the test. His device consists of a number of mirrors, which, placed along the tracks, control the speed of trains and have power to halt an engine if it runs past the block stations.

As a train passes light from the locomotive strikes the mirrors. If the section is closed the rays are transferred to a selenic cell, which becomes a conductor, closes the electric circuit, and automatically puts the brakes in action.

To prevent too sudden a stoppage of the train the mirrors are placed at special distances apart. On passing the first mirror the speed will be reduced to 60 kilometers (about 37 miles) in case of danger; the second and third mirrors bring the speed down to 40 and 20 kilometers, while the fourth mirror stops the train completely.

It is claimed that the mirrors, which have a peculiar construction, can be used in all kinds of weather and are absolutely reliable. The invention may also be used to reduce the speed of trains when passing dangerous curves. Whether the device will be acquired by the Reichsbahn depends on the final result of the tests now being made by the technical scientific commission.

Metal Rolled So Thin Type Is Read Through It

Berlin.—From the Charlottenburg laboratory come reports of the production of sheets of metal so thin that ordinary type can be read through them.

Films of this have been made of iron, nickel, gold, silver, and platinum. The films are very elastic and will bulge out as much as a tenth of their diameter without breaking.

They may consequently find use in radio and photographic reproducers to replace the present diaphgrams, which are so heavy that they coarsen sounds by dampening the overtones. Moreover, as the films are practically all surface, they possess high electrical conductivity.

Prefer Sedate Ones

Berlin, Germany.—Matrimonial agencies are finding it easier to arrange a match for a woman between twenty-five and thirty-five than for a girl of twenty. The explanation is that men prefer the more sedate and sensible.

Thought It Was a Root

Ashland, Kan.—A ditch digger here came on a buried telephone cable and chopped 12 feet into short pieces, putting about one-fourth of the telephone system out of commission. He said he thought it was a tree root.

Well, Well!

Copenhagen.—Harry Wessel, Chilean minister to Denmark, thinks Chilean women are the most beautiful in the world; their influence is already so great that it would be unfair to men to give them the vote.

New Plow Invented by Chinese Mechanic

Foochow, China.—Clen Jul-lung, an obscure mechanic, has invented a new plow. He stresses its efficiency and cheapness of manufacture.

Chen explains that his invention is lighter, and that it makes a deeper furrow than any plow of foreign make ever used in the Orient. It is far more durable than the old-style Chinese plows, he says. The government, in granting Chen a patent, looks upon the implement as a boon to farmers and has promised him every aid.

Touches that Add Style to Dresses
By MAE MARTIN

It's amazing to see how faded, out-of-style dresses can be transformed by a few buttons, a little braid and the quick magic of home dyeing or tinting. You don't need any experience to tint or dye successfully if you are sure to use true, fadeless Diamond Dyes. Tinting with them is easy as bluing, and dyeing takes just a little more time to "set" the colors. They never give things that re-dyed look which comes from using inferior dyes. Insist on Diamond Dyes and save disappointment. Over 20 million packages used a year.

My new 64-page illustrated book, "Color Craft," gives hundreds of money-saving hints for renewing clothes and draperies. It's Free. Write for it, now, to Mae Martin, Dept. G-143 Diamond Dyes, Burlington Vermont.

The Verdict

John Sloan, the noted painter, was dining with a Fifth avenue millionaire, and after dinner his host led him into his art gallery.

"Sloan," he said, as he halted before an enormous canvas, "tell me, is this a genuine Titian?"

Mr. Sloan laughed heartlessly. Then he said:

"It's a genuine repe-Titian."

Dorothy's Mother Proves Claim

Children don't ordinarily take to medicines but here's one that all of them love. Perhaps it shouldn't be called a medicine at all. It's more like a rich, concentrated food. It's pure, wholesome, sweet to the taste and sweet in your child's little stomach. It builds up and strengthens weak, puny, underweight children, makes them eat heartily, brings the roses back to their cheeks, makes them playful, energetic, full of life. And no bilious, headachy, constipated, feverish, fretful baby or child ever failed to respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup on their little bowels. It starts lazy bowels quick, cleans them out thoroughly, tones and strengthens them so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

Millions of mothers know about California Fig Syrup from experience. A Western mother, Mrs. J. G. Moore, 119 Cliff Ave., San Antonio, Texas, says: "California Fig Syrup is certainly all that's claimed for it. I have proved that with my little Dorothy. She was a bottle baby and very delicate. Her bowels were weak. I started her on Fig Syrup when she was a few months old and it regulated her, quick. I have used it with her ever since for colds and every little set-back and her wonderful condition tells better than words how it helps."

Don't be imposed on. See that the Fig Syrup you buy bears the name, "California" so you'll get the genuine, famous for 50 years.

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Great Orators Among Red Men of America

Standing erect, with eyes flaming with enthusiastic ardor, and a mind laboring under an agony of thought, the Indian was a most impressive orator, writes Elijah M. Haines in "The American Indian." When he spoke before his assembled nation on some great subject he showed most manifestly that he was feeling an awful responsibility in what he attempted to advocate in behalf of his people.

Caleb Atwater, one of the United States commissioners who made a treaty with various Indian tribes for the purchase of large tracts of Illinois and Wisconsin in August, 1829, said the Indian's oratorical presence was the finest to be seen. "His eloquence abounds with figures from every subject which nature presents to his eye. When he touches upon the subject of the sale of his country his eye flashes fire, his whole soul is in every word, in every look, in every gesture. He raises himself on his feet, his body is thrown in every attitude, every muscle and nerve being strained to its utmost power. His voice is loud, clear, distinct, commanding. He becomes, to use his own phrase, a man."

As the light grew, Go Ahead leaned forward, scanning the landscape far and near, seeking for some sign that Stella had arrived before him. Stella herself did not look at the country; instead she looked at Go Ahead frowningly; jealously irritated that he should be so eager to see this minx whom, so far as he knew, he had never beheld. Caesar, meanwhile, nodded in his saddle.

Finally Go Ahead gave over his search for the moment. "We're too early, Bob," he said. "I was afraid we would be. There's nothing to do now except go to the ranch house and wait there till she turns up."

"Go to the ranch house!" Amazement amounting to incredulity drove the sleepiness from the girl's eyes. "You—you don't mean it?"

"Why, of course I mean it. Why not?"

"But—but—" Stella broke off. Already she had learned the futility of trying to induce Go Ahead to be prudent. "But Fair didn't say to wait in the ranch house," she ended, desperately.

"Of course he didn't. But where else are we to wait?" Go Ahead laughed at sight of the dismay on Stella's face. "It does seem like venturing into a hornet's nest, doesn't it?" he admitted. "But it really isn't. Barker we left in Loboville; Wade is probably up north; there can't be anyone much here except Diego. We'll just tie him up or set a guard on him, and then we can make ourselves at home. See?"

"But suppose Barker comes after us. Suppose his spies saw us leaving—"

"Couldn't. He'd have jumped us long ago. And even if he did come after us we'd be safer behind 'dobe walls than in the open."

"But—but why not go on?"

Go Ahead opened his eyes. "Why, we can't go without Stella," he protested.

It was on the tip of Stella's tongue to say something very derogatory about her other self. But she checked herself just in time. "Fair said that if she didn't meet us at dawn for us to go on, and she'd overtake us," she pleaded.

"Yes. But it isn't dawn yet. We've got to wait somewhere and we've got to rest while we wait. I'm not 'specially sleepy myself but I wouldn't mind forty winks, and I guess you wouldn't either. And then of course we've got to give the horses a chance to eat and rest a bit, or they may play out on us when we least expect it."

Stella gave up. "You know best, I suppose," she said, "but I wish you wouldn't wait for Stella. I don't believe she's coming at all."

Go Ahead looked at the girl gravely. "I hope she will come," he said. "If she doesn't I'll have to consider going after her. You see, Barker told me last night why he wanted to marry her—"

"What?"

"Yes. I thought from what Green and you said about her that it was curious that he should want her so badly. But now I understand."

"You—you don't mean he told you about her money?"

"Eh. . . . So you know about it, too. Yes, he told me—indirectly. He warned me that he was going to marry her and take her money himself and that I'd better put all such thoughts out of my head."

"He told you—that! He thought that you—"

"Seems so. Oh, he's just got money on the brain. He's—"

"But what did you say?"

"Me!" Go Ahead chuckled. "Oh, I turned it off some way. I ought to have told him— But no matter about that. I couldn't well tell him anything without spilling all the beans. But the long and short of it is that I've got to get Stella away from that robber camp before Barker goes back to it."

Bob's voice quivered with suppressed passion. "I s'pose you want her for yourself!"

Go Ahead did not answer. But he turned and looked at the girl long and gravely. Then, still without speaking, he looked away.

After a while Stella looked up. Then she uttered a startled exclamation. "Oh, we're right at the house," she gasped. "Oh, oh! Please don't go inside, Go-ey! Go anywhere else—beyond the barn there—anywhere."

"All right." Go Ahead turned his horse slightly. His brief anger had melted, giving place to concern. "You're played out," he said, "and it's no wonder. That's what makes you so temperamental. We'll camp beyond the barn on one condition, and that is that you'll lie down right away and take a nap."

But Stella shook her head mutinously. "I've got to do my share," she said.

"All right. Then we'll go inside the house and you can do it there." Go Ahead relaxed his slight tug on the reins, and his horse instantly tried to turn in toward the ranch house, now just abreast.

This brought Stella to terms. "No, no!" she cried. "I give in. I'll lie down." Under her breath she added; "but I won't sleep."

"Good enough." Go Ahead dragged his reluctant steed back to its course.

A moment later the three had passed, apparently unseen, beyond the barn and were screened by its bulk from the eyes of anyone who might appear in or about the ranch buildings. Very quickly the blanket rolls were unstrapped and tossed down, the horses provided with nose bags, and Stella, resentful but true to her word, had lain down, resolved not to close her eyes.

But the sandman was abroad and when, a moment later, Go Ahead stepped lightly to her side, he found her fast asleep.

Long he stood looking down on her in silence. Then, muttering, "Poor, tired, plucky boy," and resolving in his heart of hearts that he'd "take good care of Bob when he got him East," he went back to Caesar.

"Caesar," he asked, "how sleepy are you?"

"Me? Ain't sleepy at all, Mr. George, suh." Caesar never dreamed of using such an appellation as "Go Ahead" instead of the aristocratic "George Ashmead."

"Well, I am! And I guess you did sleep most of the night. Do you suppose you could keep watch for an hour while I take a nap?"

Caesar drew himself up. "Course I can, Mr. George, suh," he replied with considerable dignity.

"Well, I'll trust you. Come over here." Go Ahead led the way some twenty feet northward to the north end of the barn. "There isn't a thing to do except to stand here, at this corner, and keep your eyes open," he said. "You can look east and west along the road we just came by, and north across the road, and now and then take a look over your shoulder past Bob and me and the horses along the side of the barn to the south, to make sure that nobody's trying to slip up on you from behind. The first human being you see, wake me quick. And wake me in an hour anyway—one hour. You understand?"

"Yassuh. I understand!"

"Well, you do it, or I'll skin you alive."

"Yassuh!" Ceasar grinned. Evidently the threat was a mere verbal pleasantry, without terrors.

With a nod Go Ahead strode half a dozen feet to the rear and flopped down on his blankets as Stella had done. Like Stella, too, he was asleep in an instant.

Caesar watched him take his place; then, bristling and determined, he set himself to keep unremitting vigil.

And he did keep it. He obeyed Go Ahead's instructions to the letter, kept excellent watch up and down and across the road that ran in front of him, and periodically looked behind him. If danger had come from any of these directions he would undoubtedly have detected it and given warning. But, actually, it did not come from any of these directions.

The passing of the travelers along the front of the ranch buildings had not been unnoticed. Diego, he who had gone down before Barker's heavy knife when he tried to waylay Go Ahead, had laid awake nearly all the night, suffering from the pain of the thrust through his upper arm. More, he was standing at the window of the bunkhouse, staring out into the dawn, when the three rode by. He thought he recognized Go Ahead, and finding that the party did not reappear along the road beyond the barn, he crossed from the bunkhouse to the barn, where, head pressed against the boards at the back, he listened with all his ears. Soon he was rewarded by the sound of voices and then, finding a convenient knothole through which to peep, by the sight of the man whose quickwittedness had got him his wound.

Then he went to the ranch house, to the automatic telephone, and called up Barker's office. The bell was still ringing when Barker got back from seeing Wade and his men off for Bridget's. He heard it, indeed, as he came up the path, and quickened his steps to a run in consequence. 'Phone calls at that hour of the morning were rare and likely to be important.

Pearl in Every Book

There are people, it seems, who value things in proportion to the price that is put on them; and because the Bible can be bought for a few pence, or a few shillings, pass it by as a common thing. "Why should we buy your cheap little books?" scornfully asked a man in Burma. The colporteur replied: "Yes, they are cheap, only two pice a copy, but I have seen the people of Ceylon buying oysters at one pice in the hope of finding a pearl. And here there is a pearl in every book." It was a happy answer, and the colporteur spoke better than he knew, for the pearl is the best symbol of beauty born of pain.—Montreal Herald.

Horned Owl's Tit-Bit

A curious habit of the great horned owl is that of decapitating his victims. Frequently, only the head is eaten. One report speaks of three turkeys and several chickens beheaded by one of these owls in a single night. The bodies were uninjured.

IMPORTANT TO MOTHERS OF UNDERWEIGHT CHILDREN

"Two Tablespoons of Karo in a Glass of Milk doubles its Food Value"!

THIS statement is made by one of America's greatest child specialists.

"Karo", says this physician, "is not only a delicious sweet, but the ideal food for the underweight child. Karo can be added to the diet without spoiling the appetite for other foods—and it improves the taste of milk."

Karo has a high energy value—there are 120 calories per ounce in it—almost twice the energy value of eggs and lean beef, weight for weight.

Further—Karo is easily digested—giving children muscular energy immediately.

Serve the kiddies plenty of Karo in milk, on cereals, on sliced bread—and watch their weight improve.

Economy—compare Karo, pound for pound, with the price of other staple foods. Isn't Karo economical?

Excel, Minn., Oct. 25, 1928

Dear Editor of Holt Weekly News:

As we have been getting lots of political matter of all kinds and creeds of our higher up candidates and we get excited about them from President down, we shall not forget ourselves, and vote against our own interests and our neighbors. When I think of my own neighbors I feel like saying something right now. I am not much of a writer, but have much I would like to say, and will try anyway. I want to call your attention to our own County officers, we should look after them some.

This year a Judge of Probate is to be elected, and we have one of the best qualified men in the county, right here from this end of the county. P. B. Malberg is a candidate for that office and I could give many reasons why he should be elected but can not say them all.

I can not see why we should always elect men to office that are popular at the county seet. Let us change about this time and get one officer anyway who is not selected and elected at the County seat. We need someone in the Court House that we can go to and find out what is going on, and if we want an independent County officer we have to elect him with our votes. We will never get any man into that Court House from this part of the County if you expect the county seat votes will elect him. Now therefore when we have a man from our end of the county, one of our most able men, one of our safest men, a man who has been tried out in many positions, one who has stood by us and the county in many trials and troubles.

He has never failed to stand for what is right whether we liked it or not. He has always stood on his own feet and held his ground.

We who know him best from the early days, we have found that Malberg was right many a time when we differed with him. I have known Malberg for at least 40 years, and I do not hesitate to recommend him for Judge of Probate to the voters of Marshall county.

I could go on and say much more but I know that he is so well known so I need not say much more. And I wanted to remind all of Malberg's friends that he can not be elacted, unless we go out and vote for him We must all go and vote for him. Get out all in the family to vote for him and urge and get out your neighbors to vote for him and do all you can for him and in that way we can elect him.

And if we elect him we will have at least one we can say we put there and we will have someone in the Court House we can go to and hang up our hat and visit with and when we would need any help or advice we know that he will be there to help those that need help.

Now then let us get out and vote for P. B. Malberg for Judge of Probate on November 6, 1928, and show that we can stick to our man. Now is the time to show that we can vote for our best interests for the county and our own communities. Vote for Malberg.

Respectfully an old farmer.

P. B. MALBERG

Candidate for JUDGE OF PROBATE
MARSHALL COUNTY
Respectfully Asks For Your Vote and Support At The General Election, November 6th, 1928.

To the voters of Marshall county:

Just to remind you at this time that I am a candidate for the office of Judge of Probate and will say that if I am elected I shall attend to the office personally, carefully and impartially at all times and I shall try to the best of my ability to serve you right.

I sincerely ask all my old and new friends to assist me at this time to get votes enough to be elected and I shall be thankful for your help and influence. I shall be glad to get into a position where I can serve you and help those who need help. No one need to hesitate to come to me with their Probate matters. I shall be there to serve and assist to get Probate matters started right and finished right. It has been a pleasure to me before to serve the people of Marshall county and I hope to have the pleasure to serve you once more.

I have no money or can afford to hire anyone to work for me. I have to depend on old and new friends to help me get votes enough to elect me.

I am not tied to any party or creed, only the people and taxpayers of this county. I am free to do justice to all without fear or favor.

It has been a pleasure before to serve the people of Marshall county and I hope to have the pleasure to serve you once more and therefore desire to get into a position where I can be of real service to you in the future.

I thank you all for the past favors, and if you elect me to the office of Judge of Probate, I shall try my best to conduct the office and myself so that you will not regret that you helped to elect me.

"So give me the man who will do all he can
To lighten my burden and woe,
Who will stick to the end, if he claims me a friend
He is the man that I'm thankful to know
I'll take off my hat to a fellow like that
And admit that he's better than I".

Yours sincerely,
P. B. Malberg.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXXXIV

FINE POINTS IN FEEDING: Cows like a clean manger for their meals the same as people like a clean table. The manger should be cleaned before each feed of waste material such as weeds, corn stalks, etc. Feed only such amount as will be eaten at one time, and two feeds a day, morning and evening, for ordinary good production is sufficient.

Grain may be fed first in the morning just before milking and silage after milking and then hay. Silage should always be fed after milking to avoid it imparting its flavor to the milk. Hay should be fed after milking and separating to avoid dust.

In these times when special effort is being put forth by the creameries for high quality butter, extra care should be used on the farms to avoid what is known as feed flavors.

Any feed that imparts a strong flavor such as rutabagas, cabbage, etc, should always be fed after milking.

Mrs. Nels Johnson Died at Fergus Falls

Mrs. Nels Johnson of Anita died at Fergus Falls last Wednesday evening at ten o'clock after being there for two weeks to secure medical aid from specialists, death being due to Bronchial Pneumonia. Mrs. Johnson had been ill for about five weeks and had sought medical aid in nearby cities before going to Fergus Falls, and was getting along fairly well, when pneumonia set in and death resulted within a few days.

Inga Rosetta Johnson was born less than one half mile distant from her present home, being the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Hall, and was born on July 25, 1894. She grew to maidenhood within the same community, and was on July 11, 1912 married to Nels Johnson her surviving husband. The marriage was performed at the Evangelical church at Warren with Rev. U. G. Knutson officiating. To the union was born seven children, of whom four are still living, being Clifford, Berton, Violet and Eileen. Besides her immediate family she is also mourned by her aged mother, Mrs. Mary Hall and six sisters and three brothers.

In the Rindal church congregation of which she was an active member, she has served for several years as secretary of the Rindal Ladies Aid, and will be missed for her interest in the activities of the church.

The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon at the Rindal cemetary, Erickson and Lund of Thief River Falls having charge of the arrangements, and Rev. E. L. Tungseth, pastor of the church performing the final rights. As pall bearers acted Chas Sagmoen, Christ Evenson, Ted Thompson, Olof Hagen, Peder Pederson and John Ranum. About one hundred persons attended the funeral and among outsiders present were noted Mesdames John and Chas Dickens of Thief River Falls, John Anderson of Newfolden and Mrs. Elinda Eliason also of Thief River Falls Deceased was 34 years 5 months and 5 days old at the time of her death.

Mrs. Victor Johnson and two children returned home last week from Thief River where they have been visiting with relatives.

Rejoinder Must Have Left "Bobby" Thinking

There is an interesting and characteristic story told of how Robert Burns had argument with a Moravian. His name was William Kirkland, farmer, in the parish of Galston. Burns and his brother, Gilbert, were going to the parish church of Tarbolton one Sunday, and got into conversation with this farmer, who was making for the Moravian church at Ayr. It was during the controversy about the Old and New Lights. The farmer defended the former, Burns the latter. The dispute grew warm, but Burns could make no headway, so tauntingly exclaimed: "Oh, I suppose I've met with the Apostle Paul this morning." "No," replied the old Moravian, "you have not met the Apostle Paul; but I think I have met one of those wild beasts which he says he fought with at Ephesus."—Weekly Scotsman.

Record Rattler Is Killed in Georgia

Thomasville, Ga.—A rattlesnake killed on Greenwood, estate of Mrs. Payne Whitney, three miles from Thomasville, holds the season record for size. The reptile is 6 feet 6½ inches long and has 19 rattles. It was slain by Carl Hundly.

Several rattlers of unusual size have been killed around here this season, though this section has fewer rattlesnakes than most of the south Georgia and north Florida counties, due to the fact that wealthy northern owners of many estates have for several years paid $1 a head for each rattlesnake killed and brought in, with a grand prize of $50 to the person killing the largest number of these reptiles during a season.

Transferred From Leaky Ship in Heavy Gale.

New York.—The thrilling rescue in mountainous seas of a woman and two children from a leaking and waterlogged San Francisco steamer off Cape Hatteras was told in radio messages from the liner Guayaquil.

Caught in the terrific West Indian hurricane, the lumber steamer Willababco sprang a leak. On board were the captain, C. H. McGahan of Brooklyn, his wife and two small children, a boy and girl, and his crew of 39 men.

The crew worked night and day at the pumps, but the water finally reached the engine room. With the gale still raging, the steamer drifted helpless.

The Willababco's S. O. S. was picked up by the steamship Guayaquil of the Panama railway line. The Guayaquil went to the rescue and the sailor's family were transferred to her in the high seas.

Captain McGahan and his men refused to leave their ship. A hawser was made fast to the Mallory tanker Hoxbar, bound from Cartagena to Bayonne, N. J., which towed it to New York.

Aged Feudist Violates Parole; Back in Prison

Frankfort, Ky.—Tom White, aged Kentucky mountain feudist who played a prominent part in the Hargis-Cockrell feud which began with a squabble over hogs and ended only when more than a score of lives had been taken, is again in the reformatory here to serve the remainder of his life.

The mountaineer, who is almost seventy, was returned to prison for violation of parole privileges after he had been convicted of transgressing a liquor law.

The return of White to custody recalls the stirring days of 1903 when the Hargis-Cockrell feud kept "Bloody Breathitt" county in a reign of terror. The feud did not die until 1912 when Jim Hargis was killed by his own son and Ed Callahan, his ally, was shot from ambush.

White was convicted of the murder in 1903 of J. B. Marcum, an attorney, leader of the forces opposing Hargis. Marcum was standing on the courthouse steps when White passed by and remarked to a friend, "There's a bad man and I am afraid of him."

A few seconds later two shots were fired and Marcum fell to the ground mortally wounded. White was arrested for the murder and given a life sentence but was paroled in 1917.

Makes Good on His Boast, "I'll Escape"

Paris.—Dr. Pierre Bougrat, who declared in open court when convicted of murder, "I will escape," has made good his word in France's penal colony in the tropical forest of French Guiana.

Doctor Bougrat and two others escaped from the hospital at St. Louis Maroni, off which is the notorious Devil's island, where incorrigible prisoners are sent.

The doctor had always maintained he was innocent and his lawyer was so convinced of his client's blamelessness that he wrote a book which caused his disbarment.

Doctor Bougrat, a brilliant Marseilles physician, who was decorated in the war for valor, was sentenced to the penal settlement for life in March, 1927, for killing Paul Rumebe, a war comrade and patient. The body was found hidden in a clothes closet in the doctor's office.

Rumebe had a large sum of money, which Doctor Bougrat said Rumebe had lost and then committed suicide in the office. The physician explained he hid the body because he feared appearances were against him.

Robber's Shot Proves Blessing to Victim

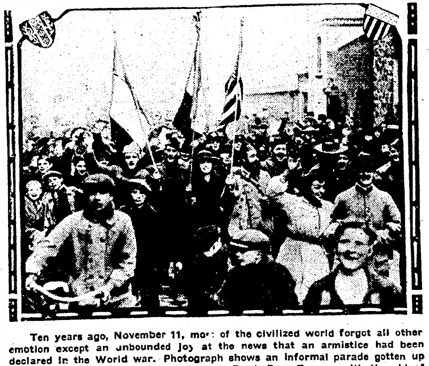
Toledo, Ohio.—A new method of removing warts was revealed to Frank Hindman, thirty, of Chicago, by a robber here.

Hindman was accosted by the robber and handed over $35. Then he yelled and started after the robber, who turned and fired.

The bullet grazed Hindman's cheek, removing a wart of long standing.

Police later arrested William Alexander, thirty-five, on charges of robbery and shooting with intent to kill.

How They Welcomed Peace



Ten years ago, November 11, most of the civilized world forgot all other emotion except an unbounded joy at the news that an armistice had been declared in the World war. Photograph shows an informal parade gotten up by members of an American division at Bar-le-Duc, France, with the aid of the inhabitants of the town, upon receipt of the news.

Armistice day, a veteran of the World war relates, found my division in rest billets at Bar-le-Duc, with my regiment in a little village in the Vosage mountains, south of Verdun, which went under the magnificent name of Grand.

First official news that the armistice had been signed was received by the mayor of this little French village and the news was quickly spread, so that all the inhabitants, consisting particularly of women and old men, were on the village streets within a few minutes.

The men of my regiment were quickly notified and almost mobbed by the happy French people, the women, in particular, expressing their joy by hugging and kissing the American soldiers. Our own regimental band played the French and American national anthems and the French people danced and sang up and down the streets waving French and American flags which they secured from some unknown place.

The mayor of the village invited the officers of my regiment to drink to victory with him and all of us adjourned to the ever-present cafe, where he set up champagne in an inexhaustible supply, to which the American soldiers did full credit. The celebration continued long into the night and really lasted for several days thereafter.

A member of the division took the snapshot of the scene reproduced here.

Ten Years Ago at the Front

A decade ago Second division troops of the A. E. F. left a French rest camp for the Belleau wood battlefront to help resist a German offensive.

The former doughboys and leathernecks in that World war outfit held their annual reunion festivities at St. Louis last June.

Led by Col. Hanford McNider, president of the Second Division association, a half-dozen generals, 100 or so colonels and majors and several thousand "top kicks," "second looies," corporals and privates, were present or accounted for when the operation got under way.

Much can be obliterated from memory in ten years, but it is doubtful if any of the Second division will have forgotten that daybreak a decade ago when the long convoy chugged out of the rest area near Chaumont-en-Vexin with themselves aboard.

Few but the officers who had seen the orders knew whither they were headed. Vague reports of the German success at Chemin-des-Dames had been heard, but the officers and men did not comprehend the gravity of the situation. For the second time in four years the German high command was throwing its gray-clad troops toward Paris, and all the Allied strength had been unable to stop them.

The Second division started out in gay fashion. The men cheered, sang and yelled. Then the convoy came closer to the front. They passed a long line of refugees and the singing and cheering stopped. The spectacle of those thousands of terrified people, fleeing desperately from their homes, gave the men their first profound understanding of the horrors of war.

Inferno of War.

At Meaux the confusion was terrific. The city was choked with refugees, wounded men, troops and trains of every description.

North of Meaux the troops were debussed. The Ninth infantry started immediately on a forced march to the line and the other regiments bivouacked for the night. German bombing planes made frequent visits over the camp and there was little sleep. At daybreak, June 1, the infantry and marine regiments marched toward Montreuil-aux-Lions, reaching positions in the rear of the line through Boneuil Vaux, Boresches and Belleau woods that night, with nothing but a thin line of heroic French soldiers between them and the enemy.

Road to Paris Blocked.

June 1 the infantry began to block the Paris highway, and the next day all the infantry of the division was in line, with the Ninth on the right and the Marine brigade in the center. The Third infantry, one battalion of marines and the Fifth machine-gun battalion had been thrown along the line through Veuilly, Premont and Coulombs to re-establish liaison between two French corps which were resisting the Germans at this point.

Scattered French units still were holding the line. They had been engaged for six days, with little food and no rest. The nights of June 3-4 they were relieved and passed through the American lines.

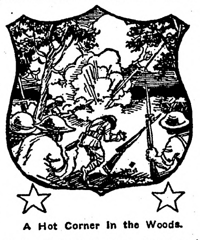
June 4 the Second division was holding a 12-kilometer front, with no reserves between it and the Marne. It had crushed one enemy attack near Veuilly.

The first of a series of small, but difficult advances began June 6. From then until June 25 the fighting, particularly on the front of the Marine brigade, was most desperate. Division after division was thrown into the line by the German command in an effort to shatter the American lines between Vaux and Torchy. The marines ground their way slowly but steadily through the Bois-de-Belleau, and June 25, in a final brilliant dash, killed or captured the last Germans in the region. In recognition of the marines' heroic work the French changed the name of the woods to Bois de la Brigade Marine.

Morale Unshaken.

In the meantime the Third brigade had been holding its part of the line, morale unshaken by the constant and terrific shelling to which it was subjected. This outfit, like the marines, had no other cover than the shallow "fox holes" dug in the early part of June, and no food except "monkey meat" and the one cooked meal a day which came up at midnight. By July 1 the brigade had captured Vaux and the Bois de la Roche.

July 9 the division was relieved by the Twenty-sixth, taking up a reserve position along the line Montreuil-St Aulde. It had been in the line 40 days. In that time ten German divisions had been faced, from which had been captured 1,680 prisoners. Not only had the Second stopped the German drive on Paris in that sector, but it had advanced to an average depth of two kilometers on a front of eight kilometers. The losses totaled 9,131, but the Second division had demonstrated to the world that the American soldier had "arrived."



A Hot Corner in the Woods.

Remembrance

The hour has struck; the smoking guns
  Are sullen, still. We dully wonder
Why the ensuing silence stuns
  Our ears, long used to battle thunder.
We see charred splinters that were trees
  In ravaged, shell-torn earth, blood-spattered,
And know that we are kin to these—
  Our lives, our hopes, our bodies shattered.

Ten years have passed; the scars of war,
  Though cruel, deep, are slowly healing;
Grain ripens where it did before,
  New furrows gun-plowed earth concealing.
Men follow little gods, nor crave
  Fine frenzy, high emprise, devotion;
Perhaps forget the boys who gave
  Their all; who sleep beyond the ocean.

Thank God, this day is set aside
  For reverent commemoration;
For us to know a grateful pride
  And find a deeper consecration.
Our comrades of those gallant days
  Who shared the conflict, grim and gory,
Need not our homage nor our praise—
  They are, themselves, the greater glory!

Strong Ones of Earth

There are the strong ones of the earth, the mighty food for good or evil—those who knew how to keep silence when it is a pain and a grief to them; those who give time to their own souls to wax strong against temptation, or to the powers of wrath to stamp upon them their withering passage.—Emerson.

The Last Dance With Her

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

MARION WOODS heard the news the week after her misunderstanding with Rolfe Burton—Sadie Smith brought the word, as she always did, of every event in the town.

"My dear," said Sadie Smith, "I just came in to talk it over with you—of course you would know all about it."

"If I knew what you were talking about—" began Marion when Sadie burst in with an amazed expression on her chubby face.

"Why—it's about Rolfe—they say he is going to sail for South America the last of the week. Why, Marion, how pale you are!"

"That need not stop your flow of news, Sadie," smiled Marion. "To reassure you, really, I did not know that Rolfe expected to go to South America."

Sadie's large bright eye had flashed to the third finger of Marion's left hand. It was quite bare! Always she had seen Rolfe's engagement ring on the slim finger. Now it was gone!

"I thought you were engaged to Rolfe," she said suddenly.

"Did you?" asked Marion sweetly.

"They say that Mrs. Burton will give a party for Rolfe before he sails," went on Sadie. "I suppose you will be there, Marion?"

"I have not been invited," said Marion.

"None of us have, silly. I suppose Mrs. Burton will write notes to us or telephone. Well, I must be on my way—so busy this morning." And she was away, Marion knew, primed with the additional information that as she was no longer wearing Rolfe's engagement ring, the engagement must be broken.

Among those who heard that phase of the affair was Tom Lincoln who was studying law in Judge Carter's office, and he closed his books, attended to one or two important matters and went home early. That evening he called upon Marion Woods.

"It isn't a matter of the law," he said with a grimace on his handsome face.

"I came up for air," remarked Tom. "And speaking of frivolty, did you receive an invitation to Mrs. Burton's dance?"

"Yes—this morning."

"I am hoping that you will let me be your escort."

"Not you, Tom, but father will drive me there. I am very glad that you will be there, though."

"How many dances may I have?"

"Ask me afterwards, Tom. I am usually engaged for the last dance—I think the others are open."

Tom swallowed hard. "Who is she saving that last dance for?" he asked himself savagely, and suddenly before his jealous eyes was a vision of gay Rolfe Burton. Still, Marion was not wearing an engagement ring this evening and Tom took hope.

On Thursday evening Mr. Woods drove his daughter to the Burton house, and, as Marion ran up the front steps, she felt the old thrill that used to come when she went to her first dances—the quiver of uncertainty now that Rolfe no longer protected her.

When she came down stairs and was greeted by a rather cool Mrs. Burton, Marion was charming in a pale green georgette party frock. There was a little rush of young men toward her but Tom Lincoln reached her first.

Marion danced every dance, and at times she quite forgot Rolfe, who, danced a great deal with a pretty, dark-haired girl, Maizie Flather. Once his eyes intercepted Marion's merry gaze and he bowed stiffly, angrily, in response to her gay nod of greeting. Deep in her heart was a little sore spot. Would Rolfe ask her to dance? Would he ask her to dance the last dance just for old time's sake?

She was afraid he would not, but he did come and ask her to dance toward the end of the evening.

As they danced, she could feel the almost savage pressure of his arm.

"I could run away with you!" he said savagely.

"But you won't," she suddenly laughed at him. "You know that you are angry because I will not marry you at once and rush off to South America with you—I couldn't do that, Rolfe. And I think it must have been the real test of my love. As for you—your vanity is wounded and—"

"May I have the last dance?" he asked roughly.

"I am sorry—" she was beginning when he flung himself away. Marion looked around the room, seeing the whole scene with new vision. There was a sense of freedom that she had not known since her engagement to Rolfe Burton. She had not realized how he had dominated her, and how his proud, overbearing disposition had at last worn her love to brittleness Now it had snapped, and she was free.

When Tom Lincoln came and asked again for the last dance, she nodded gayly, and under Tom's guidance she found that dancing was a new pleasure. When he put her in her father's car, Tom whispered: "Is this just a dream—or might it happen again?"

And she murmured: "I hope, very often!"

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. At your druggist, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Fought Fire With Milk

Spontaneous combustion of new hay caused a fire which destroyed a large barn near Tulare, Calif. Power connections being burned out, a bucket brigade was formed by neighbors, and this prompt action resulted in the saving of a horse barn nearby. Skimmed milk and whey were used in place of water, unavailable with the power supply cut off.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean you have been eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of good water.

The Reason

The Worthington students in the first grade had been learning the difference between "love" and "like." The next day little Robert came to school and made the statement, "I just love milk."

Jimmie spoke up quickly, "You can't love milk, you mean you like it."

"No, sir, I love it," replied Robert.

"But you can't love milk," the wise one replied, "it doesn't have a neck."—Indianapolis News.

Los Angeles Boy Needed Help

Leroy Young, 1116 Georgia St., Los Angeles, is a "regular fellow," active in sports, and at the top in his classes at school. To look at him now, you'd think he never had a day's sickness but his mother says: "When Leroy was just a little fellow, we found his stomach and bowels were weak. He kept suffering from constipation. Nothing he ate agreed with him. He was fretful, feverish and puny.

"When we started giving him California Fig Syrup his condition improved quickly. His constipation and biliousness stopped and he has had no more trouble of that kind. I have since used California Fig Syrup with him for colds and upset spells. He likes it because it tastes so good and I like it because it helps him so wonderfully!"

California Fig Syrup has been the trusted standby of mothers for over 50 years. Leading physicians recommend it. It is purely vegetable and works with Nature to regulate, tone and strengthen the stomach and bowels of children so they get full nourishment from their food and waste is eliminated in a normal way. Four million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it. Always look for the word "California" on the carton to be sure of getting the genuine.

"Hello!" he yelled into the mouthpiece, and when Diego's excited accents came back to him he swore aloud.

Diego recognized his voice and took no note of his profanity. Volubly, in mingled Spanish and English, he gasped out his tale.

At first Barker refused to believe it. Regularly, all the night through, his spies had reported, each of them with the assurance that Go Ahead and Stella were asleep at Bridget's.

"Nonsense, Diego," he raged. "You're loco. It's somebody else. Those other dubs are here at Bridget's."

"No loco, senor. You think I know not the hombre who have trick me yesterday? No, senor, no!"

"Well, I'll find out and— If they're not here, perhaps— What are they doing?"

"They make sleep, senior. All but the black man, who stands on the watch."

"The black man? What black man?"

"I know not, senor. Never have I seen him before."

"Well, can you get at them? How many men have you?"

Diego explained that it would be easy. The senor remembered the big hole that the great wolf hound had dug beneath the back of the barn the time that he found himself shut up therein? Bueno. The hole had been filled with loose earth, easy to dig out. It opened between the black man and the sleeper. . . . But yes, the earth was of a great looseness. Of a surety his men could remove it unheard, and slip through unseen. He himself would lead them in spite of his wounded arm—wounded so cruelly by the knife of the senor. The senor understood that there were knotholes through which one could observe and learn when the chance best offered. The senor could imagine—

But the senor had no more time for imagining. "Never mind all that," he broke in. "You get those birds! Get the two men any way you like, but get them. And get the girl, too, but don't hurt her; and then you light out for the Roost with her and the others, whether they're dead or alive. Call me up when you're ready to start and let me know. Now get busy."

Barker slammed the earpiece on the hook and rushed out of the office and up the road toward Bridget's. He was done for so far as Loboville was concerned, but if Diego got that girl he might yet force her to marry him and escape with her to the East. He would stake all on the chance, would cast his lot openly with the bandits. The padre was at the Roost; that was why he had not been at the ranch the morning before. If he had luck, he might yet win.

Diego also hurried. Swiftly he called his men, most of whom were up and about by this time, and led them to the barn, where swiftly but cautiously they re-excavated the hole beneath the barn sill. What noise they made was drowned by the trampling of the horses so close beside and by the sound of their munching on the oats in their nose bags.

Caesar, continually shifting his gaze from right to fore and from fore to left, and back to right again, looked less often over his shoulder; and when he did look his eyes, directing high, passed clear over the ground almost at his feet. Even when at last the surface caved softly in he did not notice the cavity any more than he noticed any other depression in the unfamiliar earth.

And Diego, truth to tell, gave him little time for observation. The moment the hole was clear the Mexican was down, club in hand, writhing through. Once only he had to stop, deterred by a touch from the man at the knothole when Caesar looked backward; then when Caesar turned away to search the distances before him, Diego slid through, sprang upward and ran cat-footedly forward over the few intervening feet.

In the air his club rose, held in his left hand—rose and came down; and without even a grunt the unsuspecting negro slumped to the ground. An instant later the other ranch hands, following through the hole in quick succession, flung themselves bodily upon the sleeper.

The struggle was brief; for Go Ahead it was very brief. With him Diego had ordered his men to take no chances, and he opened his eyes only to see a club descending. When it struck, life for him temporarily ended. Stella, awakened by the struggle, squirmed aside just in time to dodge the pounce of two Mexicans and to snatch at her pistol, but before she could fire was overwhelmed beneath the weight of others, in whose grip she found herself utterly helpless.

The whole thing was a matter of seconds. Even Diego, who had turned promptly away from Caesar, confident that his blow had gone home, was only just in time to see the finish.

Five minutes later Diego and his men were off. Go Ahead and Caesar had been hung across their saddles, with their hands and feet lashed together beneath their horses' bellies, and Stella, with her hands tied behind her, had been forced to mount a horse that was led by Diego.

Diego, surveying his work, felt well satisfied. He did not know that while he was telephoning to Barker, Go Ahead had revived in answer to Stella's frenzied appeals, nor that Stella, stopped by the coming of the Mexicans, had slipped into Go Ahead's hand the tiny penknife with which she had been trying to cut his bonds.

CHAPTER XIII

For an hour or more Diego and his helpers trotted northward, leading or shepherding their three captives. Diego, exultant over his success and forgetting the pain of his wound in the joy of his triumph over the man who had outwitted him twenty-four hours before, chatted volubly with his men, boasting, not without reason, of the skill with which he had planned and carried through the attack. On the supposedly unconscious men bound to their horses he heaped epithets and derisive comments.

Stella was not one to abandon hope readily, but she was very near to abandoning it now. Not one reasonable glimmer of hope could she see. True, she had given Go Ahead her own penknife and had seen his hand close over it, and she had been able to note that the Mexicans had not discovered it and taken it away from him. But that it could avail him anything seemed impossible; it was too small, too fragile. Whatever spark of hope still lay in her breast was wholly unreasonable and was based merely on what she had seen Go Ahead do before, and not on any way out of the trouble that she could imagine.

The horses had started on the upgrade leading to the crest of the first swell over which Go Ahead had followed her the day before. As they climbed, Stella turned in her saddle and swept the country behind with her eyes, hoping against hope that she might see something, if no more than a trail of dust, showing that friends were on their trail. But she saw nothing.

As she faced back to the front, however, a sudden outcry close behind her made her turn once more—just in time to see Go Ahead's horse rearing and fighting against the bridle rein with which his Mexican captor Antonio held him. As she watched she saw him tear himself free and race away, buckjumping furiously, across the sandy slope, apparently trying to throw off the helpless form that was lashed so securely across his back.

So sudden, so unexpected was the outbreak that for a moment the three Mexicans stared open-mouthed. Then, at Diego's sharp command, Antonio spurred out after the burdened horse, rope in hand.

Heart in mouth Stella had watched the struggle, longing to go to Go Ahead's aid but restrained from doing so by Diego's powerful grasp upon her bridle. But when, afar off—for the chase had taken Antonio far—she saw Go Ahead hurled from his place and felt Diego's grip momentarily relax, she drove her spurs into her horse's sides and strove to break loose.

She failed, of course. Her hands were too tightly bound, and Diego's grip, relaxed as it was, was still too firm. The brief struggle ended in the only way it could end. So also her plea to be allowed to go to Go Ahead's help failed. Diego, who had hesitated for a moment whether to go to Antonio's help or not, instantly decided against it.

In vain Stella pleaded. A moment later the horses passed the crest and even the field of the struggle was hidden from her gaze.

Half an hour later, cresting the second swell, beyond which lay Skeleton valley, Stella saw Barker and Wade and the bandits at the bottom, gesturing impatiently to her captors.

Barker spurred out to meet them as they raced down the slope. He glanced at Stella and nodded, then he stared at Caesar's black face, and then, missing Go Ahead, he turned scowlingly to Diego.

Diego did not wait to be questioned. He understood what his master wanted. Volubly he explained.

Flower Names

The names of many flowers find their origin in proper nouns. Back of them there are often biographies. The beautiful Japanese flower, wistaria, discovered by Nuttall, was not named after him, but in honor of one of his scientific friends, Casper Wistar, a professor of anatomy at the University of Pennsylvania. The gentian gets its name from the Illyrian king Gentius, who was the first to discover its properties. Quassia was named after Quassi, a negro slave in Surinam, Dutch Guiana, who used its bark as a remedy for fever.—Mentor Magazine.

Hickman Asks Change of Venue

Los Angeles, Calif.—William Edward Hickman, fearing public feeling over the kidnaping, killing and mutilating of Marian Parker, wants to face trial somewhere away from the scene of his confessed crimes. Richard Cantillon, associated with Jerome Walsh of Kansas City in Hickman's defense, announced that he would ask for a change of venue "because all people in Los Angeles county are biased and prejudiced against the defendant."

When the Girls Wore Skirts That "Folded"

In the days when women's skirts were built like one-man motor car tops a single skirt contained as much material as a circus tent and it was necessary to resort to a system of guy wires and pulleys to contract it when space was limited, as in a stage coach.

Crinolines could be puffed out or collapsed at will, for they were held out by three or four rows of steel frames slipped through little folds made for that purpose. When getting into the coach these frames could be released by little springs; the keys could be kept in a small space in a little box.

When they arrived at their destination the women slipped into the first room at the inn, again filled out their crinoline skirts by locking up the springs and then appeared in the court of the inn before the eyes of other travelers, as smart and stiffly arrayed as the chalice of the flower.—Paul Poiret in the Forum Magazine.

Didn't Live Up to It

Three men, loading a 600-pound safe on to a truck at Sudbury, Pa., fled when Wallace R. Cutter ran out in his pajamas and chased them. One of the fleeing men dropped a wallet in which was found a card with this inscription:"Honesty is the best policy."

Fed By Dairymen Who Check Results

Balanced to be Used with Home Grown Grains
Northrup King & Co's Sterling Dairy Feed
Sterling Dairy Balancer
20% PROTEIN 32%

Sterling Dairy Feed
This mixture contains some corn, oats and barley, together with high protein elements which permit mixing it, equal weights, with one of the home grown grains to produce the desired protein ration for dairy cows. Or if you grow more than one grain, a mixture of these with equal weight of Sterling Dairy Feed will produce the desired ration.

Sterling Dairy Balancer
This mixture contains no basal grains whatever and is therefore made higher in protein so it can be mixed with home grown grains and thus produce larger profits for these grains than they would otherwise bring. It requires about three parts of a mixture of corn, oats and barley, to one part of Sterling Dairy Balancer for the required protein dairy ration.

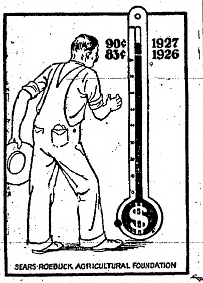
Farm Prices Take Upward Trend



The advance in prices of farm products from April to September, 1927, was one of the most remarkable in recent years, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The values of the commodities sold by farmers, as compiled by the United States Department of Agriculture, rose from 25 per cent above the pre-war average at the beginning of this period to 40 per cent above pre-war at the end.

Farm prices had been declining for two years when this advance started. In five months, more than half of the two-year slump had been recovered. September, 1927, prices averaged nearly 5 per cent higher than a year previous, showing a complete reversal of the trend.

The purchasing power of the "farmer's dollar," or the ratio of prices of farm products to wholesale prices of industrial products is back to 90 cents compared with only 83 cents in September, 1926.

The advance of 82 per cent in the farm price of cotton from April to September was the most important change in the market value of the individual commodities. An advance of 46 per cent occurred in both corn and egg markets. Cottonseed meal prices rose 33 per cent; apples, 26 per cent; veal calf prices, 9 per cent; barley, 8 per cent, and beef cattle, 5 per cent. Smaller advances were recorded also in the values of wheat, oats, flax, and wool. In contrast with these advances were the declines of 20 per cent in hay, 15 per cent in potatoes, 11 per cent in chickens, 7 per cent in sheep, 6 per cent in hogs, and 5 per cent in lambs, as well as smaller declines in prices of butter, rye, sheep and horses.

A MAYTAG for Every Farm Home

THE Maytag is powered either with an electric motor or the Maytag gasoline Multi-Motor. It does an average farm washing in an hour or so, and washes so thoroughly that no hand-rubbing is necessary, even on grimy overalls. The roomy, cast-aluminum tub keeps the water hot for an entire washing. The gyrafoam washing action makes water do the washing—the fast, thorough, gentle way. The Roller Water Remover with a soft top roll and hard bottom roll, wrings everything evenly dry without harming the buttons.

The Gasoline Multi-Motor
The Maytag Gasoline Multi-Motor will give you the same steady, smooth flow of power as an electric motor. A step on the pedal starts it. The carburetor has but one adjustment and is flood proof. All bearings are high-grade bronze.

Free Trial for a Week's Washing
The Maytag must sell itself to you on the speed and ease with which it does your biggest washing. Write or telephone for one before next washday.
If it doesn't sell itself, don't keep it.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXXXIV

FINE POINTS IN FEEDING: Cows like a clean manger for their meals the same as people like a clean table. The manger should be cleaned before each feed of waste material such as weeds, corn stalks, etc. Feed only such amount as will be eaten at one time, and two feeds a day, morning and evening, for ordinary good production is sufficient.

Grain may be fed first in the morning just before milking and silage after milking and then hay. Silage should always be fed after milking to avoid it imparting its flavor to the milk. Hay should be fed after milking and separating to avoid dust.

In these times when special effort is being put forth by the creameries for high quality butter, extra care should be used on the farms to avoid what is known as feed flavors.

Any feed that imparts a strong flavor such as rutabagas, cabbage, etc., should always be fed after milking.

Mrs. Grondahl Died

Mrs. Magnus Grondahl passed away at her home here early Tuesday evening. Funeral will be held here this afternoon.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Watch for the big new serial story which will start soon in the NEWS.

Mrs. K. Nyberg of Thief River Falls visited relatives here this week.

About two hundred people attended the chicken supper and sale the Nazareth Lutheran Ladies Aid gave in the church parlors here Monday evening.

The proceeds from the sale and supper amounted to $117.00

Martin Nygaard and family moved to town last week.

O. F. Sovde and family and Leonard Swan and family visited at the T. Kolden home Sunday.

Mrs. H. Peterson and children returned home Saturday from Thief River where the had spent a few days with relatives.

Many of our local hunters have been coming home this week and some of them sure had good luck in getting their deer.

Coconut Economy

In the South seas coconuts have many uses—the milk is drunk; the sap of the tree, boiled and fermented, makes palm wine; the fruit is eaten, leaves make roof thatch for huts, the splints make baskets, the coconut shells are useful dishes and the oil is used for rubbing the body.

Study Sugar Refining

The Sugar Institute has appointed a committee to consider a plan for chemical research as applied to the refining of raw sugar, under direction of an experienced chemist. Reduction of costs chiefly is sought, but efforts will be made to find means of increasing the yield and substitutes for costly materials now used in the refining process.

SCHOOLGIRLS NEED HEALTH

Daughter of Mrs. Catherine Lamuth
Box 72, Mohawk, Michigan

"After my daughter grew into womanhood she began to feel rundown and weak and a friend asked me to get her your medicine. She took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Herb Medicine. Her nerves are better, her appetite is good, she is in good spirits and able to work every day. We recommend the Vegetable Compound to other girls and to their mothers."—Mrs. Catherine Lamuth.

Daughter of Mrs. Eva Wood Howe
1006 South H. Street, Danville, Ill.

"I praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for my fourteen-year-old daughter as well as for me. It has helped her growth and her nerves and she has a good appetite now and sleeps well. She has gone to school every day since beginning the medicine. I will continue to give it to her at regular intervals and will recommend it to other mothers who have daughters with similar troubles."—Mrs. Eva Wood Howe.

The Ward of Robbers' Roost

By Crittenden Marriott

—25—

"I do not wait, senor," he ended. "I make haste, as you command. I go back now swiftly to hasten Antonio, if the senor wills."

Barker frowned. "Is the fellow alive or dead?" he asked.

Diego shrugged his shoulders. "Alive I think, senor, when he leave the ranch. But now—quien sabe?"

Barker hesitated. But after all, he concluded, what difference did it make? He had the girl; that was the main thing. There was plenty of time to attend to Go Ahead's case later. And Wade was in a hurry to get to the Roost.

"All right," he said. "You and your other man go back and hurry Tony up. Turn over the nigger to somebody." From Diego's hand he took the bridle rein of Stella's horse and turned away.

Wade was watching. When Barker turned toward him he waved his hand. "All right, boys," he said, wearily, and started ahead. But he swayed in his saddle as he rode; his wound, coupled with the intense physical and mental stress of the last twenty-four hours, had brought him very close to his ultimate limit.

It was an hour later when Barker and Stella, looking back from the crest of the last swell, beyond which lay a wide expanse of loose and continually shifting sand on which the horses' hoofs left no permanent trace, saw a rider in the dirty white clothes affected by the Mexican peons leading a laden horse down the slope that they had last crossed. The interval was too great to permit real scrutiny, but neither Barker nor Stella doubted that it was Antonio with the recaptured horse and prisoner. Later, as the two followers drew steadily nearer, Stella bowed her head hopelessly. And Barker, reading her face, was so well satisfied that when the newcomers caught up with the bandits, at the verge of the waterfall, he did not take the trouble to go back to examine his beaten rival.

Once inside the valley and at the village Wade, climbing painfully down from his saddle, staggered away to his cabin and went in. He asked no help and he received none.

The men regarded both him and Barker with hostile eyes, blaming their present difficult situation upon his leadership and failing to find any consolation in the capture of Stella and two prisoners, of whom they knew practically nothing. Many of them put up their horses and then gathered with frowning brows to talk things over; others rode directly to their quarters, snatched up what they could carry safely, and hurried away out by the waterfall entrance.

Barker, however, did not note any of this. The capture of Stella and Go Ahead had gone to his head. Once more he felt triumphantly victorious. Up to the door of Fair's house he led Stella.

"Go in," he ordered. "Put on those woman's clothes I brought you and wait till I send for you."

Stella apparently did not hear him. She was looking about her for Fair. "Where is my father?" she demanded.

"Fair is not your father. If you mean him, he's dead."

"Dead?"

"Yes. I'm sorry for you and for him. But he got in the boys' way last night, and they shot him."

"Who did? Wade?" Stella's voice was deadly.

Barker hesitated. "Maybe. I don't know," he answered. "I wasn't here. There was a lot of shooting. But that's over and done with. And we ain't got time to waste. You do as I tell you. Put on those woman's things, and wait."

Stella stared at him. "I know why you want to marry me," she said. "Wade told me yesterday. He wanted to marry me and kill you for the same reason. . . . Oh yes, he did! . . . You want my money. Well, you're welcome to it, if you'll let Go Ahead go free. If you kill him or if he dies or is dead already you'll never get it. I'll kill myself first."

Barker laughed unpleasantly. "Don't worry," he said. "I don't know whether your Go Ahead is alive or not, but I hope he is and I haven't the slightest idea of killing him. I want him as a witness to our marriage. I'll need some one to go East with us and testify in court that you married me willingly and all that, and—"

"You're loco."

"Not a bit of it. The padre is here and you've got to tell him that you want to marry me. Then you've got to marry me in Go Ahead's presence willingly and pleasantly. When you've done that I'll let him go. If you don't do it he'll be no use to me as a witness and I'll turn him over to Wade. . . . Wade loves him, you know."

"You beast!"

"All right. Say what you like now; but see that you talk right later if you want your man to live. Now go in and put on those things I told you to." He pushed the girl inside the door and shut it upon her. Then he strode away to Wade's cabin, nearby.

Wade himself was not visible, but in front of the cabin stood the two horses with their silent burdens. The man who had last joined the cavalcade was just hitching his own horse at the rack.

Barker paid no attention to him. Instead he strode up to the horses, recognized Caesar by his color and turned to the other. "Is he dead?" he asked of the guard, who came hurrying up, as he bent to peer into the captive's face.

Then abruptly he felt the muzzle of a pistol thrust against his ribs and heard a well-remembered voice in his ears. "Not so dead as you'll be if you make any breaks," it said, in steely tones.

Slowly Barker straightened up. His face, agape with terror, was ghastly in its pallor. "Go Ahead!" he gasped.

"Yes. Now you go ahead into this house. Keep your hands by your sides, but don't try any tricks if you want to live."

Obeying, Barker felt himself swiftly and completely disarmed.

"Now go to the back room," ordered Go Ahead. "Let's see what's become of Wade." One pace behind, he followed Barker to the door.

Wade was in the room, but as Go Ahead had conjectured, he was clearly out of the game. Stretched on the bed, he was sunk in a stupor that looked final. Go Ahead merely glanced at him; then he waved Barker back to the first room, followed him, and closed the door.

"Call two of your men," he ordered. "Tell them to untie my man Caesar and bring him in and lay him on the lounge yonder. Tell them to handle him gently, that you want him to give you some information. Then tell one of the men to bring Bob here. Put it in your own words, but get the idea over. And remember, I'll be right behind you and that one false move means death."

Like one in a dream Barker obeyed. To the door he went, closely followed by Go Ahead, called two men who were passing and gave them Go Ahead's orders. Then he came back, sat down behind the table and waited until Caesar, weak, tottery, but still alive, staggered in between the men and collapsed on the lounge. Then he gave the order to tell Bob to come to him.

When the men had gone Go Ahead turned to Caesar. "How do you feel, old man?" he asked, affectionately.

Caesar's eyes rested on him, at first hesitantly, then with dawning recognition. "Mr. George, Mr. George!" he cried. "Glory, glory! I thought you was killed, Mr. George."

"Not yet, Caesar. Lie still, old man. Everything's all right—and the rest is going to be so in a minute." He crossed back to his place behind Barker as the door opened and Stella came in.

Couldn't Do It

The purest comedy I have ever seen occurred on an island in the Dutch East Indies with black sandy shores and white breakers and coconut palms fingering a tropical sky. A little monkey, his pointed forehead puckered into an earnest frown, was endeavoring to climb a two-foot stick of driftwood, which he held in his hands. He would prop the stick firmly before him, lift one leg carefully and clutch the [illegible] with his toes, test it cau[illegible] or twice, then lift the other foot confidently off the ground and immediately go tumbling headlong, stick and all, down the hot beach toward the sea.—Corey Ford in Vanity Fair Magazine.

New Source of Power

During his research work in the invention of a new compass, Herr Karl Kolditz of Berlin made discoveries which may make it possible to use earth magnetism as a source of power. This was announced by Kolditz when introducing the compass, for which remarkable claims are made. The instrument shows immediately and exactly any deviation from a vessel's course, and at any moment displays mechanically the exact position without the need of other instruments.

Are You Ready When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois.

Failure is a kind of automatic thread cutter on the human sewing machine.

"Lucile is the Happiest Girl"

So many mothers nowadays talk about giving their children fruit juices, as if this were a new discovery. As a matter of fact, for over fifty years, mothers have been accomplishing results far surpassing anything you can secure from home prepared fruit juices, by using pure, wholesome California Fig Syrup, which is prepared under the most exacting laboratory supervision from ripe California Figs, richest of all fruits in laxative and nourishing properties.

It's marvelous to see how bilious, weak, feverish, sallow, constipated, under-nourished children respond to its gentle influence; how their breath clears up, color flames in their cheeks, and they become sturdy, playful, energetic again. A Western mother, Mrs. H. J. Stoll, Valley P. O., Nebraska, says: "My little daughter, Roma Lucile, was constipated from babyhood. I became worried about her and decided to give her some California Fig Syrup. It stopped her constipation quick; and the way it improved her color and made her pick up made me realize how run-down she had been. She is so sturdy and well now, and always in such good humor that neighbors say she's the happiest girl in the West."

Like all good things, California Fig Syrup is imitated, but you can always get the genuine by looking for the name "California" on the carton.

If some men felt as bad as they really are, it would be useless to call in a doctor.

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

Between You and Me

"Common sense is the most uncommon kind of sense."

By HAROLD BELL WRIGHT

Team Work

"Hit's true enough that most men are born of women—at the same time, you'll take notice that most of us has a daddy."—Preachin' Bill

NEVER you mind what some say. Boys and girls are a lot more valuable than race horses, Persian cats or Pekingese dogs. Yes, and they are a lot more fun.

It is a poor sort of a youngster that is not worth saving. Even if the girl is your child, you can never tell—it might pay you to give her a decent chance. As for your son—well, you know, there will always be room in the penitentiary for him, if you work things right!

Speaking generally, one need not expect eighteen-karat children from ten-karat parents—occasionally, though, the unexpected happens.

Did you ever wonder what a baby would say if it could talk when it was born?

Yes, I know, it is easy to imagine that some people were born talking; but that is not what I mean.

I think the tiny "just-arrived" would take a good long look at its mother, smile a knowing little smile and then remark: "Well, Mother, here we are but where is the other one?"

"The other one?" mother would falter—not being able at the moment to think of anyone but her baby and herself.

"Yes. There were three of us when this thing started. What has become of Dad? Why isn't he here to hold up his end of this job? Why should you and I do all the hard work?"

And when the doctor or nurse or somebody had hustled out and dragged in the fond papa, I think baby would look the guilty man over doubtfully and then address the pair:

"I feel, parents, it is only fair to everybody concerned that we three have a clear understanding right now. There is no sense in waiting until you have made an unholy mess of things. What we must do is to start right."

> Because a man knows more ways to make a fool of himself, he must not, therefore, conclude that he is wiser than a child.

>
> Help your boys and girls to think straight. Teach them to accept as perfectly natural the fact that they are better than some of the boys and girls they know about, just as you, their parents, are better than the fathers and mothers of those less fortunate boys and girls.

To this the doctor would nod his head in solemn agreement; the nurse would look mildly astonished; the parents would know not what to say.

"You must remember," baby would continue, "that I did not ask to come here. You did not even consult me. For all you know I did not want to come. I was doing very well where I was. But here I am and I want to know right now what you propose to do about it. You are both equally responsible for my presence in this strange land. You know the country; I don't. And so I shall hold you both equally responsible for whatever happens to me until I get used to things a little and can begin to find my way around alone."

The parents would look rather more than frightened by now. And I think baby would give them a little reassuring smile before continuing sternly:

"You see, I am an experiment, at best. And you certainly cannot, under the circumstances, expect me to insure the outcome. In a few years I may be able to help a little, but by that time my future will be more or less determined. So it is practically all up to you. And, between you and me, parents, nothing but the finest team work on your part can save this enterprise which you have undertaken from turning out a disastrous and humiliating failure."

I somehow suspect that this whole problem of child training is another one of those things about which the more we talk the less we know.

Because a man knows more ways to make a fool of himself, he must not, therefore, conclude that he is wiser than a child. A mother who assumes that her child is thoughtless thereby proves herself incapable of thinking. The fact is the average youngster will think all around the average oldster before the grown-up can get under way, and a child knows more in a minute about humanity than humanity knows about itself in a thousand years. To prove this watch with what unerring judgment babies choose their friends.

Honor that one whom children love; be on your guard against any person whom the children fear, and you will be right more often than if you depend upon Bradstreet or a church membership roll.

We hear much complaint these days about the younger generation's lack of respect for parental authority. But what about the respect which parents owe their children?

For several years now, I have felt that the admonition, "Honor thy father and thy mother"—as it is usually given, without the parallel admonitions to parents—takes too much for granted. It assumes, for instance, that all fathers and mothers are worthy of being honored. Well, you and I know that the most godless, bestial, vicious, criminal human creatures in existence do bring children into this world. How can such unfortunate children honor such parents, and why should they?

While we are on this subject, there is another Scripture which somehow seems to have escaped parental notice: "The children ought not to lay up for the parents but the parents for the children." Perhaps I should add that this was written by a childless old bachelor.

But there are some things about child training of which we may be fairly certain.

For instance, every child is different. Try as they may, with textbooks, conventions, and laws, our educators can never succeed in making them all alike. You see, the boys and girls simply can't help it. Their parents are all different, too.

Somewhere today the Napoleon of tomorrow is mobilizing his army of tin soldiers, or dragging his cannon across the nursery floor. And the time to capture these great war makers is very soon after they are born.

Somewhere tonight the Lincoln of the morning lisps his understanding of divinity. And the time to secure the best legislation is when our lawmakers are trying to "shee how ze w'eels g' wound."

Blessed is that man or woman who knows what to say to a child. It is better to be big enough to talk to children than little enough to preach to grown-ups.

Advice is depressing. Demonstration is catching. But one can never teach a child by showing it what not to do.

The doctors all agree that love is good medicine. It is a wonderful tonic and may be taken in many different ways. A boy usually likes his best with a little ginger in it. If he does not, be very careful of the case.

Most important of all, I think, is self-respect. Self-respect is the anchor of character. What one knows about one's self counts for much more than personal mention in the columns of the home-town paper. So long as self-respect holds one may ride out the wildest storm, but once let that anchor drag and shipwreck is certain.

As I have said before, this equality stuff is dangerous. When you say to your children, "You are no better than anyone else," look out! The growing youngsters will need a lot of the salt of common sense to save themselves from such rot.

Help your boys and girls to think straight. Teach them to accept as perfectly natural the fact that they are better than some of the boys and girls they know about, just as you, their parents, are better than the fathers and mothers of those less fortunate boys and girls. And then—why then, because they are better than some other children, and because Dad and Mom are better than some other fathers and mothers, "there are some things that we simply do not do. We do not do those things because we are not that kind of people. Of course we could do those things if we wanted to. But we don't want to because if we did we would be, in fact, no better than anyone else."

Oh, yes indeed, then you must bear down hard on the personal responsibility which goes with being better than some other people.

Exactly! This system will work only when father and mother are, in fact, better than some other fathers and mothers. It will not work at all when father and mother merely assume that they are better than other people. If you are not reasonably certain of this factor in your problem you must proceed with great caution.

However, if your team work was somewhere near 100 per cent before your first was born, you may be reasonably certain that you are a whole lot better than most parents.

You may be sure, too, that, given this starting chance, the other members of the growing family will do their share, and that father and mother and sons and daughters will more and more pull together as the years go by.

With this sort of teamwork the game is as good as won. Without it—well—games have been won by those who were forced to play a lone hand, but the odds against such a victory are heavy.

Gases in Warfare

Many efforts have been made in the past to use various gases—chiefly sulphur dioxide—in warfare. As early as 431 B. C. the Spartans, in besieging the cities of Belium and Platea, burned pitch and sulphur under the walls of these cities in order to break down their defense by suffocation of the troops of the cities.

Pocitively Last Word About Girl of Today

We knock and criticize her; we scold, apostrophize her, we wish that she was wiser, more dainty and refined; her path we're always stalking to criticize her talking, her clothes, her way of walking, her manners and her mind.

We say, "Oh, highty-tighty! she is frivolous and flighty and all her ways are mighty undignified to see; she joyrides, flirts and chatters, our old-time rules she shatters and laughs at serious matters with unabated glee!"

We chide and we correct her, we shadow and detect her, we study and dissect her with all her smiles and tears, and find on looking o'er her (and learning to adore her) she's just like girls before her for several thousand years.—Boston Transcript.

The Easiest Way to Keep in Style
By MAE MARTIN

No woman would wear dresses, or blouses, or stockings of a color that's decidedly out of style or faded, if all of us knew how easy it is to make things fresh, crisp and stylish by the quick magic of home tinting or dyeing.

Anybody can tint or dye successfully with true, fadeless Diamond Dyes. Tinting with them is as easy as bluing, and dyeing takes just a little longer. New, stylish colors appear like magic, right over the old, faded colors. Diamond Dyes never spot, streak or run. They are real dyes, like those used when the cloth was made. Insist on them and save disappointment.

My new 64-page illustrated book, "Color Craft," gives hundreds of money-saving hints for renewing clothes and draperies. It's Free. Write for it now, to Mae Martin, Dept. D-143, Diamond Dyes, Burlington, Vermont.

CORN PRODUCTS REFINING CO

This Doctor's advice to mothers is invaluable

He says

"Two tablespoonfuls of Karo in a glass of milk improves its flavor and doubles its food value."

"SERVE plenty of Karo to the kiddies", advises one of America's greatest Child specialists, "serve Karo especially to underweight children, in milk, on cereals, on sliced bread. Watch their weight increase!"

Karo gives muscular energy immediately—there's no tax on the digestive organs.

Karo contains 120 calories to the ounce—almost twice the energy value of eggs and lean meat, weight for weight.

Children naturally like Karo—its delicious sweetness and flavor satisfies their youthful craving for sweets.

To know that children like the food that's so good for them, a food that leading doctors highly endorse and recommend, is, indeed, good news to every mother.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Gerhard O. Hanson and Tina Hanson, his wife, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 21st day of May, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota on the 3rd day of June, 1926, at eleven o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 195 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Sixty-eight Dollars and seventy-five cents ($68.75), which became due and payable on the 21st day of November, 1927, and the 21st day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred Fifty-four Dollars and twenty-three cents ($2,154.23), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 21st day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and One Hundred Thirty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($137.50) amortized principal and interest; with interest on $68.75 thereof from November 21st, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $68.75 thereof from May 21st, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Two Thousand Three Hundred Fifty-three Dollars and forty-five cents ($2,353.45);

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

The Northeast Quarter (NE¼) of Section Seven (7), in Township One Hundred Fifty-eight (158) North, of Range Forty-two (42) west,

with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the West front door of the Court House in the City of Warren, in said County and State, on the 29th day of December, 1928, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the debt then due on said mortgage, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the costs and expenses allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Mother's Vigil

HERE and there throughout the land tonight many a mother will keep faithful vigil over some sick child. Heavy-eyed and weary she will minister as only a mother can.

At the push of a button electricity will light the tiny face, heat the water, warm the food, prepare the medicine. These are services the value of which is known only to mothers.

We are glad and proud to be of some small help where anxious mothers watch and serve.

Big Carnival

The Holt High School is putting on a big carnival at the school house here tomorrow evening (Saturday) Nov. 24th, at 8 o'clock sharp. There will be about ten booths in the building where they will sell balloons and articles with which you can have fun. One of the booths has a Powerful Imported German Telescope. It magnifies 88 times and will be pointed at the moon.

On Tuesday, Nov. 27th there will be a total eclipse of the "near neighbor" and a look through the "scope" should show some interesting features of the moon on Saturday night.

There will be other very interesting exhibits, and also a Japanese Tea room for the refreshments.

P. L. Anderson, who has held the job as buttermaker at the local creamery the past nineteen years has resigned his position here to become field man for a string of creameries in the 14th district, with headquarters at Crookston.

Hans Wallin of Oklee will be the new manager at the local creamery.

M. O. Mattson of Crookston was here on business Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Sandberg, Walter Sandberg and Herrbert Johnson arrived here Tuesday from Pontiac, Mich., for a visit with relatives.

Ole Ellingson is the owner of the first new Ford sedan here. He bought his last week.

O. F. Sovde and family visited with relatives at Greenbush Sunday.

P. L. Anderson and family visited at the S. E. Reierson home in Karlstad Sunday.

Obituary

Mrs. Helen Grondahl was born in Osterdahl, Norway in the month of May 1851. Her maiden name was Helen Christianson. She was baptized by Rev. Balken and confirmed by the same minister in Norway.

On May 30th 1882 she was united in marriage with Magnus Grondahl. For a few years the family remained in Norway but for want of better prospects they immigrated to America on May 7 1886. In this country they have lived for 36 years. The first place which the family called home in this country was in Alexandria, Minn., where they lived one year. They then moved to the vicinity of Fargo. Here they lived for five years after which they moved to Holt where they have remained ever since.

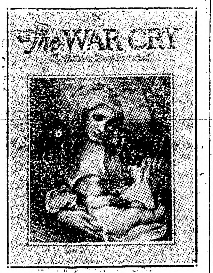
Mrs. Grondahl has been ailing for some time and was finaly released thru death.

Thefore we cannot have any other hope that death was a welcome thing to her, a thing she longed for above all earthly possessions.

She leaves to mourn her loss her husband and four children, Martin, Henry, Oliver and Mrs. McCullough of Fargo. She also leaves three sisters, one in Norway and two in this country, Mrs. Ole Davidson of Holt and Mrs. Ostby of Fargo.

The mourners have lost a true and sincere mother a faithful wife and a sister who has been more then a companion.

The Salvation Army Xmas War Cry Coming



Next week the Salvation Army from Thief River Falls will bring you the best Christmas War Cry in the history of their journalism. Beautiful art covers printed in five colors, the front picture is of the Madonna, have been secured from originals by famous masters. These pictures are so laid out that they can be framed. Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXXXV

GOOD FEEDING PROFITABLE; Notice the most successful farmers and you will find as a general rule that they feed all their stock liberally and well. The old masters who built up new breeds or improved breeds were first good feeders. No animal can respond well until it is fed well and then it is the best animals that show the best results.

Animals conform to their feed. Under nature's conditions animals are large where there is an abundace of feed and they are small where feed is scarce. A large milk and butterfal production, from six to twelve thousand pounds of milk a year and from three to four and five hundred pounds of butterfat, can be produced only by cows that are heavily fed and with the right kind of feed. Heifers that are to grow into large cows and develop for large production must be well fed from their birth.

But it was Stella in very truth—not the Bob that he had traveled with and fought with and lived with for ages in the thirty hours that had elapsed since he had first met her in the living room at the J/B ranch. Gone was the rough clothing, the broad-brimmed sombrero, the high boots, the belt and revolver; gone in fact was everything that had distinguished the Bob whom he had known, everything except the smooth sun-burned cheeks, the appealing eyes, the curly hair. By some magic the slim short boy had become a slim, tall girl.

But Go Ahead knew her. Not for an instant did he bother over strange resemblances and all such stock-in-trade foolishness. He knew her beneath a hundred disguises he would have known her. "Bob!" he cried flinging off his hat. And again "Bob!"

And with the going of his hat Stella knew him. "Go Ahead!" she gasped. Then abruptly her color faded and she crumpled down.

Go Ahead dropped his gun and caught her as she fell. He forgot all about Barker. But Barker did not forget him. He sprang to his feet, and put his hands on the table to jump over it.

But he did not jump; Caesar had jumped, too, and had snatched up Go Ahead's pistol as it fell.

"Hol' on there, white man!" he gasped. "Hol' on there. You jes' stay where you is till Mr. George gits ready to receive congratulations. You hear me?"

And Barker stayed. Stella opened her eyes, and Go Ahead looked up. "Pretty near, Barker," he commented. "Pretty near. But not quite. Just about two jumps behind, as usual."

Then Go Ahead looked at Caesar. "Thank you, old man," he said. "You doggoned old skeesicks, you!"

"You's welcome, Mr. George, suh. You's welcome. I jes' natu'ly had to butt in, suh. Couldn't no ornery white trash pusson disturb yo' love makin', suh."

"Good enough!" Go Ahead reached out and took the revolver from Caesar's uncertain fingers. "Now you sit down, Caesar, and get all the rest you can," he ordered. "You'll need it. We're going to get out of here. . . . Bob, dear, will you see how many horses are outside?"

Go Ahead knew perfectly well how many horses were there, but he wanted to give Stella something to do. She was still shaking from head to foot.

But his request brought her to her feet instantly. To the door she stepped. "Five, Go-ey," she said. "One of them has a man tied to it. Oh, I thought it was you!"

"It was—once," Go Ahead grinned. "But that little knife of yours did the trick. It made a bully spur to bring on a fit of buckjumping, and it cut the ropes enough for the bronc to throw me off; and it finished the job on the ropes before unsuspicious Tony came back to put them up—and then took my place—after we had traded clothes."

Stella did not speak, but her eyes were adoring.

Go Ahead blushed beneath them. "Oh, yes, the horses!" he muttered. "Well, we won't need but four. Think you can hang on to one of them, Caesar?"

"Yessuh! Sure can."

Go Ahead shifted his gaze to Barker. "Now, Barker," he said, "you're going to escort us out of this valley, past the machine guns and all. And you're going to do it without—"

"Wait!" Stella broke in. "Make him do it pleasantly, Go-ey," she begged. "He threatened to kill you if I didn't marry him in your presence, pleasantly." Stella's intonation was somewhat vixenish.

"—You're going to do it pleasantly, Barker," amended Go Ahead. "In return I'll set you free as soon as it's entirely safe to do it; and I won't report on your—er—activities, until—well, say until I find somebody to report them to. Now! Let's go. And heaven help you if you make any trouble on the way out."

Barker made no trouble. The promise of freedom, however qualified, plucked him out of the pit of despair. He was not pleasant as he rode by Go Ahead's side out of the valley; he could not be pleasant. But he tried hard to be, and neither the groups of bandits who scowled at the party as it passed nor the machine gun sentinels by the waterfall passage questioned his friendliness, and none of them were quite ready to try to stop him from going.

After he and the other three had passed out of sight some of the men began to mutter that he was walking off with the girl to obtain whom he had brought them into all this trouble, and was leaving them to hold the bag. But they were not sure of their ground, no immediate peril seemed to threaten them, and they had no leaders; as a result, the suggestion that they go after him and bring him and his companions back fell to the ground.

A mile south of the waterfall Go Ahead halted. He had noticed sundry dust trails rising along the horizon.

"Barker" he said, "I'll keep my promise. It's entirely safe to set you free now, so I'll do it. Beat it!"

And Barker beat it, promptly, without an instant's hesitation.

The three stood looking after him with curious expressions, no two alike, on their faces. And at last Stella spoke.

"Are—are you quite sure you are right in letting him go, Go-ey?" she asked, hesitatingly.

"Quite. . . . Not that I think he'll go very far. See those dust trails there—and there—and there?" He pointed. "That's Uncle Sam's cavalry. The flying men spotted Robbers' Roost from an airplane day before yesterday, and the troops are closing in all around. Barker may get out of the ring, but I don't think he will. He'll probably be forced back to the Roost; and from what I heard the men say after I traded places with Antonio it's dollars to doughnuts that they'll hang him the minute they know they're trapped."

"And if he gets out?"

"He won't get very far even then. He's too well-known. No, it's good-by to Sheriff Barker."

Stella's eyes clouded. "It—it—was good-night for poor dad, too," she breathed. "He's dead. Did you know it?"

"Yes. Wade shot him last night. I heard the men saying so. They wanted him back when it was too late. But, believe me, Bob, dear, it has all turned out as he would have chosen. He would have taken death rather than the alternatives."

Several hours later, as the tired horses plodded into Mustin, Go Ahead turned to Stella. "Bob, dear," he asked, "what time does the train for the East go through?"

"Why, in—in about an hour. I thought I told you."

"You did. And I was just thinking that an hour was just about long enough to get married. You know I love you, Bob?"

"And I love you, too, Go Ahead. But—but I'm a—a—criminal. I've rob—"

"Forget it, Bob, dear."

"Oh, don't I want to forget it! Don't I want to forget it! And I want to marry you, but—but I won't unless—unless you take all that money that I inherited and that Barker wanted to marry me to get. You will take it, won't you, Go-ey?"

Go Ahead smiled. "I'll do whatever you want me to do, Bob," he said. "But—well, there's the county clerk's office in the courthouse where we can get a license; and there's the church and parsonage alongside it; and if we want to catch that train we've got no time to spare. So—"

But as they got on the train three-quarters of an hour later, Go Ahead was wondering uneasily how he was ever going to tell Bob that it was another girl altogether who had inherited that fortune and that she herself had nothing. "She shall never know it if I can prevent it," he decided at last.

[THE END]

Elephant's Locomotion

An elephant's pace, when exceeding a walk, is neither a trot nor a gallop, but a sort of shuffle, the speed of which is increased or diminished without change of gait.

Great Actress' Prank

Sarah Bernhardt, generally credited with never having laughed or joked while on the stage, is said to have played a prank on an actress, presumably Mrs. Patrick Campbell, in retaliation for a joke the latter had played on her. There was a scene wherein she had to grasp the hands of Mrs. Campbell to help her over the rock. The astonished Mrs. Campbell [illegible] that the [illegible] ine Sar[illegible] and left it [illegible] hands but went on with the scene as if nothing had happened.

Famous English Region

The Lake district in England is a picturesque region of mountain, lake, wood and valley in the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland. It has been immortalized by the lake school of poets and is visited annually by thousands of tourists.

Divorce is an epitaph frequently carved upon love's tombstone.

SELLS WATCHES WITHOUT WORKS

Street Vendor Finds No One Returns to Yell.

New York.—The watch vendor in City Hall park has a sincere and straightforward air.

"Folks," he says to the group clustering about him, "these are German silver watches and good timekeepers. Nothing fancy about 'em—they're just serviceable, dependable timepieces for people who don't want to spend a lot of money for a watch.

"They cost $2 or $3 at a jewelry store. I'm selling these today for a quarter apiece. If you're suspicious of them don't buy one. Maybe you'll feel better if you go to a jeweler and pay several times as much for the same thing.

"These don't look flashy—they're made to give good service. I carry one myself. Thank you, sir. Thank you. Who else wants one? Thanks. Thank you. Two? Certainly. Thank you, sir."

And so he moves slowly along the square, always in the center of a group of customers—office employees from nearby buildings, errand boys from Wall street, casual passersby.

His twenty-five cent watches have no works in them. The case is all in one piece and does not open. The minute and hour hands move jerkily and uncertainly at a twist of the stem, but the second hand is painted on the face of the watch.

Occasionally the salesman holds one of his bogus watches up to the ear of a bystander to let him hear its tick for himself. Of course, nobody could hear a watch tick on lower Broadway, and the device usually works. And patrons, forewarned not to buy if they doubt the worth of the article, never return to complain after they have inspected their prize and found themselves bilked.

The fraud is one of the oldest known to the sidewalks of New York, but in five minutes the salesman took in twenty-three quarters—an average of better than a dollar a minute. Despite all of which, item A in the New Yorker's credo is that gullibility is an attribute monopolized by the outlander, and that the gold brick is an emblem which appeals only to the stranger within the city's gates.

Napoleonic Art Loot to Be Sold in America

Paris.—Napoleonic loot, old paintings taken from captured towns in Belgium and Holland, are being sent to the United States for sale.

These pictures, forty-eight of them, were part of the collection of General Haquin, once aide-de-camp of the emperor and commander of one of his armies. He was "fired" because he refused to execute all the terroristic orders his superiors thought necessary to cow the populations of conquered towns.

For a century the pictures remained in the Haquin family, but were sold last year by the general's grandniece, Mme. Giovanoni, and have just been bought by the Master's Art gallery of New York.

They have been valued at $1,000,000 by a group of experts, including Dr. W. N. Rakint, Petrograd, Desparmet Fitz-Gerald, the Spanish art authority, and Henri Gervex, one of the French government's appraisers.

Dahlia Juice Supplies a New Kind of Sugar

Washington.—Discovery of a new sugar in the juice of dahlia tubers is announced by the United States bureau of standards.

It was discovered during tests to find out the structure of inulin, which is a starchlike substance found in the dahlia juice. About 92 per cent of this juice was resolved into the already known sugar called levulose or fructose, but the remaining 8 per cent was a mystery.

This residual substance was subjected while in sirup form to a light polarization test. Fructose when given a similar test rotates the polarized light to the left, but this unknown sirup rotated it to the right. Other tests reduced it to crystalline form, which the announcement says is a sugar that has "never hitherto been isolated."

Berlin Ranks in Area Next to Los Angeles

Berlin, Germany.—With a speed equaling that of any booming western city in America, Berlin has become the second largest city in the world territorially, today covering an area of 37,810 hectars, or 216,891 acres, according to the Berlin statistical bureau. It is only exceeded in size by Los Angeles, while London, with its 7,500,000 inhabitants, is only half as large, and Paris, with a population of 3,000,000, only one-tenth the size.

Attacked by Bunnies Is Hunter's Defense

Racine, Wis.—A young hunter who killed six rabbits before the season for such activities was open, was brought before officials here. The defendant persistently reiterated, "They attacked me. I shot in self-defense." Lawyers have been unable to penetrate this defense since there were no witnesses to the murderous assault.

NIGHT LAW SCHOOL ATTORNEY'S HOBBY

Helps Stenographers and Clerks to Legal Degrees.

Okmulgee, Okla.—A law school which holds classes at night, so clerks, stenographers and others who must earn a livlihood during the day may satisfy an ambition to become lawyers, is run as a hobby by W. L. Merwine, Okmulgee attorney.

Merwine, too, must work in the day, as he is dependent on his professional practice. The law school, he says, is his contribution to his city.

Merwine is dean of the school and the students are its officers. Several members of the Okmulgee bar help the enterprise by teaching subjects with which they are most familiar. The classes meet in the basement of the city library.

Twenty-six graduates have taken the state bar examination and only one of them has failed. Miss Jewell Russell of Tulsa, who last spring received the highest grades in the Oklahoma bar tests, began the study of law under Dean Merwine.

Does Not Seek Students.

The Okmulgee school does not seek students. Persons in other states and in other Oklahoma cities have asked whether they may enroll, but the dean has advised them to go elsewhere if possible, explaining the institution is intended for Okmulgee men and women who must work.

The school had its beginning several years ago, when three young men, employed in an abstractor's office, asked Merwine whether he would devote a small amount of his time to instructing them in law.

The school was incorporated in 1926 and the students divided into senior and junior classes. Since then a score or more of ambitious young men and women have attended the night meetings.

Laggards Drop Out.

"The students enroll because they have a real desire to learn," Merwine says. "A person in the class who does not apply himself soon finds his surroundings uncomfortable and somewhat in shame drops out. For those willing to work, however, there is the utmost co-operation."

To meet expenses the school charges tuition of $50 a year, but this is assessed at the convenience of the students, some paying in monthly installments and others waiting until graduation.

Dean Merwine was born in Ohio in 1861. He worked his way through Ohio Northern university at Ada and later practiced law at Columbus in partnership with Charles W. Allison, a first cousin of President McKinley.

New Mesa Verde Coal Produces Much Wax

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Over three gallons of wax has been extracted from one ton of Utah coal in the United States bureau of mines laboratory here.

The wax is essentially the ordinarily known stuff used in candles. The coal yielding the wax is Mesa Verde, one of the least-known in the United States and one of the most recent, that is, coal which was formed in geological times that are recent as compared with eastern coals.

The bureau of mines first extracted the tar from the Utah coal, getting about thirty-two gallons from a ton, and then from the tar obtained 11 per cent of wax. In announcing the research the bureau says: "It is suggested that the high wax content of tars of this sort might be directly exploited to yield an important increase in by-products with very little preliminary development work."

Spider Is Called a Harmless Fellow

Gainesville, Fla.—C. B. Merrill, assistant entomologist of the Florida state plant board, can't understand why people think spiders are poisonous.

Maybe it's because they look that way.

Anyhow, they're wrong. Merrill says those familiar with the facts know the only spider considered dangerous is the half-inch long, jet black fellow with a reddish mark shaped like an hour glass on the under side of his abdomen. He may have a lot of other tricks, too, if anyone wants to stop long enough to see. His home is outdoors, usually under loosely piled boards or firewood.

Plan to Utilize Power From River Shannon

Dublin, Ireland.—Where the River Shannon flows Ireland has launched a scheme to develop electrical power. The Free State government financed a project costing $25,000,000, and is attempting to enlist public support by inviting every one to visit the scene of construction work.

Within a period of several months 60,000 persons have made the trip and been shown through the plant by government guides. The Free State is the smallest consumer of electricity in Europe and the authorities are anxious to arouse public interest and a demand for better facilities.

Winning Smile

Malden, Mass.—Thomas J. Garrity, letter carrier, has received a $1,000 check. For 40 years he has delivered mail to Mrs. Bessie L. Eaton. "He is a fine man who daily greeted me with a smile and a word of cheer," she said, explaining her gift.

ZOO IS HOBBY OF BULGARIAN KING

Boris Collects Animals From All Parts of World.

Sofia, Bulgaria.—Among royal hobbies of European monarchs the zoological garden of King Boris attracts particular interest because of its value as a national acquisition, as well as a means of amusement for the king.

Like his father, King Ferdinand, King Boris is an enthusiastic student of natural science, and has continued the work started by his father, the founder of the royal zoological garden of Sofia, until it has become one of the finest in Europe.

Rare specimens of animals from all parts of the world have been collected for the king's zoo, and Boris is constantly sending representatives to different quarters of the globe to gather additions to his collection.

The zoo, although belonging to and maintained by the king, is open to the public. It is in every respect modernized and adapted for the acclimatization of the animals brought to it. Three hundred species of animal are now in the zoo, comprising more than 1,800 specimens, among them lions from Abyssinia and Senegal, Indian elephants, zebras from Rhodesia, American bisons, Tibetan jackals and llamas, African leopards and many other mammals, as well as a fine collection of birds and fish.

The king himself has hunted many of the animals and birds for the zoo. Only a few years ago he found in the mountains of Bulgaria some beautiful specimens of the rare bearded eagle, which he captured. The Royal zoological garden here now boasts the only pair of mates of the bearded eagle in captivity.

The zoological garden which he founded continues to be the chief interest of his son.

Population of China Stationary 200 Years

Peking.—Gen. Ho Chi-kung, the Nationalist mayor of Peking, has launched a campaign to increase China's birthrate. He was indignant at the discovery that China's population had remained stationary at 400,000,000 for more than 200 years.

Mayor Ho, a Chinese scholar, about thirty years old, says that, according to a census taken in the days of Emperor Chien Lung, there were 400,000,000 Chinese then. Though more than two centuries have passed, yet China's population is still recorded at 400,000,000, while the populations of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, Russia, Germany and France have shown remarkable increases.

The mayor attributes this partly to the backward state of Chinese medical science, which has permitted a high mortality rate to develop among the poorer class.

England Moves Five Meters in 300 Years

Paris.—That the distance between England and France has increased five meters during the last 300 years is one of the possible deductions from new longitude reckonings made public by the Paris observatory.

The longitude between Paris and Greenwich taken in the reign of Louis XIV in the Seventeenth century was 9 minutes 20 seconds and 93 hundredths of a second. The new measurements reveal a difference of two hundredths of a second, which reduced to linear measurement is five meters or about five yards and a half.

Scientists point out that the difference may be due to the greater accuracy of modern instruments. On the other hand, it may also be due to the generally accepted theory of the movements of the continents.

The World Moves

New York.—George M. Bistany, hunter, is going to Africa with the firm intention of not returning until he can bring a white rhinoceros alive from the Sudan. It has never been done yet.

Tackles Big Job

Mexico City.—Antonio Rios Zertuche, inspector general, has instituted a reform in the police department. For years policemen carried oil lanterns. Now they have pocket flashlights.

133 Americans Take Citizenship in Mexico

Mexico City.—In the last twenty years 133 Americans have given up their United States citizenship to become naturalized Mexicans.

The Americans occupy sixth place in the list of foreigners who have taken out Mexican citizenship papers in the period mentioned. Chinese to the number of 1,147 became Mexicans, as did 623 Spaniards, 179 Syrians, 176 Germans and 150 Japanese.

A total of only 3,262 persons became naturalized Mexicans in this time. Blame for the reduced figure is placed at the doors of unstable internal conditions and what is termed an antiquated, over-severe naturalization law. The government now is at work on a new and more lenient law.

LAUNDRESS BENEFITED

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Nashville, Tenn.—"I cannot say too much in favor of the medicine. I was in a run-down condition. I worked in a laundry but my health got so bad that I had to give up work. I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and began taking it and every time I feel run-down I get another bottle. It is an excellent tonic and I am willing to tell others about it. People take me to be much younger than I am."—Mrs. Harry Bornstein, 406 Second Ave. South, Nashville, Tennessee.

Between You and Me

"Common sense is the most uncommon kind of sense."

By HAROLD BELL WRIGHT

Boosting and Boosters

"There ain't nothin' livin' in the woods what can make more fuss than a blue jay—an' there ain't nothin' that anybody ever heard tell a blue jay was good for—'cept to trim wimmen's bonnets, maybe."—Preachin' Bill.

YES, of course, one should always put one's best foot foremost. At the same time, when one essays a good long step ahead, one should be reasonably sure that one's hind foot is not stuck fast in the mud.

But speaking of boosters: There are several varieties of the genius hot-airacus.

One of the most common is the kind that perches on the corral fence and flaps its wings and crows from sunup till sundown. Nobody knows exactly what all the commotion is about; nobody cares, except that it is annoying. We suspect that somebody has laid an egg or something, but we are dead sure that the bird making all the noise didn't. Perhaps some neighboring rooster may have remarked that their corral is larger than ours. Indeed, the noisy one, himself, doesn't appear to know exactly the reason for his excitement. He seems to have started his mouth to talking and then gone away and left it.

The most detestable of the boosting breed are the professionals. They are enthusiasm prostitutes selling themselves to every stranger who is unwise enough to fall for their charms.

One of these creatures lands in a community just before noon—in time to get himself invited to the Rotary, Kiwanis, Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday club luncheon; and before the chamber of commerce banquet that evening he has sold the town to itself. In its delirium the town expresses its gratitude to the booster by delivering itself without reservation into his hands.

When the dust has settled the professional is well on his way to fresh fields. The citizens sober up to find themselves exactly where they were before, minus the expense of their boosting debauch.

Very different is the good citizen who honestly believes that his hometown has peculiar advantages, who sincerely loves his neighbors because he thinks they are the finest people in the world, and who, out of a full heart, wants others to share the community blessings which he so enjoys.

Such a booster is a delight and a simon pure asset to any community—providing—oh yes, providing, our boosting friend does not permit every butcher and baker and candlestick maker to use him and his unselfish enthusiasm to boost their individual and wholly selfish interests.

Many a wily old town spider sits back out of sight and unostentatiously urges these community interest heroes on, while it never occurs to the loyal boosters that all they are doing is to boost silly flies into the spider's carefully spread net.

The slogan of the booster: "Put up your hammer and get a horn," aptly epitomizes the down-to-date philosophy of boosting. It seems never to have occurred to these vociferating pests that the hammer is mainly a tool for building and that horns are mostly toys with which thoughtless and irresponsible children make a distracting racket.

Suppose we think a few thinks and see if we do not find that all glittering talk is not golden; and that, in fact, golden talk very seldom glitters.

Oratory often goes "blah" for the simple reason that it is "blah." Talk is disgustingly cheap when there is nothing to back it. I have never heard that a barnyard full of cackles ever raised the price of eggs.

Between you and me, many a high-chested rooster who can crow right lustily at a chamber of commerce banquet, contributes next to nothing toward the community omelette.

And the only argument ever advanced for all this extravagant and ridiculous community boosting is that there is money in it for everybody.

I agree that there may be money in it for some. But I contend if the money spent annually by the average boosting community for that type of boosting which convinces only credulous fools, were spent in substantial and genuine community improvements, the harvest would be abundant for all.

True, the harvest might not be in actual dollars that could be deposited in a bank. But there are community interests you know, which, while not directly bankable, are beyond price.

No, I am not so impractical as to ignore the universal need of bankable dollars. Bankable dollars are a great comfort—I wish I could make myself more comfortable!

The Teacher says, "The love of money is the root of all evil." It is just as true that a desire for money may be rooted in a sincere purpose to accomplish a great good.

But those mistaken saints who hold that we ought not to think of money, need not worry. We don't think about it, and therein lies two-thirds of our financial troubles. If we could only be persuaded to really think about money, money would not worry us much.

Money is of value not because it is money, but because it stands for all that is dearest and best in life. That it stands also for all that is debasing and damning makes no difference.

And so the great question of the age is not what you are, but what is your income? The great problem of life is not why are we here, but how can we manage to stay here? The great fear of our existence is not fear of death, but fear of notice from the bank that we have overdrawn. The fight to pay our bills, and the dread of the deadly deficit—these are the nightmares that keep us awake.

The red-ink tragedy is a very real tragedy—a tragedy in which most of us at one time or another have been forced to play a part. But chin music alone will never draw a large flock of dollars to your box office.

Too often we study our financial problems from the one standpoint of how to get money. At this date it appears that the shortest way out of our difficulties is to learn how to spend the money we do get. If a restaurant keeper were to invest all his capital in flowers to decorate his tables, his bill of fare would not attract a hungry crowd with cash to spend.

Most of us who go broke get that way by spending not wisely but too well.

Certainly, I know the old saying: "Doing business without advertising is like winking at your girl in the dark. You may know what you are doing but no one else will."

But advertising is not simply making any old thing sound attractive. Those leaders who rank high in business intelligence discovered long ago that the advertising which is 90 per cent lie is less than 10 per cent effective.

The salesman who is long on gab and short on truth loses more business than he gains. The selling talk that is based on a policy of hit-and-run rarely scores a second time on the same customer. The hook that is baited with guff lands only minnows. The fish are only attracted by more substantial bait. No hunter ever yet bagged big game with a blow-gun.

Once, when I was a boy, I worked in a store. And the boss explained to me that any fool could sell a customer something the customer wanted, but that it took a salesman to sell a person something the person did not want.

I am older now. And my years of painfully acquired experience, together with a habit of observation, have taught me that the one who sells a person that which the person does not want is the real fool.

In my young man days I had a friend who had a curious complex. He would rather acquire a silver dollar for which he gave nothing, than to gain a five dollar bill for which he had rendered five dollars' worth of service. He seemed to feel that to give nothing for something was a mark of superior intelligence. He was never so happy and proud as when he had just, as he said, "gypped" somebody.

Well, I have watched that man's progress through all the best years of his life and I never knew the time when he was not dependent, in one way or another, upon friends or relatives. He is practically a beggar today, existing on charity. No one will trust him for a meal. He is forced to sponge even his cigarettes. All of which would be torture to a self-respecting person; but, of course, self-respect long ago ceased to count for anything to this miserable failure.

And this man was the most convincing booster I ever heard. To him boosting was a fine art. He could, would, and did boost anything for anybody, at any time.

Of course it was often best for him to be somewhere else when the sticks of his skyrockets began to come down!

All his life, you see, this man has tried to do business on the plan of talking people into giving something for nothing. In the end he has for all his efforts—nothing.

Some say that a knock is a boost. Perhaps—But I am still of the opinion that if we could knock some of these reckless, unprincipled, shameless nineteen twenty-eight variety of boosters dead, we would all do a better business.

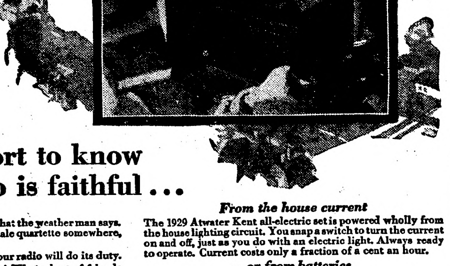
ATWATER KENT RADIO

MODEL 40
ELECTRIC, $77
For 110-120 volt, 50-60 cycle alternating current. Requires six A. C. tubes and one rectifying tube, $77 (without tubes). Also Model 42 with automatic voltage regulator, $86, and Model 44, an extra-powerful "distance" set, $106 (without tubes).
For direct current, Model 41, $87 (without tubes).



What a comfort to know your radio is faithful . . .

"MARY, turn on the radio and see what the weather man says. Then let's see if there isn't a good male quartette somewhere, or a brass band—"

What a satisfaction it is to know your radio will do its duty.

Good, reliable Atwater Kent Radio! What a host of friends its dependability has made! "You can always count on an Atwater Kent"—wherever radio is known, that's what they say.

BATTERY SETS, $49 . $68
Solid mahogany cabinets. Panels satin-finished in gold. Model 48, $49; Model 49, extra-powerful, $68. Prices do not include tubes or batteries.

This quality of steadfastness is built in, and doubly assured by 222 factory tests or inspections. Hence the common remark, "If Atwater Kent makes it, it's right."

From the house current
The 1929 Atwater Kent all-electric set is powered wholly from the house lighting circuit. You snap a switch to turn the current on and off, just as you do with an electric light. Always ready to operate. Current costs only a fraction of a cent an hour.

—or from batteries
The 1929 battery set also has clear tone, selectivity, great range and plenty of volume, plus beauty and compactness.

—at a money-saving price
You cannot buy the all-round satisfaction that Atwater Kent Radio gives, for less than the figures quoted here. You can pay a great deal more without getting more.

Too Late.

Earl Carroll, the New York producer released from Atlanta, where he had been imprisoned for violating the prohibition law, said sadly in an interview:

"Experience, some one has remarked, is a hairbrush given us by Providence after we have lost our hair.

"How true that is! Let me illustrate it in another way.

"'How,' a lady asked her grocer, 'do I open this tin of plum pudding?'

"'Directions inside, ma'am,' said the grocer."

Opportunity does a great deal that ability gets the credit for.

Society and Solitude.

Unthinking heads who have not learnt to be alone are a prison to themselves if they be not with others; whereas, on the contrary, those whose thoughts are in a flair and hurry within, are sometimes fain to retire into company to be out of the crowd of themselves.—Sir Thomas Browne.

cleated tires that grip like a cleated shoe

CHAINS this winter? NO! Yet, safety all the time—not just when chains are on! And quietness all the time—not just when chains are off!

Cleated tires are the tire industry's answer to winter's most annoying problem. What an innovation!

The picture tells the story. Cleated tires . . . grip wet roads . . . bite into snow . . . are sure-footed in slush and mud . . . respond effectively to the demands of four-wheel brakes.

AND THEN, after the trying conditions of winter have worn down the cleats, comes into play the standard long mileage Dunlop non-skid balloon tread . . . ready when spring comes to take over the changed road demands brought about by the difference between winter and spring road conditions.

The winter mileage provided by the cleats themselves is entirely additional to the standard tread mileage.

Dunlop considers this winterized tire one of the greatest of its many inventions for the safety and comfort of motorists.

THINGS WORTH WHILE

WHEN one can purchase veal hearts and serve them sliced and fried in butter, they make a delectable dish. Another way is:

Veal Hearts en Casserole.

Fry four slices of bacon to a crisp, remove from the frying pan and add a small sliced onion. Trim and clean four veal hearts, slice them, roll in seasoned flour and fry them in the fat. Place the hearts in a hot casserole, add to the fat in the pan one cupful of vegetable water, meat stock or plain water, a minced pimento, a teaspoonful of salt, and half a bayleaf. Pour the mixture over the hearts and cook two hours. Five minutes before serving add the bacon.

Beef Steak a la Henriette.

Wipe a porterhouse steak, cut one and one-half inches in thickness, broil eight minutes, turning frequently. Pour one-half of the sauce on a hot platter, lay in the steak, cover with the remaining sauce and garnish with parsley and grated horseradish.

Sauce Henriette.

Wash one-half cupful of butter and divide into three parts. Put one piece in a saucepan with the yolks of three eggs slightly beaten and mixed with one-half tablespoonful of lemon juice and one tablespoonful of water. Set the saucepan into another of hot water and cook over the heat, stirring constantly until the butter is melted. Add a second piece of butter and when melted, the third piece, then add two tablespoonfuls of tomato puree, one tablespoonful of worcestershire sauce, one-half tablespoonful of minced parsley, one-half teaspoonful of salt and a dash of cayenne. This sauce should be perfectly smooth and of the consistency of boiled custard.

SUPERSTITIOUS SUE

SHE HAS HEARD THAT—

In Scotland, lovers would each place a nut on the fireplace.

If they burned peacefully, all to the merry, two happy hearts would then beat as one—but if one or both of the nuts should crack and jump away, oh sniffles and tear drops—any hopes for an unpunctured courtship may well be abandoned.

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake

OBJECTIVES

THE general who maneuvered his army so as to obtain general results would win few battles and gain little glory.

You remember that all the war dispatches dealt with objectives.

Some of them were attained and some were not.

But no important action was ever won without one.

In 1808, when two nations were at war, the admiral of one fleet was instructed to "capture or destroy" the vessels of the enemy.

He sailed on his mission knowing exactly what he had to do.

He planned not to cripple the enemy merely, or chase it from the port it was holding, but "to capture or destroy it." He destroyed part of it and captured the rest. He had accomplished his objective.

In the long, uncertain fight we call life, we are lost and hopeless without some more or less definite objective.

In the beginning few people are sure of what they want to do, or what they hope to do.

But the sooner they can be sure, the more likely they are to succeed. That is why a very decided taste for some particular occupation is a great advantage. But most people have no decided tastes, and must make up their minds as soon as possible where they want to go.

After that traveling arrangements can be made more definitely.

As civilization advances competition becomes keener, and success requires a great struggle.

The equipment of education is not as much of a help as it used to be, for there are more educated people in the world—more people who are specially trained for some definite calling.

So a fixed objective is more necessary than ever.

* * * * * * *

Thomas Edison, who recently attained his eightieth year, began life as a telegraph operator. He had worked at this calling but a little while before he became convinced that the possibilities of the mysterious current that carried messages were far greater than anyone supposed.

To develop these became his objective, and he not only attained it himself, but what was far more important he inspired thousands of other men to think about electricity and what it could do in harness, with the result that many inventions have been made which he never might have made himself.

It was early in life that Henry Ford determined to make an automobile which would be within the reach of people of modest circumstances. He devoted his entire life to that object. The fact that he made a billion doing it is incidental with him, for he is a man who needs but little money to enjoy life.

The work he did has been a far greater benefaction to the human race than would be the gift of all the money he has made.

Henry Fords and Thomas Edisons are not plentiful in the world, but there are few people who could not succeed to a greater extent than they do if they would decide on an objective and stubbornly work to gain it.

CHANCE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE PLOT and plan, design and dream,
And many a man has many a scheme,
And many a vision many a woman.
We regulate the future years,
Forgetting, as each dawn appears,
That men and women are only human.
And then we meet some speeder riding,
Visions and plans and dreams deciding.

So many a farmer counts the yield
Even before he sows the field,
Measures the wheat and weighs the clover;
Yes, here he'll put the corn away,
And here aloft will store the hay,
And here the fruit when summer's over.
He counts the lambs within the fold,
And counts too long, and catches cold.

We dream, design, and plan, and plot,
And this we'll have, and this we'll not,
And here we stand, and there we wander.
We answer everything we ask,
Whether it be a truth, a task,
Or some tomorrow that we ponder.
And then we meet a maid on Monday
We hadn't heard about on Sunday.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

WHEN WINTER COMES

THE man who is easily discouraged, who is not willing to dig, rake, sow the seed and wait for the sun and the rain to produce results, will be very unhappy when the winter comes.

And so will be the woman with restless personal ambitions which lure her from her hearthstone and her home mates.

In youth, neither the man nor the woman thinks this is so, but as the years go by, there comes a change in thought and ideal.

There comes to both a rude awakening that there is something deplorable in their condition which cannot be overcome.

They neglected opportunities and fell into corrupting habits.

They refused to lay hold of the forces of the universe and become strong with them.

They sought friends and position and found them not.

They chased shadows across lots and fell into the mire while the golden years of life were all about them, offering untold treasures.

Take thought, young man or woman, of what you want to do, and proceed in a straight line towards its accomplishment. To begin to think rightly is to begin to create.

Picture in your mind the useful person you desire to be in five or ten years from now. Such thoughts if embraced regularly will transform you into that particular individual.

Preserve a right mental attitude towards yourself and your associates.

Be industrious, courageous and sincere. Be cheerful without being silly; be strong without being overbearing; be thrifty without being stingy; be friendly without being familiar and above everything else, be charitable.

All things come through right effort and desire.

Constant desire gives birth to faith, and through faith prayer is answered.

It is only by doing these acts repeatedly that you can become self-reliant and find yourself. Having once found yourself you will be amazed at your ability and energy, sufficient not only for all your needs, but ample to enable you to do for others.

And then, as the winter comes with the cold blasts, you feel and know that you are a necessary particle of the world structure, strong and able to endure the storms of adversity.

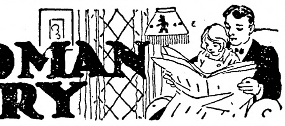
The SANDMAN STORY



SADIE'S DOG "SNOW"

SADIE was a dear little girl. She had a pretty voice and pretty ways and she had a little dog named Snow.

Snow was very small and very fluffy. His hair was very curly and he had a great deal of hair.

Sometimes Sadie wished her hair would curl so easily!

Snow enjoyed life very much. He had a warm box for his bed. It had soft cushions in it and he could curl up and go to sleep.

Then Sadie had a little neighbor friend who was fond of Snow and who played with him, too.

Snow thought life was very nice indeed for a little pet dog with a devoted mistress such as Sadie, and with so many friends, too.

"But He Does Look Funny, I Will Admit."

But one day in the winter time Snow got into the cellar. It was fun there.

He had a beautiful time.

He played in the coal bin and thought it was lots of fun to see the coal go coasting down from the coal piles.

And he loved to see his own fluffy white paws become so changed in color. That was very amusing.

Well, after he had been playing for a long time in the coal bin he heard Sadie calling for him.

He was sure he would surprise her.

He was sure she would think his little black feet were very cunning.

But when he came rushing up from the cellar Sadie seemed too astonished to be as happy as he thought she would be.

"Oh, Snow!" she said. "How you do look. Where have you been?"

And when he wanted to bound into her lap, she said, "Oh, no, down! Down, Snow, you naughty dog!"

Well, she didn't like his black paws as he had thought she would!

He had been naughty. That explained perhaps why he had been having so very good a time. He was being naughty!

Sadie's friends came to see her that very afternoon and they laughed at him.

"Well," said Sadie, "you wouldn't laugh if you had given him a bath only two days ago, and now look at him!

"But he does look funny, I will admit."

Only you see he is so used to being petted, and I simply can't pet him while he is like that.

"He'd simply ruin everything I had on."

Everyone seemed to agree that this was so.

Well, he had a bath that very afternoon and then he couldn't go out because he had to keep very warm so as not to catch cold.

And he was covered up with a blanket and watched over carefully.

Not very long after this Snow was taking a walk with Sadie and with several of her friends.

It was a nice day but the day before had been wet and rather foggy and the snow looked dirty and horrid.

Now his name was Snow and when he had looked dirty everyone had exclaimed in horror—though some had laughed seeing him as he had been.

At any rate Sadie had rushed at once to give him a bath.

But the snow all around was dirty and no one seemed to think it was funny.

No one seemed to be laughing at it, nor giving it a bath, nor doing any thing about cleaning it.

Well, people were very strange.

Snow had made up his mind about that.

But they were nice in spite of everything. That was true, too.

So he enjoyed life as much as ever, only when he couldn't understand things he gave up trying to understand them or puzzle them out.

It was much better for a little dog not to worry his head about some of the curious ways of humans—it was much better that way.

The main thing that counted was that humans were nice and that Sadie was nicest of all and she was his mistress, his own dear, dear mistress!

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

RAISING THE WIND

BESIDES whistling for a wind sailors have another way of making it blow; and anyone who happens to be on board a sailing vessel in a calm will probably see it tried. This is by sticking a knife into the mast. Some say it should be the foremast, some say the mizzen. Or if the vessel is a two-master, the main. But the foremast is generally selected for the operation. The sailor takes his knife and drives it hard into the mast as if he were angry. And then the wind blows—after a while. It is merely a case of waiting. This custom is a survival from very early days and comes from the custom primitive man had of "bulldozing" his gods when they were not propitious or were not attending to business. Among savages today the idol, or fetish, is not infrequently scolded or beaten if it fails to respond to the supplications of its voteries. And among the lower orders of the early classical heathen such a custom was not unknown. Primitive man and the heathen constructed their gods so much in their own image that, while generally standing in awe of them, they were still possessed of a lurking idea that, upon occasions, they might be coerced. So when a sailor on a coasting schooner drives his knife into the mast to make the wind blow he is, in reality, threatening the god of the winds in the same manner that his predecessor did on board the Phoenician galley exploring the coast of Spain in the early dusk and dawn of history.

For Meditation

WHO PAYS THE PENALTY?

"THE iniquity of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generations"—the pity is, that it is true. Children have ultimately to pay the penalty for the mistakes of their parents.

A father commits a crime and as a punishment he is sent to prison. He may remain there for a year or two or even for a much longer period, but when he is released doubtless he is in a worse condition both mentally and spiritually than he was the first night he tried to sleep within prison walls. The result of his crime, however, does not end when he leaves the prison. During his imprisonment he has been denied the opportunity of working at his accustomed trade with the result that those dependent upon him have to shift for themselves. The mother, being forced to work during the day to support the little family, left the children without moral and spiritual oversight. Conditions of this nature are responsible for a large per cent of the crime today. Who is at fault? Of course, the father is primarily responsible, but, does confinement within prison walls ultimately solve the problem so far as justice to society is concerned?

While it is important that the proper degree of punishment be imposed is it not also important that the cause of the crime be ascertained? If the father in the case has been a hopeless mental degenerate the condition is an abnormal one and deprivation of liberty the only remedy. But, if a person paying the penalty for his crime by imprisonment has the ability to earn a living for those dependent upon him should he not be compelled by law to do so? If some mental or physical condition is responsible for his crime should that not be discovered and an attempt be made to correct it?

Crime is punished for the protection of society and surely this end is many times defeated by efforts, which, while, satisfying justice, disregard the exercise of mercy toward those who ultimately pay the penalty.

Protection to society demands not only that crime be punished, but also that the cause for crime be discovered and remedied, and that dependent families be not deprived of adequate support at the expense of a judicial system which refuses to dispense "justice seasoned with mercy."

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE "BLACKJACK"

"BLACKJACK" today describes a short stick with a bludgeon head. The highwayman and the thug with whom, next to the revolver, it is a favorite weapon, have popularized the blackjack, and made its name familiar in daily speech. One should say "daily slang," for the term has no legitimate derivation, being of strange and irregular origin.

"Blackjack" was the name applied in former times in England to a type of flagon from which beer and ale were drunk. It was made of leather, tar coated, which made it hard and black. Hence its name, "blackjack," "jack" being the archaic word for a pitcher or can for carrying liquor.

As to how the term came to be applied to an offensive weapon, nothing more definite can be adduced than the perhaps obvious conjecture of the connection between the flagon which held enough liquor to rob a man of his senses and the weapon which one would use only when bereft of them.

Masai Youths Are Early Fighters

Members of Africa's Fiercest Tribe Called to War at Age of Sixteen.

Washington.—When the prince of Wales recently visited Nairobi, Kenya colony, the Masai tribesmen entertained him with a war dance. Amid roaring war whoops the tribesmen, hidden behind their large shields, menacingly wielded their spears in a way which showed the prince why explorers avoid Masai villages when the tribesmen are on the warpath.

"The Masai are one of the fiercest tribes in Africa," says a bulletin from the Washington (D. C.) headquarters of the National Geographic society. "While members of the tribe near Nairobi have been tamed by British and missionary influence and have settled down on plantations, their relatives in the hills of western Kenya still spend their time raiding neighboring tribes when not tending their herds.

Begin to Fight at Sixteen.

"A Masai village is a military barracks. At the call of the chief, the young warriors don lion manes which they wear about their heads, and, perhaps, a string of beads. With spears and leather shields as their only arms, they set out to attack the 'enemy.'

"The Masai begins his military career at sixteen. When he is thirty, he becomes an elder, settles down, and has as many wives as he desires. The furniture in his home of mud-plastered sticks costs no more than his haberdashery. Over an open fireplace hangs an iron kettle while additional utensils are made of gourds. A long gourd is a Masai milk can and half gourds are used for cups. Some of the huts have a three-legged stool or two for the older tribesmen.

"Even when the Masai is not on the warpath, the American traveler would be inclined to avoid him for sanitary reasons. Spitting upon a visitor is a sign of reverence and good will among some of the tribesmen. Every one who sees a newborn baby must spit on it. If a warrior is friendly, he spits on his hand before greeting a stranger.

"Outside the villages, one might stumble upon the skeleton of a tribesman whose body has been left to the hyenas, jackals and vultures. Only the chief of the tribe deserves a burial. After a chief has been buried for a year the son of his successor digs up the old chief's skull which is a treasured possession in the village.

Grass and Snakes Held Sacred.

"The tribesman's wives presiding over his hut jingle with every move. Their legs and arms are covered with dozens of wire rings. These adornments and a dozen or more rings encircling their necks sometimes weigh between 15 and 25 pounds. Both men and women are frequently seen with wood cylinders and tin cans in their distended ear lobes.

"Masai tribesmen have been almost impossible to convert from nature worship. When the chief would invoke the pleasure of the gods, all the children in the village stand in a circle and chant. Grass is sacred to the tribesmen. If a Masai hands a stranger a tuft of green grass, it suggests friendship. When young warriors start out on raids their sweethearts threw grass upon them to insure victory. The hyena has a certain sacred character. If a beast happens to cross the path of a warrior, the whole tribe goes in mourning. The python is held in veneration, for they believe the souls of their ancestors are reborn in them.

"Some tribesmen worship a black and a red god. The black god is benevolent, living immediately above the earth, while the red god lives farther up in the heavens. When the Masai hear thunder, they believe the red god is trying to get through the domain of the black god. The rumbling is the voice of the black god pleading with the red god not to harm the tribesmen below.

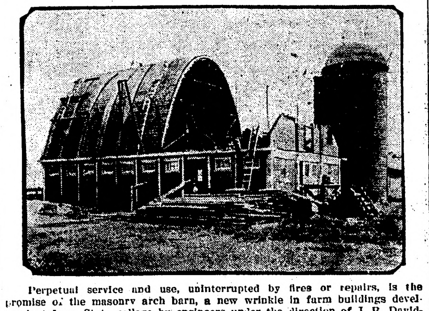
"The Masai hate agriculture in their native environment. They are cattle herders when not on the warpath, and live entirely upon the food their herds provide. It is a common practice to drink warm blood immediately after it has been drawn from a cow shot with an arrow through the jugular vein."

Submerged City Was Once Island Capital

Nevis, West Indies.—North of the town of Charleston camera men are making pictures of the submerged city of Jamestown, once the capital of Nevis.

The remains of the city may be seen near shore, beneath the level of the shore. On April 30, 1680, Jamestown was visited by an earthquake, and the town slipped into the sea, carrying with it all its riches and a population estimated at 14,000. The submerged city is located on the west or leeward shore of the island.

New Perpetual Service Barn



Perpetual service and use, uninterrupted by fires or repairs, is the promise of the masonry arch barn, a new wrinkle in farm buildings developed at Iowa State college by engineers under the direction of J. B. Davidson, head of the agricultural engineering department. The barn is constructed entirely of masonry. Aside from window frames and some equipment inside, there is no combustible material in the building. Outstanding in the construction of the building is the catenary arch used in the roof. The picture shows one of the barns partly completed.

EUROPE COPIES AMERICA IN CURBING IMMIGRATION

Quota System in Slightly Different Form Is Adopted by Several Countries.

Paris.—Once vilified and classed as unfair by humanity, the quota system of immigration restriction created by the United States to check the flow of emigrants from overseas, is slowly being adopted under only slightly different form all over Europe, where new immigration problems have been created by the industrialization of the continent.

When Secretary of Labor Davis was in Europe recently on a tour of study of labor conditions, he estimated that 5,000,000 Europeans and Asiatics were waiting for their turn to come into America, and if the bars were lifted tomorrow every ocean liner would be filled on every west-bound passage for 18 months with nothing but immigrants and still the tide would continue to flow westward.

France today finds herself in much the same position the United States was in a few years ago. She has enough work for her own population but not enough for the unemployed of all Europe and England. Consequently she has erected bars, without any fuss and as quietly as possible.

Italy is doing the same thing. A Frenchman who wants to go to Italy to work finds his way barred with enough red tape to trip him unless he is a specialist in some particular trade which Italy particularly needs. Spain is ready to export rather than import labor, and taxes are levied so as to discourage foreign laborers.

England long ago barred continental workers, for her own unemployed are providing a problem which several successive governments have been unable to solve.

Labor leaders all over Europe openly blame America for the condition, but government officials cannot blame the United States for the immigration stand she took. When the bars of American ports were leveled against mass movements of labor from abroad into the United States, there was created a vast labor surplus which is today estimated a 10,000,000 on the continent, outside of Russia, and the British Isles.

One of the problems of the League of Nations labor bureau is to find something for those ten millions to do.

Girl Sold Worms to Win Way to Camp

Here's how:

Mildred belongs to the Clover Leaf 4-H club of Washoe valley. All the other boys and girls decided to attend the camp, but Mildred lacked the $3 necessary for expenses. Of course, she could have sold eggs, run errands, weeded gardens and performed other chores, but she didn't.

On contract, she dug and delivered 720 angleworms at 5 cents a dozen to her ranch neighbor, Miss Katherine Lewers, art teacher at the University of Nevada. Miss Lewers fed the wrigglers to her prize ducks.

$100 to Accumulate in Bank 1,000 Years

Troy, N. Y.—Henry G. Granger of Buskirk, near here, has deposited in the People's National bank of Hoosick Falls, N. Y., $100 "to promote and improve the educational facilities of Princeton university," where he was graduated in 1893 and played on the football team. The term of the deposit is 1,000 years.

Each year half the interest will be sent to Princeton, the other half added to the principal. The donor provides that in case the accumulating interest should in the course of centuries reach a sum in excess of the needs of Princeton, the university may allocate the balance to public objects as it sees fit.

In 90 years the accumulation in the bank, exclusive of what goes annually to Princeton, will be $1,620.80; in 198 years, $103,731.20; in 504 years, $9,496,979,040.40. These computations were made by the bank of deposit, which also announces that at its 1,000-year maturity the deposit would have grown beyond the power of human computation.

Pays Conscience Debt of 25 Cents

Fort Worth, Texas.—Five years ago a woman and her small son got on a Fort Worth-Dallas interurban at Arlington. The conductor overlooked the boy so his mother let him "slip by."

Recently the Northern Texas Traction company received a letter from the woman in Santa Monica, Calif.

"I have started for heaven and I feel that I must settle all things that should be paid," the contrite passenger wrote.

Inclosed were stamps for 25 cents, the long overdue fare.

ENGINEER'S GRIT PREVENTS WRECK

Train Brought to Stop as Driver Is Stricken.

Atlanta, Ga.—A story of the heroism of an engineer who, by sheer grit, triumphed over intense physical distress long enough to insure the safety of his passengers arriving aboard the Crescent limited was told here.

It was while piloting the Southern railway's fast train between Monroe, Va., and Salisbury, N. C., his regular run, that Engineer Joe M. Stedman suffered an acute attack of indigestion as he sat at the throttle a few miles out of Danville, Va.

He felt insensibility rapidly closing over him from the pains in his stomach. Then he thought of the trainload of passengers and by a superhuman effort of will, managed to apply the brakes. The train rolled to a steady stop just as he collapsed on the floor of his cab.

The summoning of medical aid and organization of an emergency train crew resulted in a delay of about forty minutes. Finally, with a fireman at the throttle and a baggagemaster acting as fireman, the Crescent was brought into Salisbury.

Passengers made up a purse of $147 for Engineer Stedman, who was reported by officials of the road to be well on the way to recovery.

Pretty Bookkeeper Has Record of Forgeries

New York.—Winifred Douglas, the pretty, competent young bookkeeper whose ability to obtain positions of trust in spite of her record as an embezzler, has been lodged in Jefferson Market prison.

Magistrate Jean Norris held her in $5,000 bail on a charge of forgery brought by the Tidewater Roofing company, where her peculations are said to total $1,400.

During the ten months she worked for the company she was being sought by probation officers on a warrant issued last October after M. Ewing Fox & Co., where she had been employed, missed $3,327.30. She was found recently working for the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which lost $57.

For the last two years she has been on probation after conviction of stealing from Jay-Thorpe, Inc. Under her probation she promised to pay back this firm $1,000 in installments.

Miss Douglas, who is thirty-four, but looks younger, told Magistrate Norris that if she were released on bail she would help police find a man involved in the Tidewater thefts.

Lenity was granted to her in the past when complainants preferred restitution to prosecution.

Foils Thieves; Forgets Where She Hid Cash

Giant, Calif.—The postmistress of this little town saved $18,000 in registered mail from burglars and then forgot where she hid the mail.

Post office inspectors ran in figurative circles when the robbery of the post office was discovered and Mrs. K. E. Pierson, postmistress, announced the mail was stolen. They ran faster when she remembered she hid it some place, but forgot where it was.

Then Mrs. Pierson remembered. She went to a crevice in the wall and pulled out an envelope containing $18,000 worth of stock.

The inspectors congratulated her for saving the mail and suggested she should tie a string around her finger in such a future case.

Youth's Neck Broken by Mule's Kick at Cow

Petersburg, Va.—While helping his brother to drive cows into a barn on his mother's farm recently at Bracey, Brunswick county, Va., Boyd Haskins Russell was almost instantly killed when he was kicked by a mule.

The youth was watching the cows pass into the barn when the mule suddenly kicked at one of them. The hoofs struck the lad's neck, which was broken.

Buried 32 Days

Latrobe, Pa.—A rooster, buried for 32 days under a mow full of wheat, was rescued on the T. L. Elmer farm. The bird appeared weak, but after shaking himself several times, emitted a feeble crow, and began to strut.

Honest Driver

Westport, Conn.—When Edward Craig, Saugatuck taxi driver, ran over a chicken he duly reported the fatality to police—the first report of the kind on the local headquarters' blotter.

Huh!

"Yes," said she, "my husband is so much better I thought it would be all right to leave him long enough to come to the meeting."

"I see," smiled the hostess, "you are leaving well enough alone, so to speak."

Denver Boy is a Winner

Every mother realizes how important it is to teach children good habits of conduct but many of them fail to realize the importance of teaching their children good bowel habits until the poisons from decaying waste held too long in the system have begun to affect the child's health.

Watch your child and at the first sign of constipation, give him a little California Fig Syrup. Children love its rich, fruity taste and it quickly drives away those distressing ailments, such as headaches, bad breath, coated tongue, biliousness, feverishness, fretfulness, etc. It gives them a hearty appetite, regulates their stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord. For over fifty years, leading physicians have prescribed it for half-sick, bilious, constipated children. More than 4 million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it.

Mrs. C. G. Wilcox, 3855½ Wolff St., Denver, Colorado, says: "My son, Jackie, is a prize winner for health, now, but we had a lot of trouble with him before we found his trouble was constipation and began giving him California Fig Syrup. It fixed him up quick, gave him a good appetite, made him sleep fine and he's been gaining in weight right along since the first few days, taking it."

To avoid inferior imitations of California Fig Syrup, always look for the word "California" on the carton.

Needless.

Senator Johnson was asked what he thought of the proposed law which would permit women to conceal their ages.

"Quite unnecessary," laughed the senator. "The beauty doctors practice legally, I feel sure."

Drugs Excite the Kidneys, Drink Water

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble because we often eat too much rich food. Our blood is filled with acids which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from overwork, become sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache, or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or if you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, begin drinking lots of good soft water and get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

Millions seem to think that the pursuit of happiness can only be made by automobile.

OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

They outwear two pairs of ordinary rubbers

Top Notch Topekas are made especially for men who give their rubbers extra-hard wear. They last longer because they have in them more rubber and tougher rubber.

Double-thick soles of strong gray rubber. Uppers are of serviceable red rubber. Extra strips of reinforcement protect every vital point of wear.

HEADLIGHT BROUGHT GOOD LUCK

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

JAMES BRYANT lacked confidence. He failed because he didn't have nerve!

"There's a wonderful opening here in Jimtown for a modern grocery store," Mrs. Bryant declared at the dinner table as she and her husband discussed the family fortunes; "we might easily establish one."

"But, Hattie," Bryant cautioned, "we haven't the capital stock. We've only our little savings account of $500."

"But that would give us a start," the wife countered; "the wholesale men will 'carry' you for a time if you make an initial payment. Five hundred dollars ought to lay the foundation for a nice stock of fancy groceries. The rent on the Stubbs property isn't high. If we could operate the first month then we could take our profits and increase our stock for the coming months—"

"But, stop, my dear wife," Bryant urged, "we can't take a chance. What if the business failed? Then our life's savings would be swept away and we would have to start all over again. I tell you, Hattie, my $35 a week at Cohen's isn't so bad. Bookkeeping gets on my nerves sometimes. But a fellow has to do lots of things that he doesn't like."

Thus it was for the thousandth time the family of James Bryant indefinitely postponed the day when the head of the family would launch out in business for himself. The wife at length agreed her husband acted wisely in urging a conservative method of operation.

One day a tall, bewhiskered gentleman stepped from a train in Jimtown. The street urchins trailed at the heels of the aged man and people at shop windows eyed with great curiosity this odd-looking stranger, who, unheralded and unannounced had entered the streets of quaint Jimtown. The venerable gentleman paused before a sign that read "Cohen's General Store" and a moment later stooped to enter the rather low door.

"I'm lookin' fer a boy named Bryant," the old gentleman announced, "or rather a man perhaps by this time. James Bryant's his name. I'm his uncle. I'm Tex O'Brannon from Del Rio, down on the Rio Grande, a gold miner in Mexico and I'm here to see my nephew."

An instant later and James Bryant was shaking the hand of his aged uncle. In another instant he was studying the huge stone worn on the uncle's hand. The uncle discovered that ring with the giant set had been seen, and he smiled with satisfaction.

"It's the real article!" O'Brannon said; "why, in Del Rio they call me Headlight O'Brannon due to that sparkler!"

"But where did you get it, Uncle Tex? Here in Georgia we don't have mines that produce such gems as that—guess you dug it out of the ground?"

"No, I was given that diamond ring as a reward for kindness done an old miner down in Chihuahua," explained O'Bannon. "The miner was dying of pneumonia and I nursed him in his shack until death released him from his misery. Now, the old miner gave me this ring and I've worn it ever since. They say it's worth a fortune. But I've never worried to find out its real value. I had a special purpose in view for this ring during the five years I have kept it, and now I'm going to dispose of the ring as I have planned and then rush on to a miners' meeting before the congressional committee at Washington."

Bryant grew interested. His eyes widened with excitement and he listened with the enthusiasm of a school child expecting a holiday announcement.

"Yes, James, my dear nephew," Tex O'Brannon announced, "I'm going to make you and Hattie a present of this ring—a wedding gift! I've meant to give you something all these years. But we Westerners just get careless. I'll run down and leave it with the wife and then catch the next train northward. I'm in somewhat of a rush!"

Jim Bryant could hardly believe his own eyes. He sat in a dazed condition for several minutes. Then, with a reckless daring that had never been exhibited before by him in his life, Bryant picked up his felt hat and boldly walked from the cashier's room like an imprisoned bird flitting through the door of a cage accidentally left open.

"I'll be back shortly," Bryant announced to his employer, "going out to get a bit of fresh air; haven't had much lately.

The store owner overlooked the surprising remark and smiled. He was of a generous nature and really was delighted to see good fortune come the way of his hard-working bookkeeper.

"Did he leave it?" questioned Bryant in an excited tone as he entered the humble Bryant cottage in an outlying section. "Hattie, did he leave it?"

"Yes, my dear!" Mrs. Bryant, her cheeks flushed with excitement, exclaimed, "and he says it's worth a fortune!" "Dear old Uncle Tex, I remember he once wrote us a letter from Mexico telling us he was going to remember our wedding. We've been married all these years and I had long since forgotten about his promise. Dear old Uncle Tex; a real diamond! Big as a headlight; a fortune, but he'll never miss it. He's past seventy now and worth half a million, he says."

Just two weeks after the visit of Texas O'Brannon to Jimtown the cozy little neighborhood grocery of James Bryant opened on an important street of the Georgia cotton town. The Bryants, made confident with the possession of the headlight, had invested their savings in a stock of choice groceries. They had a nest egg!

James Bryant was a natural business man. His store prospered and the first month's receipts were sufficiently large to pay outstanding debts and to increase the stock. Within six months the store was found too small and a larger place was rented on an important street intersection. But Bryant's business still increased. At the close of the first year he opened a second store.

Then, with the passing years, James Bryant became a wealthy man and a power in the commercial world. Uncle Tex O'Bannon had long since passed away, but his enterprising nephew was following in the footsteps of that man whose boundless energy and venturesome spirit had wrung a fortune out of the desert sands of Chihuahua.

Meanwhile a baby daughter had been born to the Bryants, had grown into young womanhood and had chosen for herself a mate. The wedding was approaching and James Bryant, now weighted down with cares of a huge chain of grocery stores and a half-dozen other business enterprises, had but little time for romance. But at length he came to discuss the matter with his wife. They must select some suitable wedding gift.

"Oh, I'll tell you," the wife said enthusiastically, "the headlight! It brought us good luck. Now let us pass it on to our daughter."

James Bryant hurried away to the National Bank building. A teller escorted him to a safety vault where a private lockbox was removed. The headlight was taken with tender care from the place where it had rested for many a year. Then Bryant went to a jeweler's establishment across the street. He would have the headlight mounted on a better class of material.

The wedding day approached and Bryant went after the headlight. The jeweler wore a perplexed look when the wealthy James Bryant entered. He seemed to have something on his mind that was giving him a lot of trouble.

"Is the headlight ready?" Bryant asked.

"Not yet," the jeweler replied, "I've delayed the work pending a conference with you, Mr. Bryant. The headlight is worthless! Just glass! Nothing more!"

James Bryant was silent.

"I'm afraid somebody has taken advantage of your ignorance of gems," the jeweler announced. "I'm willing to help locate the culprit!"

Bryant stood as erect as an Apache on guard. He didn't see the jeweler. He saw instead a struggling bookkeeper who was afraid to resign from a $35-a-week job and take a chance with fortune!

"I'm sure you are wrong!" Bryant finally said, "the stone is worth a million dollars of anybody's money! Go ahead and mount it on the most valuable material that you can obtain."

Extension Light That Should Prove Popular

There is in use an extension electric light device constructed very much upon the principle of the carpenter's tapeline. A cord 15 feet long is contained in the case, having a mechanism for rewinding on one side and an incandescent lamp socket on the other. When light is desired at some distance from the regular fixture, a plug on the end of the cord is screwed into the regular socket and the cord drawn out to the required distance. A catch holds the cord from rewinding at any desired point, so that the lamp may be suspended a few inches below the fixture if one so desires. It is also connected with a leather strap, whereby it may be hung up.

Many uses for such an extension light are easily found. If carried as a part of the traveling equipment, it is not necessary to carry a lamp, as the socket and plug are of standard size and will fit any fixture in common use.

Daddy of Timepieces

According to the London Daily Mail, there are more than 500 clocks in the palace of Westminster, the official designation of the houses of parliament, all synchronizing with "Big Ben," father of timepieces.

There are more than 500 rooms in the "palace," and each has its clock, while other clocks are placed in corridors and on stairways. A gentleman with a light ladder in his hand is constantly in attendance on these clocks.

Act of Gratitude

Washing dishes is not to be done merely that they may be used again, says Sontoku Ninomiya, a Japanese writer. It is also an act of gratitude for the service they have given.

Though he have nothing more to eat, let a man clean his dishes and then starve, for he owes something to the dishes for having been useful to him when he had a use for them.

Maybe So

"Is your lettuce fresh?"

"Yes."

"But I want the kind that is all curly and wavy—you know."

"Maybe you'd better try a beauty parlor, mum."

PHILLIPS Milk of Magnesia

Hot and Sarcastic.

"The retort sarcastic."

Senator Peter Norbeck was discussing the Teapot Dome case at a Redfield reception.

"Yes," he said, "that was a very good example of the retort sarcastic on the part of the defense.

"It reminds me of a little man who waited patiently about an hour one day in a dark, hot telephone booth. Finally a girl attendant said to him:

"'Are you waiting for a number?'

"'Oh, no,' said he. 'I just stepped in here to develop a photograph.'"

Any man who thinks he is courting an angel may live to think again.

King Grasshopper Has Great Leaping Powers

Giant hunting grasshoppers nearly five inches long, that prey on small animals such as mice and the young of ground-nesting birds, are found in the Congo.

They rival the kangaroo as jumpers and can leap a considerable distance onto their prey. The hunting grasshopper is not so great a leaper in proportion to its size as the king grasshopper, the young of which, even before its wings are developed, can jump a hundred times its own length. Very few men can cover more than twice their own length in a jump.

The hunting grasshopper is the largest of all grasshoppers. Its great front lip hides a pair of jaws as effective as a hay-chopper, and its appetite makes it a plague to mankind.

Fusses Cause Divorces.

Judge Dana used to say the majority of divorce cases that came before him were the result of hasty and unconsidered marriages. The parties had little conception of what a long contract it is and of the compromises, concessions and adjustments that it demands to be successful. They are in themselves mainly little things, but it is a proverb that life consists in just one thing after another, and mostly little things.

World's Illiterates.

Dr. J. F. Abel, a specialist of the bureau of education, says that 62.5 per cent of all the world's inhabitants, despite the educational progress of the last two or three centuries, are still illiterate. Doctor Abel calculates that the world's population now is 1,820,000,000. Of these 455,000,000 are deducted on the ground that people under ten years of age are illiterate. This leaves 1,365,000,000 above the age of ten, of whom Doctor Abel finds that about 850,000,000 are illiterates.

That's the Question.

"Anyway," said the aviator, "when you are in an airplane you always are sure of getting back to earth."

"And how?" retorted the captain of a submarine.

Next Question.

"Girls are going to wear fewer clothes than ever this winter."

"What will that cost?"

This is the age when readers don't read beyond the third chapter if they don't like the novel.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Gerhard O. Hanson and Tina Hanson, his wife, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 21st day of May, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota on the 3rd day of June, 1926, at eleven o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 195 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Sixty-eight Dollars and seventy-five cents ($68.75), which became due and payable on the 21st day of November, 1927, and the 21st day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred Fifty-four Dollars and twenty-three cents ($2,154.23), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 21st day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and One Hundred Thirty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($137.50) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $68.75 thereof from November 21st, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $68.75 thereof from May 21st, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Two Thousand Three Hundred Fifty-three Dollars and forty-five cents ($2,353.45);

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

LESSON XXXXVI

KINDS OF FEEDS: All kinds of feeds may be placed in three classifications—roughage, which includes all kinds of hay and fodder—succulence, such as silage, roots and green feeds of all kinds—and concentrates, that includes all the grains, mill feeds, etc.

For the best and most profitable feeding all three kinds of feed should be used—hay, silage and grain. Fodder corn may be made to take the place of hay, and roots may take the place of silage. Roots may also take the place of grain to a certain extent.

Roughage and succulence are generally fed in the proportion of 1 pound of roughage and 3 pounds of succulence to each 100 pounds of live weight of the animal fed, and 1 pound of concentrates to each 3 or 4 pounds of milk produced daily.

Why Is A Newspaper Like A Woman?

That was the question put up to its readers by a far southern newspaper. For the best answer, a subscription for one year was offered. Here are some of the replies:

"Because you can't believe anything they say."

"Because they are thinner now than they used to be."

"Because they have boldface types."

"Because they are easy to read."

"Because they are well worth looking over."

"Because back numbers are not in demand."

"Because they are not afraid to speak their minds."

"Because they have a great deal of influence."

"Because if they know anything they usually tell it."

"Because they carry the news wherever they go."

The correct answer is given thus: "Because every man should have one of his own and not run after his neighbor's." —Belleville Enterprise.

The Way of All Flesh

Convincing proof that a great motion picture need not necessarily be an epic in number of people used or the size of sets, is to be found at the Community Hall here next Tuesday, December 4th, where Emil Jannings' first Paramount starring vehicle "The Way of All Flesh" will be showed.

Here is the foremost motion picture actor of the world today in one of the most dramatically human, vital and gripping pictures the screen has ever shown.

Reminder of Dark Age

Witch-burning days in Scotland were recalled when a human skull was found during excavations at the Bogle hole, Mullesburgh. The Bogle hole was one of the places in Scotland where witches were burned after trial. It was known in 1561 as the Terror's Croft. The last recorded trial of persons accused of witchcraft was held in Musselburgh on July 29, 1661.

Best Acre Of Corn Makes 134 Bushels

The best acre of corn in the United States this year yielded 134 bushels, kilndried and shelled. It was grown by Ray A. Briggs, 25 years old, of Luzerne county, Pa., on ground that had been prepared for potatoes.

In addition to the national record for corn, Briggs holds the Keystone state record for potatoes. For six years he has harvested more than 400 bushels to the acre.

Briggs has had unusual success also with fruits and flowers, hogs and chickens.

Wrecking Old Landmark

Albert and Arthur Sorenson of Newfolden spent a few days here this week trimming up the old Evergreen hotel. They took out most of the windows and doors and whatever else that they could find that was of any value.

The Evergreen is one of the pioneer land marks in this village and, should by rights have been fixed up and used for something instead of being dismantled at this stage of the game.

Some day some real old timer is going to come back here to look over the old stamping ground and will no doubt get plum lost without seeing any of these old relics by which he could regain his bearings. Why worry? If he was here to see the old landscape now he would go for squirrel food trying to figure out which way it was leaning.

What Will you do

When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks. Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fretful, or restless. Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

BAD LEGS

Have You Varicose or Swollen Veins and Bunches Near Ankle or Knee?

To stop the misery, pain or soreness, help reduce the dangerous, swollen veins and strengthen the legs, use Moone's Emerald Oil. This clean, powerful, penetrating yet safe antiseptic healing oil is obtainable at all first-class drug stores.

In hundreds of cases Moone's Emerald Oil has given blessed relief. Splendid for Ulcers, Old Sores, Broken Veins, and Troublesome Cases of Eczema.

MOONE'S EMERALD OIL

This Turtle Contented.

The turtle which has lived in the zoological park in Washington for many years seems perfectly contented in his grass-filled enclosure says Nature Magazine. It dines off carrots as contentedly as though he had never been accustomed to a diet of thorns in an arid wilderness where he had to travel miles for a drink.

It is a miracle if a railroad depot can be made cozy.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

CHAPTER I

—1—

The orchestra at the large, new Granada dance hall had reached that stage when the individual members composing it were rather beginning to enjoy their own exertions. There was a pause. A man with a megaphone mounted the platform.

"When yer-all alone," he began determinedly, "by da telephone, 'n dere's no one dere but youoooooo—"

Most of those composing the large crowd of dancers who had stopped and crowded around the platform to listen to the singer eyed him rather cynically, not, apparently, in the least touched by the poignant words of the popular song of the moment.

One little girl watched the fat singer as though the words of his song were affecting her. She turned to her male companion, a slim youth with glazed hair. She put a small, cool hand into one of his.

"It would be terrible, wouldn't it," she asserted rather than asked. "to be really all alone, especially after you'd loved some one!"

The young man grinned down at her reassuringly.

"Try and get rid of me," he said airily.

"And we'll be married very soon now?" she went on wistfully, talking to make herself not so clearly hear the words of the song.

"Inside of six months." His eyes did not meet hers as he replied and he shifted his position slightly. The girl glanced down at the diamond ring upon the fourth finger of her left hand. It sparkled up at her bravely, as it caught and held a concentrated reflection from the multicolored lights in the immense room.

"Good Lord, how much longer is that guy going to sing?" the young man shot out impatiently; "it's nearly one o'clock; only a coupla more dances to come."

"There! He's finished now," said Lolita. Almost before the words were out of her mouth the orchestra had started and she was whirled instantly away to become a part of the swirling, hopping prancing mass upon the large floor. It proved, however, to be the last dance, for presently the popular strains changed to the old familiar tune of "Home, Sweet Home." jazzily syncopated. Very few, however, stopped to finish the dance. There was a mad rush for the cloak rooms.

Lolita found a place before one of the long mirrors in the "Ladies' Room," and started to adjust her hat, tucking her short red curls carelessly under the brim.

The glass told her that she was very pretty, especially as compared to the other girls who stood about the room making ready to meet their men. She was not, however, quite happy. A little fear tugged at her heart and would not be dispelled. The song had somehow started it.

She was twenty-two years old, and markedly different from most of the other girls in the room. She was the only child of an exceedingly expert, but exceedingly underpaid watchmaker who worked in one of the large watch factories in Elgin. He had managed to put her through the Elgin grammar schools and the high school, and even a six month's business college course. He had wanted somehow to send her on to college, but she would not hear of it, but had insisted upon going to Chicago to find a position, so that she might be an asset rather than a liability to him. Shortly after coming to Chicago she had found the position and become engaged.

She had written glowing accounts of her fiance to her father, and he had replied warmly.

Harvey Torrence had met Lolita at the department store where she worked. He was eight years her senior, a slightly blase product of the city, making excellent money as a real estate salesman, and having no particular intentions of being deliberately captious. But he had wanted Lolita the moment that ever he laid eyes upon her, and he had somehow managed to "sell" himself to her. Although the accepting of him, on his own terms, had caused Lolita many a frightened hour alone with herself in her little hall bedroom, her loneliness and desire for sympathetic companionship had overcame a very staunch set of scruples, and she had yielded to him. Having yielded she would willingly have laid down her very life for him, had he asked her to do so, and she waited, with what patience she could summon for that day when a remarkably dilatory judge should grant him a divorce from a former wife who had lamentably "failed to understand him."

"In just about a month, now, I ought to get my decree," he had told her at first, six months ago. Month after month had passed, and no decree had been forthcoming. However, Lolita loved him, and she was sure that where such a great, warm feeling of love inside of her existed nothing could possibly be wrong.

After the first few hours of mental clashing when the ideals which her mother, who had died when Lolita was thirteen, had instilled into her, and her father's franker explanations of the philosophy of living, had met with Harvey's more facile philosophy, she had stepped worrying, closed part of her mind, and given the rest to Harvey to manipulate as he saw fit.

She turned from the mirror, about [illegible] a girl who had been working at the Emporium at the time she had met Harvey, and who had left shortly after that, walked up to her.

"Hello, Lolita!" she said carelessly, "how's the kid? Still plugging along down at the Emporium?"

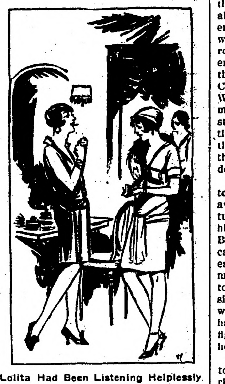
"Yes, but I'm to be married shortly."

"You're going to be married. What the devil are you going to do that for?"

"Because I'm in love."

"Well, that's about the surest way I know of to get out of love. Graduate from nine hours a day at the Emporium to twenty-four-hour duty in a flat—I thought you had more brains than that."

Lolita turned to go, with a conciliatory smile; vaguely she could understand why a girl who had made "other arrangements," should speak disparagingly of marriage. The other, however, held her with a question.



Lolita Had Been Listening Helplessly.

"Who you engaged to? Anybody I know?"

"Well, I think you had seen him call for me at the store once or twice."

"You don't mean Harvey Torrence?"

"Yes."

"Oh! my G—d!" the girl let out a raucous laugh which caused others in the room to turn. "Oh! my G—d!" she repeated and laughed again. "Harvey Torrence. Engaged to him! You make me laugh. That's all you ever will be—just 'engaged' to him; that's his regular game. I was engaged to him once myself."

"We are going to be married," said Lolita stiffly, "just as soon as Harvey can get his divorce." This time the girl did not laugh. She turned suddenly, almost fiercely, and grasped the other by both arms.

"Listen, kid; you're not like the rest of us. You've got a break. You look different. Anybody would know you was innocent. You got a good chance yet. Don't pay any attention to what I said about that marriage stuff. I only laugh at it because I can't have it ever, and I know it; but you you're O. K. Stay that way. Let me tell you something, hot off the pan. Harvey Torrence has never been married in his life. Don't let him kid you with engagement stuff—or has he already kidded you?" She stopped and looked searchingly into the other girl's eyes. "So that's how it is," she said disappointedly after a minute. "Oh well; you'll have to do the best you can, then; but honestly, you don't look it. You look just as innocent as you ever did. Better grab off some bird while you've got the chance, and for heaven's sake lay off of Harvey. Married! H—l! He wouldn't marry unless he could cop out somebody with dough, and lots of it. Married—huh!" She laughed again, shrilly.

It was a happy laugh, as though her belief in herself had somehow been strengthened by the knowledge of the other's condition in life.

Lolita had been listening helplessly. She felt as though she could not open her mouth, or move her limbs. She wondered if the girls about them had heard and understood. She could feel her face burning. She felt as though she could never possibly leave the room, horrid as it had now become, with its smell of cheap cosmetics, its grotesque sights.

Girls, exposing their bosoms to be powdered, other girls pulling their clothes up to arrange their garters, utterly oblivious to the vulgarity of display. Girls telling each other filthy anecdotes; accusing each other of intended indiscretions . . . laughing in maudlin abandon at unmentionable things.

Heretofore she had not minded it, but now, suddenly, she felt irresistibly a part of them, drawn to them by a sinister bond never to be severed. She turned and walked from the room, out into the now deserted dance hall, with untidy streamers of confetti about the floor, the dimmed lights making it seem like some huge, malign cavern. What the girl had said was not true she told herself as she walked toward the door. She passed into the night air, and the crash of traffic upon Florence avenue; turned toward the place where Harvey had parked his neat roadster when they had arrived several hours before. He was sitting in the driver's seat smoking a cigarette. Calmly she climbed in beside him. Without even looking at her he automatically went through the motions of starting the car. They drove for a time in silence. Lolita could see that there was a bright moon hanging over the lake. Suddenly without any very definite idea she said to him:

"Turn down one of the cross streets to the lake; I want to talk to you for awhile before we go home." He turned and looked at her in protest, his lips framing the words "it's late." But something about her manner, caused him to turn and run a block east to the water's edge and stop. The moon made a pathway of gold directly to the car, leading off across the dark silent waters into a blue-black oblivion which somehow heartened Lolita. She had to force herself to speak calmly, fighting down the terrifying pain at her heart.

"Harvey," she said, in calm, level tones; "you have never been married." He swung about to face her angrily, but something in her direct gaze cowed him. Almost visibly he fortified himself to bluff things out.

"I suppose somebody's been talking to you about me; well, what of it? I love you, and you love me; what difference does the rest make? Kiss me, and forget about what you've been hearing." He reached for her, but she moved as far away from him as possible, to the farthest corner of the seat.

"I can spend the night with a girl from the store who lives in the Grantham apartments; tomorrow I'll not go to the store; I'll find another room somewhere. Will you take me over to the Grantham, or shall I get out now and walk?"

"Say! What's come over you? Suppose I'm not married; what of it? I haven't been stringing you along all this time. I've really loved you. I've always intended to come clean with you; only I just wanted to wait and be sure. I'll marry you."

"Thanks, very much," she said bitterly, "but I don't want the honor now."

"You was keen about it as late as two or three hours back; what's come over you?"

"Why did you keep telling me that lie about getting a divorce? Why did you lie and lie and lie? Oh! Harvey, it makes it all seem so small and cheap and tawdry; why I'd even rather have had you come to me at first and have told me the truth, that it was only passion, not the sort of thing you led me to believe it was that prompted you to—"

"But listen, I'm telling you I'll marry you, now—tomorrow—first thing in the morning. On the square, I'm not kidding now at all. Honest, Lolita, I've always been crazy about you; only—well—I thought maybe we might not get along as well as I expected and I made up my mind to sort of try things out for awhile. Aw, come on, kid, try to get me straight; we've been such good pals. Don't spoil everything now." She was near to the breaking point. Most maddening, most heartbreaking was the fact that he could not see, could not at all understand what she felt, and there was no way to put it into words. Nevertheless, she tried despairingly.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Wrong Beliefs About Exercise and Heart

The old belief that the heart increased in size according to the increased amount of work it is called upon to perform is a myth, Dr. Mathias J. Seifert, Chicago, says in a study of the effect of exercise upon the heart, prepared for the Gorgas Memorial Institute at Kansas City.

If an athlete's heart increases in size it is not because of the exercise he has performed, but because there was something fundamentally wrong with it to begin with Doctor Seifert declares.

"It is now found," he says, "that the predisposition of the heart to enlargement is the result of infectious diseases, such as scarlet fever, pneumonia, rheumatism and too strenuous exercise in youth, as well as to physic traumas.

"Exercise for pleasure causes no enlargement of the heart but on the contrary produces a strengthening of the whole body and, normally, even a smaller heart."

Young Men, Get Married!

Youths should marry in their early twenties if they want real happiness. Whatever may have been a man's chances against marrying happily at twenty-three, they are quadrupled as he nears forty. The man nearing forty may be a better man, he may well be a worse man; at any rate he is a different man. Unless he has a simplicity of heart and equality of temper rarely found, he will demand more and give less in marriage. No marriage can be happy unless both man and woman are happy in it, and the woman who marries a bachelor of forty will have to give more and take less, and still be happy.—Norman Davey in Smart Set Magazine.

Used Her Cakes for Poker Chips; Divorce

Chicago.—If George Markis persists in his peculiar practice of using pancakes for poker chips, he must depend upon some one else besides Mrs. Sarah Markis to fry them.

Mrs. Sarah Markis up until recently was Mrs. George Markis. Judge Gemmill changed that by granting her a divorce. Her contention was that she should not be obliged to remain wedded to a husband who insisted she fry pancakes to be used as collateral in a poker game.

She had no objection, she said, to flopping flapjacks on a hot griddle at three o'clock in the morning for sustenance of Markis' card-playing guests; but when those same flapjacks were used to "sweeten" jackpots and otherwise to serve in lieu of chips, she held it to be cruel and inhuman treatment.

"It was a little too much to expect," her attorney told Judge Gemmill, who agreed with him. "Markis owns three restaurants. He might at least have one of his chefs fry his poker chips."

ELEPHANT CURSE SEEN IN TRAGEDY

Death of Mahout Bears Out Oriental Tradition.

London. — A mysterious tragedy, which oriental tradition links with the curse of the sacred elephant, confronts London police. Coincident with the death in Calcutta of Pa Wa, a sacred white elephant, Said Ali, a famous Mohammedan mahout, was found much mutilated in his quarters at the London zoo. At the same time Sandy Wee, a Burmese Christian mahout, was discovered injured and now lies in a London hospital. He was found under Ali's window.

Even persons least addicted to superstition were pondering the ancient belief of the east that misfortune follows with certain footsteps when a white elephant is taken from its own country. For these animals are supposed to be the reincarnation of Buddha, and as such are worshiped by certain sects of Orientals.

Two years ago the famous white elephant, Pa Wa, on which the king of Siam had bestowed a title, was brought to the London zoo from the east. With him came Sandy Wee. Pa Wa later was taken on a tour of America by Sandy Wee and then sent to Calcutta, while Sandy returned to the London zoo.

Said Ali was called the finest elephant trainer in the world, and he and Sandy Wee lived together in a little room at the zoo. When the tragedy was discovered, a pickax and sledge hammer lay beside Ali's body, mute evidence as to how he was killed.

Sandy Wee knew of the legendary curse. Whether he and his companion believed it or not, they knew that many of their countrymen did, and that it was being said even the return of Pa Wa to his own land could not wipe out the insult of taking him away.

Said Ali, because of his uncanny control over elephants, was brought from India to handle the bad elephant Indianrana, whose temper baffled zoo authorities. The Moslem won over the huge beast from the moment she saw him.

Girl Hurt by Actress' Slipper Wins Damages

New York.—For an injury to her hand received when she was struck by a slipper kicked off by Belle Baker, the vaudeville actress, during a performance in Union City, N. J., Miss Sophie Kancic, nineteen-year-old New York girl, has been awarded damages of $275 by Judge Garrick in the First District court of Jersey City. The father of the girl was given $50 for medical expenses incurred in treating the injury.

Miss Kancic was in the eighth row of the orchestra when she was injured. Miss Baker was charlestoning when the slipper shot over the footlights.

Auto Scores Knockout Over Infuriated Bull

Bluefields, W. Va.—The automobile has won the championship of the road over hostile bulls, in one case at least.

Standing in middle of a country road, a bull compelled an autoist to halt. When the driver sounded the horn as a polite request that the bull step aside, the animal became angry and charged the car.

The driver fled to safety, but the bull charged a second time and knocked itself unconscious. The car was damaged but not seriously.

Hurt by Rabbit

Cedar City, Utah.—Raoul Walsh, motion picture director, suffered serious injury to one eye and cuts about the face when a jackrabbit, blinded by headlight glare, leaped through the windshield of the Walsh automobile.

Cheap Heat.

Water flowing from hot springs near Thermopolis, Wyo., is to be led into specially constructed incubators for hatching chickens, it has been announced. The water remains at a temperature of from 135 to 150 degrees Fahrenheit the year around, and methods have been worked out for cooling it and keeping at the proper heat for brooder purposes, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. It is also planned to use the water in hothouses for the cultivation of plants and vegetables. In one of the largest springs in this district more than 18,000,000 gallons of hot water flow out every 24 hours.

"AS NECESSARY AS BREAD"

Mrs. Skahan's Opinion of Pinkham's Compound

Saugus Centre, Mass.—"I have taken 10 bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and would no more be without a bottle in the house than I would be without bread. It has made a new woman of me. I used to be so cross with my husband when I was suffering that I don't know how he stood me. Now I am cheerful and strong and feel younger than I did ten years ago when my troubles began."—Mrs. John Skahan, 29 Emory St., Saugus Centre, Mass.

HOW TO GO BROKE FARMING

1. Grow only one crop.
2. Keep no livestock.
3. Regard chickens and a garden as nuisances.
4. Take everything from the soil and return nothing.
5. Don't stop gullies or grow cover crops—let the top soil wash away, then you will have "bottom" land.
6. Don't plan your farm operations It's hard work thinking—trust to luck.
7. Regard your woodland as you would a coal mine, cut every tree, sell the timber and wear the cleared land out cultivating it in corn.
8. Hold fast to the idea that the methods of farming employed by your grandfather are good enough for you
9. Be independent—don't join with your neighbors in any form of co operation.
10. Mortgage your farm for every dollar it will stand to buy things you would have the cash to buy if you followed a good system of farming.—Division of Extension, University of Tennessee.

SING
by Anton Romatka

Don't stop to ask the reason why
Of rainy day or cloudy sky,
Of sullen mood, or hidden tears,
Of envy, hatred, sins, and fears;
But throw your little cares away
And often sing and dance and play.
In under- and in over-tone
Voice all the feelings you have known;
And let a lyric cadence roll
From sacred depth within your soul.
In minor and in major key
Sing all your songs of woe or glee,
In measure quick or measure slow
Let all your passions overflow;
And mingle deep your vocal strain
With joy and laughter, tears and pain.
Let all your deep emotions ring
In songs that only you can sing.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

WHEREAS, Default has been made by the mortgagors in the conditions and covenants of that certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Gerhard O. Hanson and Tina Hanson, his wife, mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 21st day of May, 1926, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota on the 3rd day of June, 1926, at eleven o'clock A. M., and duly recorded therein in Book "121" of Mortgages, on page 195 thereof;

AND WHEREAS, Said default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest, each amounting to Sixty-eight Dollars and seventy-five cents ($68.75), which became due and payable on the 21st day of November, 1927, and the 21st day of May, 1928, in accordance with the terms and conditions of said mortgage, which default has continued to this date;

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage and as authorized by law, the Department of Rural Credit, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, the mortgagee and owner and holder of said mortgage, has exercised and does hereby exercise, its option to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole of the loan secured by said mortgage to be due and payable forthwith;

AND WHEREAS, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage, and the loan secured thereby, at the date of this notice, by reason of said election, the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred Fifty-four Dollars and twenty-three cents ($2,154.23), unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from the 21st day of May, 1928, at the rate of five and one-fourth per centum per annum, and One Hundred Thirty-seven Dollars and fifty cents ($137.50) amortized principal and interest, with interest on $68.75 thereof from November 21st, 1927, at seven per centum per annum, and interest on $68.75 thereof from May 21st, 1928, at seven per centum per annum, in all the sum of Two Thousand Three Hundred Fifty-three Dollars and forty-five cents ($2,353.45);

AND WHEREAS, By reason of said default, the said power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situate, lying and being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, to-wit:

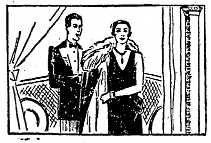
Any Woman Can Look Stylish

By MAE MARTIN



Most stylish-looking women are just "good managers." They know simple ways to make last season's things conform to this season's styles.

Thousands of them have learned how easily they can transform a dress or blouse, or coat by the quick magic of home tinting or dyeing. Anyone can do this successfully with true, fadeless Diamond Dyes. The "know how" is in the dyes. They don't streak or spot like inferior dyes. New, fashionable tints appear like magic right over the out-of-style or faded colors. Only Diamond Dyes produce perfect results. Insist on them and save disappointment.

My new 64-page illustrated book, "Color Craft," gives hundreds of money-saving hints for renewing clothes and draperies. It's Free. Write for it now, to Mae Martin, Dept. E-143, Diamond Dyes, Burlington, Vermont.

Archeological Find.

A Bronze age cemetery, containing many decorated vessels of stone, bronze and clay, and including a tomb which dates from 1600 B. C. has been unearthed at the ancient site of Beth Shemesh, near the modern village of Ain Shems, in Palestine, by the archeological expedition of Haverford college, New York, headed by Dr. Elihu Grant. Doctor Grant indicates that the objects carry the history of the ancient city back another 1,000 years.

Girl at the Top in Health Test

Millions of boys and girls all over the world, thousands of them right here in the West are being restored to health and strength by the purely vegetable tonic and laxative known as California Fig Syrup and endorsed by physicians for over 50 years.

Children need no urging to take it. They love its rich, fruity flavor. Nothing can compete with it as a gentle, but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It gives tone and strength to the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord. It stimulates the appetite, helps digestion.

A Kansas mother, Mrs. Dana Allgire, 610 Monroe St., Topeka, says: "Bonnie B. is absolutely the picture of health, now, with her ruddy cheeks, bright eyes and plump but graceful little body and she stands at the top in every health test.

Much of the credit for her perfect condition is due to California Fig Syrup. We have used it since babyhood to keep her bowels active during colds or any children's ailments and she has always had an easy time with them. She always responds to its gentle urging and is quickly back to normal."

Ask your druggist for California Fig Syrup and look for the word "California" on the carton so you'll always get the genuine.

Human "Bombs."

Target practice with men acting as "bombs" is popular among English aviators. Large targets with bulls, inners and outers, are drawn on the ground, and the object is to drop into the center. When each pilot has attained the position he considers nearest correct, he signals to a companion, equipped with parachute, who immediately leaps clear of the machine and tries to score a bullseye.

Worth Knowing When Winter Cold Comes!

Did you ever hear of a five-hour remedy for colds? There is one, and it really does bring you out of it completely: Even if it's grippe, this method works, only takes longer. Pape's Cold Compound is in tablet form. Pleasant-tasting, but it surely has the "authority!"—Adv.

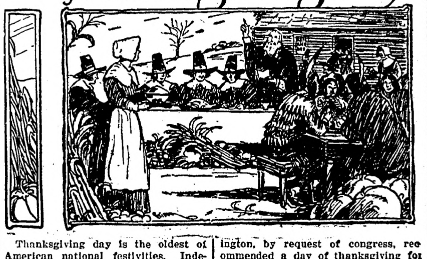
The Story of Thanksgiving Day



Thanksgiving day is the oldest of American national festivities. Independence day, though coeval with and commemorative of our national natal day, boasts only a respectable antiquity of a century and a half, but another century and a half must be added to carry us backward to the historical origin of the day that we have nationally dedicated to prayer and thanksgiving—to the days of bluff Governor Bradford and to the first struggling colony of heroic pilgrims. It was in this cradle of our commonwealth that the observance of a day of thanks was first nurtured on our soil, though its inspiration was brought from lands across the seas and probably threaded human history back to the plains of Palestine when the psalmists of Israel praised the Lord in song for the bounties of earth.

First Thanksgiving.

Benjamin Franklin tells us that, in a time of great despondency among the first settlers of New England, it was proposed in one of their public meetings to proclaim a fast. An aged farmer arose and spoke of their provoking Heaven with their compliments and of the many mercies they had already received and of the many causes they had for thanksgiving. He then made a motion that instead of appointing a day of fasting, they should appoint a day of thanksgiving. To this the assembly agreed.

The first Thanksgiving day was kept amid circumstances most unpropitious and with gaunt famine hovering over the rude and cheerless dwellings of that little colony. The summer of 1621, following the landing at Plymouth, yielded but a scanty harvest and unless speedy supplies came from Europe the sturdy Colonists foresaw that they would be reduced to the point of starvation. Yet, amid such surroundings as these, we learn from the old chronicles that Governor Bradford, "the harvest being gotten in, sent four men out on fowling, so that we might, after a more special manner, rejoice together after we had gathered the fruits of our labors." And thus,

While sickness lurked and death assailed
And foes beset on every hand, the first governor of New England instituted the American Harvest Home and celebrated the first New England Thanksgiving day.

Many "Thankful" Days.

The old Colonial records also tell of the appointment of Thanksgiving days, for various causes, in the Massachusetts Bay colony, in the years 1633, 1634, 1637, 1638 and 1639. In Plymouth colony similar publicly declared observances took place in 1651, 1668, and in 1680, when the tenor of the proclamation seems to indicate that it had then become a settled yearly custom.

The Massachusetts Bay colony was the first to appoint an annual Thanksgiving day by the proclamation of the English governor. During the Revolution, Thanksgiving day became a national American institution, being annually recommended by congress, but after the general thanksgiving for peace, in 1784, there was no national appointment until 1789, when Washington, by request of congress, recommended a day of thanksgiving for the adoption of the Constitution. Washington issued a second proclamation of thanksgiving in 1795, on account of the suppression of insurrection. President Madison, by request of congress, recommended a thanksgiving for peace in 1815, at the conclusion of the War of 1812. But the official recommendation of a day for the giving of thanks was mainly confined to New England, until 1817, after which date it was regularly appointed also by the governor of New York. The Dutch governors of the New Netherlands had proclaimed thanksgiving days in 1644, 1645, 1655 and 1664 and in 1755 and 1760 a day was similarly designated by the English governor of New York.

Annual Proclamations.

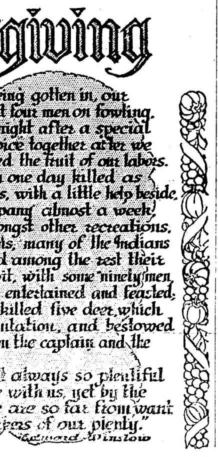
During the Civil war, in 1863 and 1864, President Lincoln issued proclamations recommending annual thanksgivings and since then a proclamation has been issued annually by the President of the United States as well as by the governors of the several states and the mayors of American cities.

Interior of Colonial Home in America's Earliest Days.

Custom has fixed the time for Thanksgiving day as the last Thursday in November, but up to 1864 there was no uniformity as to the date of the observance and Presidents and governors followed no fixed rules in setting a day apart, each state deciding its own Thanksgiving day. Thanksgiving day was long in settling down to its present fixity of day and season. It is on record that one prudent municipality of the old time once postponed the celebration of the day for a week, "in order to get molasses with which to sweeten the pumpkin pies."—Kansas City Times.

Canadian Thanksgiving

Thanksgiving is proclaimed annually in Canada by the governor general. The day is Monday of the week of November 11.

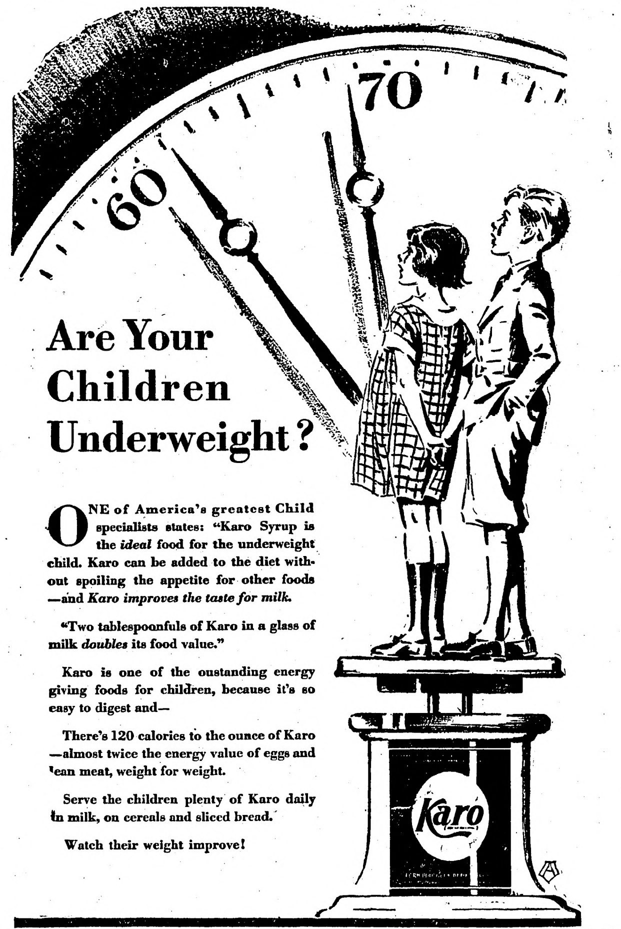


Thanksgiving

Our harvest being gotten in, our governor sent four men on fowling, that so we might after a special manner, rejoice together after we had gathered the fruit of our labors. They four in one day killed as many foul as, with a little help beside, served the company almost a week, at which time, amongst other recreations, we exercised our arms, many of the Indians coming amongst us, and among the rest their greatest king, Massasoit, with some ninety men, whom for three days we entertained and feasted, and they went out and killed five deer, which they brought to the plantation, and bestowed on our governor, and on the captain and the others."

"And although it is not always so plentiful as it was at this time with us, yet by the goodness of God, we are so far from want that we wish you partakers of our plenty."

Edward Winslow



Are Your Children Underweight?

ONE of America's greatest Child specialists states: "Karo Syrup is the ideal food for the underweight child. Karo can be added to the diet without spoiling the appetite for other foods —and Karo improves the taste for milk.

"Two tablespoonfuls of Karo in a glass of milk doubles its food value."

Karo is one of the oustanding energy giving foods for children, because it's so easy to digest and—

There's 120 calories to the ounce of Karo —almost twice the energy value of eggs and lean meat, weight for weight.

Serve the children plenty of Karo daily in milk, on cereals and sliced bread.

"Daddy Longlegs" Long Resident of America

Almost everybody is acquainted with that extraordinary insect called "daddy longlegs," which makes its first annual appearance in the month of May. But not every one knows what eminent scientists have abundantly demonstrated, that this strange little creature, towering high above its fellows on its threadlike stilts, is probably as its name may be thought to imply, a more ancient inhabitant of America than any representative of the human species.

Far back in tertiary times its ancestors lived in great numbers in that part of the continent which we now call Colorado. The fossil remains of these insects show the characteristic features that mark them today, although new species have taken the place of old; for even daddy longlegs knows what development is, and has attained to something that in his view, perhaps, is a kind of civilized existence suitable to the exigencies of life in the Twentieth century.

Mother Battles Mad Wolf.

How a mother saved her children from a mad wolf has been told in reports from Visegard, Bosina. The animal had spread terror throughout the nearby forests by attacking both children and cattle. It killed one child, then attacked the two little ones of a peasant named Tosic. Their screams brought their mother to their rescue, and though unarmed, she grappled with the infuriated beast, which left the children and attacked her, inflicting severe wounds. Tosic then rushed to his wife's aid, and there followed a fierce fight between the wolf and the family. A woodman just then appeared and dispatched the animal with an ax. The Tosics were taken to the nearest Pasteur Institute for treatment.

Music in Politics.

British women politicians have taken to music as an aid to politics. A National Conservative Musical union has been formed, with Mrs. Baldwin, wife of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, as president. The objects of the union include the playing of British music, the awakening of musical interest in the constituencies and the holding of musical competitions. Prizes offered include a $500 national challenge cup, a competition shield and a piano scholarship.

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, To Nellie Arnevik, Alfred B. Anderson and all persons interested in the sale of certain lands belonging to Nellie Arnevik, one of said wards.

The petition of Alfred B. Anderson as guardian of one of the above named Wards, Nellie Arnevik, being duly filled in this court, representing that it is necessary and for the best interests of said estate and of all interested therein that certain lands of said ward Nellie Arnevik described therein be sold, and praying that a license be to him, the said Alfred B. Anderson, granted to sell the same.

Now, therefore, you and each of you are hereby cited and required to show cause if any you have, before this court, at the probate court rooms in the court house, in the city of Warren, County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, on the 15th day of December, 1928, at eleven o'clock A. M. why the prayer of said petition should not be granted.

Witness the Judge of said Court, and the seal of said court, this 17th day of November 1928.

BERNARD B. BRETT,
Judge of said Court.

LESSON XXXXVII

SCIENTIFIC FEEDING: Scientists have studied feeding to learn how much feed and the kind of feed required to make a pound of milk or a pound of meat, and how much feed required for animals to sustain their own bodies.

In their studies they found that all feeds contain three different kinds of substance used in the body for different purposes. One substance termed "protein" is used for building or for making milk or meat. The second substance is termed "carbohydrates" and is used for producing heat, also for building body fat. The third substance is known as "fat" and is used as a lubricant and also for heat.

Different kinds of feeds contain these different kinds of substances in different amounts—some being high and some low. The "protein" is generally the most valuable of the substances and the one most often lacking in the ration. Carbohydrates is generally abundant in all farm grown feeds but has different values in different kinds of feed. Fat in feeds is generally in sufficient amount.

Makes Life Sweeter

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Every year the Pinkham Medicine Company distributes about 30,000,000 booklets from house to house. Mr. Ted Hinzman does this work in Lodi, California. His wife writes: "It was in these little books that I read about so many women being helped by the medicine. I thought I would give it a trial and I can truly say that it has done me good. My neighbors and friends ask me what I am doing to make me look so much better. I tell them that I am taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

The Girl Who Came Back

THE STORY

Influenced by loneliness, without relatives, or real friends, in Chicago, Lolita Forbes, young and pretty, yields to the importunities of Harvey Torrence, with whom she fancies herself in love

"Harvey, you lied to me from the start. You've lied to me every day we've been together. If you lied about one thing, there is no telling about how many other things you lied. I can't stand it—all of the beautiful things that have passed between us—and it's all been nothing but comic opera from the start. Will you take me to the Grantham, or shall I get out and walk?"

"Oh h—l," he said, disgustedly, and started the car. It was but a matter of a few blocks. He stopped the car without a word before the door and she got out immediately.

"Aren't you going to kiss me good by, kid?" he asked her in halting tones, tinged with real emotion. She stopped, looked at him for a moment, her eyes blinded by tears, and in that moment, for the first time she saw him, comically distorted; saw the loudness of his check suit; the assertiveness of his tie, the angle at which his gray fedora hat was pitched, the way the cigarette hung limply from his under lip, the cheap good looks of his weak face; it was as though a mirror had been held up before her and she were somehow seeing herself. Without a word she turned and fled into the foyer.

It was after 2 a. m. Men were not allowed in the hotel, beyond the lobby; but they possessed all corners of the lobby with its subdued lights. They were sitting everywhere with girls who lived in the hotel, talking, laughing loudly. Walking past them, her head in the air, Lolita approached the automatic lift.

"Who is it?" came the sleepy voice of Lolita's friend when she knocked upon her door.

"It's I," said Lolita weakly through the panels. "Lolita. I should like to stay with you tonight, if I may."

"Well, for crying out loud!" Lolita heard her friend say as she snapped on the light and came toward the door.

Harsh light streamed out to meet her from the open door. Gertrude, her friend, who also worked at the Emporium, was anything but prepossessing, with her hair in strings, her eyes starey, and her face covered with cold cream. Lolita, aching for companionship and sympathy, threw herself into her arms.

"What's the big idea?" objected Gertrude in startled surprise.

"Oh, Gert, let me stay with you," Lolita begged. The other girl held her out at arm's length, looking at her sternly; and then, with incredible suddenness she melted, softened. Lolita's head was upon her shoulder and she was crying gorgeously.

"Tell me all about it, kid," Gertrude demanded.

Sparing nothing, Lolita told her the whole story, from the first time that she had seen Harvey Torrence, until their parting that night. The other listened carefully until she had finished.

"Well?" prompted Lolita, when she had come to the end of her tale, and Gertrude gave no sign of having heard, made no comment.

"Yes, very, thanks," said Gertrude slangily. "Wonder why I'm not surprised or excited, or anything? Easy. The story you just told is as much mine as yours. In fact it's a very old story that doesn't belong to anyone; there's nothing original about it."

"But it's new to me," protested Lolita. "What shall I do? It seems as though I'd been asleep for six months, walking in a dream, doing things that I shouldn't have done; and now I'm awake and I see how awful it all was, and I'm terrified. Oh, Gertrude, please tell me; what shall I do? I've only one idea, myself—and somehow I can't do that either; it would kill dad."

"And besides," returned Gertrude, "water's cold as h—l this time of year." Lolita hung her head. It seemed as though this other girl's experience had held so much that nothing, not even secret thoughts, were new to her.

"How'd you like to live here with me awhile?" suggested Gertrude, after a moment; "you'd have the benefit of a 'horrible example' always before you—do you good." She stopped to laugh, but there was no humor in her laugh, Lolita sensed, for she could see that her story had greatly affected the other girl.

"Wouldn't I be a bother?"

"Heck, no. You'd be welcome. All I've got now is my salary from the store, my sweetie pulled out a week ago; if you'll pay half the room rent it will be a lot cheaper for both of us, and then you can have a little money left to do what I'm going to tell you to do in a minute."

Lolita looked about the little room. There were two large, comfortable looking upholstered chairs, a spinet desk, and a thick taupe rug. She could see that the bed folded up during the daytime and was concealed by two French doors which now stood open. A small door next to the French doors stood open and an ironing board protruded from it, fastened to the wall. It was a rather cozy, convenient-looking little room. The entire building had been built especially for girls who worked, along the lines of a new thought in working girls' homes, in that it had nothing of the "institutional" flavor but seemed just like a family hotel. Gertrude watched her as her eyes roved about the room.

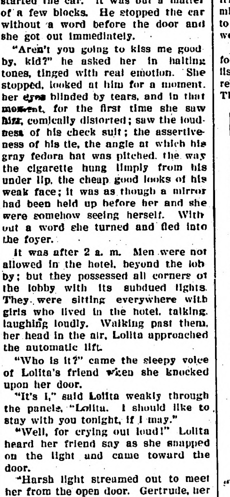
"Like the dump?" she asked at last.

"It's lovely," Lolita conceded wholeheartedly.

"Hunky!" remarked Gertrude cryptically, "it's half yours from now on."

"You said that you were going to tell me something a little while ago," prompted Lolita, anxious to have her friend keep on talking so that her mind might not veer back too sharply to things that cut her as though she were filled with sharp glass.

"Yes," admited Gertrude, "I haven't forgotten—I guess you're ready to listen now. I don't want you ever to repeat anything of what I tell you. The rest of the girls at the store would kid the very life out of me if they heard about it, because lots of us like to pretend we don't care—all that sort of stuff; it's the only defense we've got. What I wanted to tell you is simply this. You stand tonight, right where I stood about ten years ago, with the one difference that perhaps you've got a little more sense—you had better training at home, or something—I can feel a difference in you somehow. I let a rat put it over on me and break my heart, and then like a darned fool I went right ahead and finished myself what he'd only started. In those days, there was some kind of a delusion abroad in the land that when a girl was down she was out. Those days are gone forever—take it from me. Since war, people, somehow, just aren't so narrow. One drink don't make a drunkard. Just because you've made one mistake, don't get the idea that the umpire is going to send you to the bench. You'll have a lot of chances at the plate yet—the important thing is to profit by your experience. You know a curve now when you see it, and you'll be all the more likely now to recognize a straight slow ball when you see it—you'll know how to dodge to keep from being hit by the fast ones. You've played around in the bush league plenty long enough. Make up your mind tonight, not to step down and out, to give up and condemn yourself, but, just make a game out of life from now on. You're at the bottom, in your own estimation, right now; just you start out tomorrow to have the most fun you ever had in your life seeing how high toward the top you can climb. I'll play along with you until you feel as though you could hang on to the ladder again and start climbing . . . why, there isn't really anything you can't do if you make up your mind to it—what say?"



"Take It From One Who's Never Been Able to Pay Her Own Way."

"You really think that after what's happened I can still—"

"Why sure! Who knows anything about it?"

"But if I should ever fall in love with a real man, one who—"

"If you ever fall in love with a real man, he will be one who will be proud enough to listen to your story, without blinking, if he let's you tell it at all. There's very few men couldn't poke a pretty stiff chapter into the book of life themselves if they ever opened up as frankly as a fool woman does when she's honestly in love."

"But it's going to be so hard at first. I'll miss Harvey, somehow, even while I loathe him, and I don't dare go home. Father'd see, instantly, the moment he looked at me, that there was something wrong."

"Easiest way out of that, old girl, is to find something to do every minute you're awake."

"But in the evenings?"

"Yeh, in the evenings by the moonlight," remarked the other bitterly. "But there's a way out of that, too. I suppose you think I got a lot of nerve to be lecturing you like this, when I haven't amounted to anything myself, but maybe I've got all the more right to do it, just because of that. I see the bad bulls I made, and I've also seen how I could have avoided them. Why not go to school in the evenings? Think of all the things you can learn if you want to; why, there's all kinds of schools. There's secretary schools, where they place you in a good job when you graduate, and trade schools; why, I know a girl works in a beauty shop, learned her trade in a year at night school, making around a hundred a week now, eats dinner at the Edgewater Beach every Sunday and pays for it herself. Believe me, when you're in a position to pay your own way, then's when you're sitting pretty in a pretty little city, take it from one who's never been able to pay her own way. Listen, kid." Gertrude's tone changed. "Do you know that you're actually smiling, for the first time since you came in here?" She broke off with a laugh and suddenly pulled the other girl into a standing position upon the floor and started to unfasten her clothes.

A few moments more and the light was off and they were in bed. Somewhere from across the now only faintly rumbling city the chimes on a church struck three measured strokes.

"Three strikes—out!" thought Lolita with a little shiver as she lay beneath the covers, and then, though she ached with lonesomeness and despair, she gritted her teeth together firmly, "but tomorrow another game starts," she told herself.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Man Long Forgotten Gave Name to Mount

Obscurity and fame exist side by side on Mount Robson, 12,972 feet, highest peak in the Canadian Rockies. The mountain itself is widely known for its splendor, for the impression of towering height which it gives, as it stands at the head of the Grand Forks valley. But the origin of its name and the manner of its naming have rested long in the shadows.

The legend came down from a tribe of the Shuswap Indians, who in the early Nineteenth century had worked their way from the west coast into the mountains. They had a small encampment on the banks of the Fraser.

Long ago, they say, when white men were seldom seen in the mountains, a party of these strangers came in over Yellowhead pass from the East and camped close to the river with the mountain high above them. Their horses were poor and thin. They had traveled far.

The newcomers sat long into the twilight, made silent by the closeness of this mighty column of ice and rock that reached into the skies. Never before, they declared, had they come upon anything to compare with it.

In the morning they gathered their horses and prepared to shoe those that needed it. A blacksmith was in the party. As he grasped a hind foot the horse reared and kicked. The blacksmith took the blow in his head and died. His name was Robson.

Early records of the Hudson's Bay company state that there landed in Hudson bay, close to the end of the Eighteenth century, one "Joseph Robson, blacksmith."

Where Moses Got Them

Archeologists think they have found Mount Sinai and the place where Moses got the tablets on which were graven the Ten Commandments. A narrow canyon two miles long leads into an open space a mile across, entirely surrounded by sheer cliffs and precipitous slopes of the mountain top. Here they have found the ruins of a tiny hidden city built after Moses' time and known as Petra. Some of its one-piece buildings, carved out of solid sandstone still remain. One called the "Treasury of Pharaoh," built several centuries before Christ, stands out in deep relief, its pillars and super-structures intact. Petra is believed to have begun about 600 B. C. Moses was there first. — Capper's Weekly.

World Languages.

Two rival world languages have established institutions in Paris, and both are preparing to present their claims to the League of Nations, seeking recognition as the international tongue. The Esperanto institute has been in operation for many years, and now comes the Novial institute to favor the speaking of the Novial language, created by Dr. Otto Jespersen of Heidelberg. The volapuk, Ido, idiome neutral, occidental and latinosineflexible languages have no institutes.

Neal's Mother Has Right Idea

Within a few months there will be no more feverish, bilious, headachy, constipated, pale and puny children. That prophecy would surely come true if every mother could see for herself how quickly, easily, and harmlessly the bowels of babies and children are cleansed, regulated, given tone and strength by a product which has proved its merit and reliability to do what is claimed for it to millions of mothers in over fifty years of steadily increasing use.

As mothers find out from using it how children respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup by growing stronger, sturdier and more active daily they simply have to tell other mothers about it. That's one of the reasons for its overwhelming sales of over four million bottles a year.

A Western mother, Mrs. Neal M. Todd, 1701 West 27th St., Oklahoma City, Okla., says: "When my son, Neal, was three years old he began having constipation. I decided to give him California Fig Syrup and in a few days he was all right and looked fine again. This pleased me so much that I have used Fig Syrup ever since for all his colds or little upset spells. It always stops his trouble quick, strengthens him, makes him eat."

Always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name and see that the carton bears the word "California." Then you'll get the genuine.

Large, Generous Sample of Old Time Remedy Sent Free to Every Reader of This Article

More than forty years ago, in a small way, good old Pastor Koenig began the manufacture of Pastor Koenig's Nervine, a remedy recommended for the relief of nervousness, epilepsy, sleeplessness and kindred ailments. The remedy was made after the formula of old German doctors. The sales were small at first, but soon increased, and another factory was added to meet the increasing demand. Today there are Koenig factories in the old world, and Pastor Koenig's Nervine is not only sold throughout the United States, but in every land and clime.

The manufacturers want every reader of this free offer to try the old remedy at their expense. They will send a large, generous sample to every one who mentions this article.

How many people you know end their colds with Bayer Aspirin! And how often you've heard of its prompt relief of sore throat or tonsilitis. No wonder millions take it for colds, neuralgia, rheumatism; and the aches and pains that go with them. The wonder is that anyone still worries through a winter without these tablets! They relieve quickly, yet have no effect whatever on the heart. Friends have told you Bayer Aspirin is marvelous; doctors have declared it harmless. Every druggist has it, with proven directions. Why not put it to the test?

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

Day Before Christmas; Saved from Poorhouse

"HERE they come," gasped Maria Balcome. "Day before Christmas, and a Balcome goes to the poorhouse!"

Four alighted, saying they'd come a long way. Maria supposed from the county farm, and that they wished to make sure she had no valuables left. Maria had nothing but a bag of potatoes and a bed. The first she kept in the last, so they should not freeze. Courtesy helped her to point out the beauties of the ancient mansion, and mention her ancestor, the builder, Washington's aide.

Her visitors asked questions. How was her health? Vexed, Maria replied, "Well enough, for a poor farm resident."

"What?"

"Have you not come to take me there?"

They stared, they laughed—cried. "We are from the Pacific coast. This house has been acquired by the Balcome Family association and is to be furnished and exhibited. We are empowered to offer you the position of hostess—everything furnished and a salary. There comes the first load of coal. In half an hour the place will be warm from cellar to garret."

"Even to my vegetables," mused the bewildered Maria. But her tenth cousin saw she had a better Christmas dinner than potatoes.—Edith Miniter.

Christmas Morning and Merry Wedding Bells

THE party was over, the children and the other teachers had gone. Lois pushed the low, round tables into the study room ready for Christmas morning.

"I tried to make them happy—they did have a good time in spite of my own heavy heart." She sat down, her head in her arms and cried.

Lois was awakened by a whistled measure of "Oh, Little Town of Bethlehem." The room was flooded with light; arms were around her.

"Can you ever forgive me, dear, for letting myself get mixed up in that scrape last year," asked Jerry?

"Jerry, dear, there was nothing to forgive. I knew you were innocent. It was your going away without a word that hurt." Lois clung to him.

"But I couldn't come to you with suspicion resting on me. I hunted that rascal, Varney, until he's confessed the whole affair. Now I've come to marry you. Are you ready, dear?"

"Yes, I am ready; I have waited a year."

So on Christmas morning Lois and Jerry were married in the primary room where she had taught for years.

And the children, who loved Lois, wished her "much joy" and "Merry Christmas" at the same time.—Anna L. Newsom.

The Grace Period

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

"THE grace period allowed for the payment of your premium will expire on the 13th of April, 192—. In case of nonpayment during this period, THIS POLICY WILL LAPSE—"

Martin Noble regarded the printed slip of paper that had come in his morning mail with an expression of grim amusement. He read it through and his eyes lingered on the words in large black letters across the bottom of the slip:

"IMPORTANT—LAST NOTICE"

"Well, let her lapse," he said half aloud, and let the slip drop into the waste-paper basket at his side. He reached for another letter but did not open it. His eyes were still absently focused on the expanse of gray-blue sky. He recalled unimportant details of the transaction eight years ago when he first took out the life insurance. He was twenty-four years old then and, though his salary was unusually good for a young man of his age, a fifty thousand dollar life insurance policy seemed large. Taking it out at all was, of course, a token of his mental derangement at the time. Payment of the large premiums had been a pleasure at first—going without things for himself so that he might pay them for her. He tried not to think of the girl to whom he had been engaged for one brief year. Then after she had returned the ring and the letters he had gone on with the payments, still thinking vaguely that there might be a reconciliation.

Several times within the eight years he had thought of letting the policy lapse. But each time he had gone on with it.

But now he had honestly forgotten to send in his last premium. Of course, with his present income the payment of it meant no sacrifices, still there were other ways to invest the money, the benefits of which he might reap himself. "Better let it lapse," he muttered again—and then looked up somewhat surprised to see his secretary, Mary Bennet, standing at the other side of the desk.

"Are you ready for dictation?" she suggested rather demurely.

"I hope you noticed the nonpayment notice from the insurance people," she said, searching through the pile of letters.

"It's in the waste-paper basket," said Martin Noble. "I'm going to let it lapse."

"But, Mr. Noble," gasped Mary. "You can't possibly—"

"Why shouldn't I let it lapse if I want to?" he asked, watching the color mount in her cheeks as he looked at her. "I can buy F. P. stock with the premiums—and that will be some good when I want to retire. It isn't as if those Dawson cousins would care about a paltry fifty thousand."

"But—but you might marry," exclaimed Mary.

Martin shook his head sadly and watched Mary's face to see the reaction. He was surprised to realize what enjoyment he got out of the play of expression on Mary's pretty young face. A quick little "Oh" of surprise escaped from Mary's unpainted lips, then she took her accustomed seat at the side of her employer's desk, and precisely opened her note book.

Martin meanwhile stooped and drew the important notice from his waste basket. He passed it mechanically to Mary. "Tell them that owing to a clerical error the payment of the premium was overlooked. Make out the check and leave it with the letter for me to sign." Martin watched for the reaction on Mary's face but Mary was simply looking intently at her notebook.

After an hour of rapid dictation Mary rose to go. She paused at the door.

"I hope, Mr. Noble," she said shyly, "that—that I didn't seem to be intruding in your personal affairs."

Martin looked up and smiled, and surprised himself almost as much as he did Mary when he said, "Let's have luncheon together. It's a depressing sort of day—to lunch alone."

At luncheon Mary had the temerity to ask Martin to come to see her at home some time—she said she thought he might like to meet her brothers. There were two of them in the city college and they knew all sorts of amusing songs and stunts.

That night Martin Noble had a long conference with himself. In the morning when Mary Bennet appeared for his dictation he had difficulty in assuming his usual impersonal manner toward her.

"I'm thinking of making a change in that policy of mine," he said. "You might write and ask them what form is necessary for changing the name of the beneficiary. I don't know a thing about insurance."

"Shall I give them the name of the—beneficiary?" asked Mary, narrowly regarding the long points of her pencils.

"Perhaps I had better get the beneficiary's consent first," said Martin. Mary's blue eyes opened in a sort of childish bewilderment.

"I mean—that I want to marry you—Mary," he said. The pencil dropped from Mary's hand as he took it in his own and drew her to him.

"But don't let's ever talk about the insurance," said Mary.

After the Candles Have Burned Out...

The many little gifts of sentiment that bespeak friendships and happy associations are vital to the spirit of Christmas.

But after the candles have burned out, after ordinary gifts have been laid aside, then the Maytag will more and more reveal itself as the outstanding gift—practical, helpful, a joy for years to come.

Plan together for this practical gift—the Maytag. Let it be the crowning, lasting remembrance of the yuletide.
